THE MAJESTIC

Is now firmly established among the leaders in the manufacturing of high class pictures, as is evidenced by the congratulatory letters received daily.

These letters come unsolicited from the exhibitors throughout the country—exhibitors who appreciate our efforts to improve the quality of the Independent programme.

Miss Dolly Spurr, the owner of the Royal Theatre, Marion, Indiana, sends us the following:

"It looks like Majestic pictures are going to outrival in popularity any make of film we have had yet. May another New Year bring four Majestics a week; I can never get too much of a good thing."

TWO GOOD MAJESTICS A WEEK

SUNDAY, JANUARY 7TH. "TRAINING A HUSBAND"—A fine comedy—a fault-finding husband who temporarily gets the whip hand of his wife and his mother-in-law through the aid of his pretty stenographer, but who is finally put in his properly humble position—a comedy of complications.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12TH, "GOSSIP"—A double exposure comedy, showing exterior and interior scenes at same time—relating the bad effects of gossip—how the story grows as told from one to another and the sure cure for the dreaded evil.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 14th, "HIS FATE'S REHEARSAL"—One of the strongest dramatic pictures ever produced—the husband reaching home after a bad night's carousal and his wife's father, a physician, administers treatment which causes husband to live through a terrible strain of mind—a strong picture—a good moral lesson.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19TH, "NEXT"—A roaring comedy—the lonesome barber, the manicure girl, the nice boy falls in love, thrown out by parents and finally the manicure girl wins parents—a laugh every foot.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21ST, "SPARE THE ROD"—A strong lesson, showing the results of using the whip on children—the temper of the father is finally overcome by the ever loving mother who takes child from home, earns her own living by teaching school and finally shows husband the error of his ways.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26TH, "THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE"—A comedy. Father has a little extra money, hires an automobile, apparently runs over a woman who then proceeds to extract money, piano, furniture and medicine. Father finally driven to poverty until the discovery of farce and deception.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28TH, "A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE"—The widow at home, in love with a young fellow, who partly returns the affection—the return of the widow's daughter from school—the transferring of affection of young fellow from mother to daughter—then the hidden suffering and sacrifice for strong love for her daughter.

Each and every one of the January pictures is first class in every detail—each one with a clever and distinct plot. Each one should be in every Independent Theatre in America, and the only way to secure them is to insist every day that your Exchange gives them to you.

INSTALLATION OF MOVING PICTURE MACHINES IN NEW YORK CITY PUBLIC SCHOOLS A MATTER OF SAFETY AND EXPENSE

An interview was recently obtained by one of our staff from a prominent member of the Board of Education of New York City, whereby the following information was obtained. Said the worthy gentleman: "The installation of moving picture projecting machines into the public schools is merely a question of safety and expense. With regard to the expense, that could be easily overcome, and it lies with the moving picture people to make it possible for the city to undertake the extra expense. When I bought my first bicycle I paid $145 for it, but the last one I bought cost me but $25, and so it will be with the motion picture projecting machine.

"It is only a question of time when the moving picture will be in common use in the public schools. Just as soon as we can be supplied with non-inflammable films and non-combustible machines practically the only obstacle to the use of the moving picture in the classroom will have been overcome, providing the expense be made reasonable. I personally am strongly in favor of teaching science, geography and history by means of the moving picture. Our teachers are departmental teachers. For instance all the classes in history go to the one room to be taught by the same teacher, therefore a projecting machine could be installed in that one room doing service for all the classes, and so on with other subjects."

Already moving pictures have been tried at recreation centers in Brooklyn, resulting in an average attendance of over one thousand people, while the street outside the school buildings was crowded with disappointed ones. Strong letters from clergymen and others were received by the Board of Education approving the innovation. At the suggestion of Dr. Still the films used were of the following classes:

Dramatic, Geographical, Literary and Historical. The following is a list of the films used, and which were secured from the General Film Company:

First week—
(1) Sensational Logging.
(2) Alice's Adventures in Wonderland.
(3) Panama Canal Operations in 1911.
(4) Declaration of Independence.

Second week—
(1) Summer Babies.
(2) To the Aid of Stonewall Jackson.
(3) Dr. Charcot's Trip Towards the South Pole.
(4) Wild Animals in Captivity.

Third week—
(1) Autumn Leaves.
(2) Enoch Arden (3 reels).
(3) Easter Babies.
(4) Napoleon in 1814.

Fourth week—
(1) The Fly Pest.
(2) How Flies Carry Contagion.
(3) Sea Birds in Their Haunts.
(4) Battle Hymns of the Republic.

This is the point in the program at which they had arrived when the fire department interfered, maintaining that the booths used must be protected by asbestos board instead of asbestos cloth.

The following quotation from the statement of plans of Nov. 14, 1911, filed away in the records of the Board of Education will give some idea of the place which is being accorded the moving picture in educational circles.

"The attendance of whole families is to be encouraged, for it is realized that many mothers and fathers cannot be present unless they take their little ones with them. The advantage of the plan will be to furnish a place in the well-lit, comfortable, modern school buildings where the entire family may enjoy a refined entertainment."

Children will not be admitted unless accompanied by their parents or adult friends. Hon. Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., president of the Board of Education, is to be congratulated upon this advance movement inaugurated in the schools, and the Brooklyn people of all faiths and races will rejoice that it is owing to the excellent work of some of its leading citizens that the new work has been successfully accomplished.

Many of our great educators and litterateurs have taken a strong ground in favor of moving pictures. Prof. Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, has pronounced the moving picture to be the highest type of entertainment in the world. Mark Twain, shortly before his death, said: "The modern moving picture show makes one feel brighter, healthier, and happier."

The sentiment contained in the above quotation we will infer is but the beginning of the end—the beginning of the advent of the educational millennium which the future promises to bring forth in the use of the moving picture in the every-day education of the nation's children.

RE THE DONALDSON-MacDONALD ARTICLE BY EDWARD W. MURPHY

By Margaret I. MacDonald

I WAS much interested in the letter of Edward W. Murphy, published in the December 23d issue of this magazine, and commencing at the bottom of column 2, page 7, in which Mr. Leonard Donaldson and myself were, so to speak, hauled over the coals. And I want to say to Mr. Murphy that I admire his straightforwardness in voicing his opinion. I have a great deal of respect for the man who is true to his own convictions. Also, if Mr. Murphy lives up to the high ideals which his words would imply, then we want more of his kind in the motion picture business. Even though I may ask to be allowed to differ with Mr. Murphy on some points, I always was and always will be of the opinion that one of the things that this world must grant us is a right to an opinion of our own. We have, all of us, different viewpoints, and have a right to maintain them. If it is your lot to reside on the hilltop, and mine to reside in the valley, my valley has not to me the picturesqueness lent to your view by the enchantment of distance, nor has your hilltop to you the bold outline of giant proportions raising its noble head against the Western horizon that it has to me. Therefore we must bear with one another and a difference of opinion must not be allowed to break the sympathy of brotherhood, nor to more than momentarily disturb the harmony of universal thought.

I do truly believe, Mr. Murphy, that every picture has some educational value; but still I am willing to blend my thought in a trifle with yours and say that though there may be some educational value in each picture, there may be at the same time a tiny serpent lurking amid the shadows on the screen.

In speaking of life as it is, I fancy Mr. Donaldson referred to the mental attributes and physical system in their natural bent. You, in your reasoning, must mean life as it is to-day, for after all immorality is nothing more or less than the result of generations of abuse and misuse of passions and attributes applied to the human system for other purposes than those for which they have been used. There is nothing in the love passion which is impure. It is as pure in its natural instinct as the carrying of the pollen from blossom to blossom by the busy bee and as purposeful as the falling of the spring rain on the seared winter meadows. You are right with regard to the child being shown pictures in which are vulgar demonstrations of passion. The influence is not good, although I will venture to say that not half a dozen children in a hundred will give more than a passing thought to that portion of the picture.

I am glad to be able to say, feeling the conviction of my words, that the picture with even a trace of immorality is now almost a thing of the past, and where there is a shadow of doubt as to the impression to be made by the picture on the public, the moral is, as a rule, so prominently set forward as to make the strongest impress of the two; environment has the largest part in the molding of the character of the child.

And as I have said many times before, the unhealthy environment of at least one-half of the population of the great cities makes the moving picture theater as an educator and an instigator of good morals more than ever necessary. We must therefore have the children see the pictures, and in order that the moving picture theater be kept a proper and wholesome place of amusement, we need more men of Mr. Murphy's stamp.

I think we are now in a position to shake hands on the subject, Mr. Murphy. And I am sure that we will be glad to hear from you again, as an added opinion always opens up room for new thought.

Rockville, Ind.—Plans are under way for the erection of a new $10,000 theater here. J. M. Johns, F. H. Nichols, H. Maxwell and others are behind the proposition.

PROJECTION

Not all managers study projection as they should. Projection has much to do with making the picture good or otherwise. A poor film well projected is better on the screen than a good film poorly projected, yet managers neglect this important point and allow their projection to drift from bad to worse, or even worst.

The writer has in mind one manager who has made a study of projection. He tried practically every curtain on the market, but none of them suited him. Perhaps his outfit was poor. Anyhow burglars broke into his place and carried away his lantern, several reels and about five hundred slides. When he replaced the lantern he bought the best he could get and the motion picture machine was the latest and the best. Then he began experimenting with his curtain. To-day he has the best projection known to the writer, bar none. He is in a small town, but his projection is better than the large theaters in the city.

His patrons do not realize how good it is. Many of them have never seen anything else. The writer has seen films run in larger theaters and has afterward seen them in this one. There was no comparison. Yet he has performed no miracle. He has merely taken advantage of the excellent apparatus for projection which is provided in numerous places in these days. Further, he has an operator who understands his business. He will not be hurried; for example, if a film breaks he will take his time about repairs, he will not rush, even though a storm of stamping arise.

Any manager can study projection. Perhaps not all would care to go to the extent of inventing a coating for their own curtains, but it would be better for their business if they made a sufficiently careful study to enable them to do this. They would know then whether their machinery was yielding its best. They would know whether their operators were performing their part of the contract. And nothing of this character is too much trouble. It is only by taking infinite pains that anything is accomplished. And you can all afford to take infinite pains to make your theaters successful.

Your audiences will appreciate anything you have to offer which is better than they have been used to seeing. They will return again and again and they will tell all their friends that you have the best pictures, even though you may be showing the same films as the man down the street. The projection, or the way you present them, makes the difference. Yours look well. His look ill. The audience is critical enough to know there is a difference, though they do not understand what makes it. They think your pictures are better, therefore, they patronize you.

If projection were more carefully studied and each manager developed this important feature of his exhibiting as well as he might there would be less complaint about technically imperfect pictures and there would be many more satisfied people.

It must be remembered that the motion picture theater is attracting a better class of people each day. Those who love pictures for their own sakes, not because they tell a love story or illustrate a Western adventure, are going more and more. There is one theater which the writer knows, in a rather small town, which has patrons who go in their automobiles. Often society women make an afternoon at this theater a feature of their social functions.

This would be impossible were it not for the excellence of the pictures, but he has performed no miracle. He has simply taken advantage of the opportunities offered him. Any manager can do the same. But it must be admitted that every manager does not look for these opportunities as assiduously as he might. But of course that is another story which need not be told here.

Success is not a difficult problem. On the contrary it can be secured with the exercise of a little care, and it depends wholly upon the manager whether that care shall be exercised. He alone can determine what is to be done. Therefore, upon him alone depends the success or failure of an enterprise of this character. What managers do in one place can be done in others. Therefore, you are at liberty to go ahead and do business with all the modern improvements and all the possibilities fully developed.

NIAGARA FALLS A "BACK DROP" FOR PICTURE

The Thanhouser offices announce that they have received the first negative produced by their special Niagara Falls company, and will put the reel on the market with a regular release Friday, January 19, under the title of "A Niagara Honeymoon." This is the company that was sent to the Falls with the best plots on hand at the Thanhouser studios, to play them with the "World's Greatest Cataract" as a "back drop." The first release is a comedy drama.

Its locale is all the way from New York to Niagara. Beginning in the railroad depot in the Metropolis the story takes you to every point of the famous Falls. The situations are worked out in the spots that have been snapped by a million "still" cameras. And these spots are "caught" as only a motion camera could catch them. One happy scene has the Horseshoe Falls as a background; another, the American Falls; another, Prospect Point; another, Whirlpool Rapids; another, Goat Island; another, the Suspension Bridge. The reel will cause a sensation in houses numbering lovers of nature amongst the patrons.

NOTES OF INTEREST

The American Film Manufacturing Company, one of our most excellent Independent brotherhood, have issued as a souvenir of the company, a very handsome art calendar. This calendar, which is most artistically gotten up, contains a picture of the Stock Company of the American Film Manufacturing Company. Many of the members of this excellent stock company are well known to the public, and it is always with enthusiasm that they are greeted upon the screen in the excellent Western dramas which they have been giving the public.

The Imp Films Company, 102 West 101st street, New York City, are issuing a set of photographs of the Imp players: King Baggot, William Shay, W. R. Daly, E. J. Le Saint, Ed. Lyons, J. W. Cumpson, H. S. Mack, Farrel Macdonald, Margarita Fischer and Grace Lewis.

The set of ten photographs will be mailed to any address for 50 cents.

THE BRUTE
(Champion)

On Monday, January 22d, Champion will release an exceedingly convincing depiction of the evils of drink. An entire family is made wretched by the horrible debauches of the father, who creates havoc with everything his frenzied hands grasp. Bad as the conditions are, the worst stage is reached when the drink-crazed fiend violently attacks his wife. Eventually the Grim Reaper steps in and absorbs his soul, thus stopping a lowly and brutal career.

It is a powerful sermon and will determinedly check the most fallen subject of drink.

GET POSTED!

The new and much discussed Gem Company is issuing a postcard—a poem of a postcard! On one side is bright, bewitching, pretty, piquant, sunshiny Miss Marion Leonard, and on the other side is ten thousand addresses. That's the number of exhibitors who are going to receive the beautiful souvenir. That's almost the number who have asked for it.

For it all came about in this manner, thus, to wit, namely, viz.: There were so many requests for Miss Leonard's photograph from prospective Gem exhibitors, that the Gem Company decided to heed the demand, and the postcard is the answer.

Or one of them. For the ultimate answer, of course, is Miss Marion Leonard herself, and the first Gem release, which is Sunday, January 21st. We mention the date for the benefit of the three or four who do not already know it.

It seems that Christmas isn't over yet. The real Santa Claus of film-land is to visit us January 21st. And rumor hath it that the exhibitors are hanging up their stockings.

A MAN'S A MAN
(Solax)

In the Solax production of "A Man 's A Man," which is to be released Friday, January 19th, a Jew is represented as a man and not a subject of ridicule. The poor peddler, although he is wronged by a thoughtless and happy-go-lucky mixer, not only forgives but is big enough to protect the offender from mob violence.

The production shows one of the finest managed mob scenes seen on any stage. There are nearly seventy-five people in the mob and they are all good supers, all there for a purpose and strengthen the ensemble. They are led into the Jew's home to lynch a man who has run down a child. The man is in hiding in the Jew's home. Although it is his own child who has been run down, the Jew protects the offender.

There is an interesting counter-plot which brings out strongly the emotional and tensely dramatic values of the entire production.

Chicago, Ill.—The Devon Theater, at 6517 North Clark street, was damaged by fire to the amount of $500.

Milwaukee, Wis.—P. Phillippi and J. Eberhardy are preparing to erect a motion picture theater at Hopkins and Twenty-third streets, at a cost of $7,500.

SCENE FROM "THE CHRISTIAN MARTYRS"
Gaumont Independent release. The Martyred Christians offering final prayer before their exposure to the savage lions in the arena.

A MAN'S A MAN
(Solax)

For centuries the popular impression of the Jew has been gleaned from the material, the unrelenting and the uncompromising figure of Shylock as portrayed by Shakespeare in the "Merchant of Venice." Up to very recently the stage Jew was the only type which furnished universal amusement. Vaudeville has had its own way of showing him and the legitimate has had its way. Burlesque has had still another way, in which it portrayed the unfortunate brethren of Israel. Although each of these branches of amusement apparently attempted to represent the Jew with fidelity, not one of them saw possibilities in showing the Jew in another way than in long whiskers, derby hat down to the ears and hands moving like the fins of a fish.

Within the last few years what has been commonly known as mirth-provoking stake Jew has been gradually disappearing from view and in his place has come the new type of Jew—the American Jew—the Jew who is doing his share in American business, society and politics. No longer are Jews being represented in the old ways, but they are showing him in his new environment, where his manhood, his sentiments and his convictions are not burlesqued, but are idealized.

HALLBERG ECONOMIZER USED WITH ALL MAKES OF MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, the "Economizer Man," reports many sales of the "Hallberg" in combination with all makes of motion picture machines. Among the more recent, a Simplex with Economizer, to Bijou Opera House, Bayonne, N. J.; Motiograph with Economizer to H. J. Northrup, Unadilla, N. Y; a special 70-ampere Economizer to be used in connection with Simplex machine at Empire Theater, Richmond, Va; also spot light, ticket receiver with other theatrical supplies to the new Criterion Theater, Rutherford, N. J.

NESTOR RELEASES

Nestor exhibited during the past week some excellent films. Two exceptionally good subjects (split reel), "The New Clerk" and "The Lost Address," released January

8th. These make an entertaining pair of pictures, they are real good fun and the kind that an audience would enjoy, just clean wholesome fun.

"Tracked Through the Desert," released January 10th, is a fine realistic Western picture and one of the best Western films we have seen.

ANOTHER CRACK IN THE LUBIN BELL

Albert McGovern is no longer with the Lubin forces. This able young director, finishing a two-years' engagement with the Trust's Philadelphia stronghold, is now hard at work in the Powers Duplex Studio, making picture plays that ought to be heard from—no doubt they will.

Mr. McGovern's coming to the Lubin Studio dates back to shortly before that concern's product took its place among the worthy films on the market. His early work signalized the building of the new Lubin Studio, and the productions thereafter made stamp him as one of the master producers of the industry. As an actor he was for a long time a huge film favorite, but his aesthetic atmosphere has been responsible for most of the best bits of productive genius seen in the Lubin films.

Mr. McGovern comes to the Powers Company to take command of an excellent equipment, backed up by a faultless organization. He will stage some pictures now that will even excel his past efforts, and his work is sure to help the Powers Picture Play live up to all that Mr. Powers is claiming it to be—he will put a strong rivet into the proof.

THE SUN MURDERS

The accompanying weird illustration represents the dramatic value of a scientific fact, as utilized by the Powers Duplex Studio staff in a production called "A Mystery," which will be released early in February. Mr. Powers has taken advantage of this production to plant the moving picture one step further in the hearts of the public. This he accomplishes through a unique idea in construction. The story runs along interestingly until the last scene, in which circumstances force one of the characters into a peculiar frame of mind; her next move is conjectural, and just at this point an announcement is flashed which offers to the audience a prize of $500 for the letter that best tells how the heroine should proceed, and why. There is no question that this will make the patrons talk, and Mr. Powers should receive some interesting returns.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

The Power of Publicity—The Trade Paper an Industrial Sine Qua Non

"A good business without advertising is like winking at a girl in the dark," truly wrote an American philosopher, "but advertising and general publicity when directed circumspectly is a sound and profitable investment." To-day publicity, as applied to the motion picture industry, does not only mean an increase in the advertisers' profits, but it has become a sine qua non; an indispensable branch of modern commerce. Like the majority of skilful arts, advertising has its ethical as well as its commercial and exaggerated side. Business ethics are gradually assuming definite shape and are now recognized throughout the most important business circles. The gulf is ever widening between the grossly exaggerated "ad" and the genuine one. This fact is supported by a well-known American authority, whose opinion I quote. "In the fulness of its development," he says, "the trade paper made its position more secure through the betterment of itself. To its trade it became an authority in the lines of merchandise it elected to exploit. In addition, every branch and detail of retail merchandise from stock and bookkeeping system, merchandise displays, advertising, store management, the matter of real cost and profit and a hundred and one other questions of import to the store were handled, illustrated and described in the best way. Men who had spent years as clerks, managers, merchants, buyers and heads of departments and business were induced to align themselves with trade papers devoted to the lines they were familiar with. The trade paper became a store on paper of the most modern, illuminating and progressive type. It dealt in recognized and believable facts. It exploited new ideas from the whole merchandising world; inaugurated competitions of such educational value that the sphere of the retailer grew to be of such importance as to overthrow one of the pet theories of general advertising. That theory, quite diligently practiced, was to force the dealer to sell goods through a public demand for them. (How forcibly this applies to the cinematograph industry!) This one practice erected more "sacred to the memory" mounds in the advertising graveyard than anything else in mind.

"The change was not too sudden," continues one authority. "As the trade paper more and more realized its province and entered into it, its method lost many crudities. One of these which deserved to have never been, was the inane and cloying 'puff.' Its one virtue was the addition of a wide range of polysyllabic superlatives to the vocabulary of the unfortunate scribe condemned to operate this gum—Factory!

"In many quarters where it should not be, this decadent confectionery still emulates Tennyson's brook. Just why, an inscrutable Providence could, but will not, tell. The time for recognition of the value to business and to advertising came to the trade paper at this time. The leaders devised advertising and store service and the planning and carrying out of sales and many other ideas of value to the retailer."

Now the retailer—the exhibitor, in this instance—has grown to depend upon his trade paper. However, the mere buying of the advertised article by the exhibitor has proved to be insufficient. Dependence upon the general advertising alone to achieve sales—in the case of the producer—in sufficient proportion to their results was a broken reed. Something more was needed. This one organization already mentioned divided the subsidiary but important "local features." These consisted, in the case of the exhibitor, of local advertising, circulars and booklets for local distribution and what not; but all of this was cleverly enough connected with the general publicity work—thus forming a perfect and complete scheme or campaign.

Co-operative advertising is more effective than independent action, and advertising in the press, in a trade paper that holds independent views and which gives candid criticism of the goods which it advertises, is a sound commercial investment. The exhibitor, Mr. Producer, is impressed by its systematic, persistent appeal. It has been noted by advanced experts in advertising that the human mind is so constructed and most appreciably influenced by, firstly, novelty; secondly, pictures, and thirdly, repetition. The effect which the motion picture has on the minds of an audience is precisely the same as that which a repeated advertisement in the particular journal closely connected with and devoted to the welfare and interest of the industry in connection with the advertiser's business has.

Enthusiastic advertising is necessary to success, being based upon a keen appreciation of its value, more especially providing the proposition or matter has distinct merit. The mission of the trade journal is to enable mankind to realize that particular trade's fullest possibilities; hence it is journals who undertake to procure all that mass of knowledge and information absolutely essential for the welfare of those intimately connected with a special industry must perforce be an immense medium for the progressive advertiser; whose duty it should be to grant the journal that measure of support that will extend its usefulness.

MAJESTIC FILM COMPANY GOING AHEAD

It seems incumbent upon us to speak again of the excellent work being done by the Majestic Film Company, and it is not too much to say that although it is the most youthful of the Independent firms, it is nevertheless one of the very best. It is especially noticeable that intelligent attention is being given the making of the moving picture from an artistic standpoint. Their photography is of the best, and the subjects chosen are worked out in the pictures with a view to uplifting the masses.

Majestic has a Sunday release, and that release is always found to have been specially prepared, and appropriate to the day—entertaining and containing good moral lessons.

Majestic is offering a number of good comedies to the public, comedies which are comedies, funny, clean and wholesome. All of their January releases are most excellent. "Gossip" to be released Friday, January 12th, is one of the finest lessons we have ever seen of the mischief-making gossip. The Sunday release of January 14th, "His Fate's Rehearsal," is one of the strongest dramas ever presented, containing a wonderful moral lesson. The dramatic work in this production is little short of perfection. Another wonderful drama, equal if not better than the last named, is the release of Sunday, January 28th, "A Mother's Sacrifice." Nothing has been left out of the latter production to make it almost absolutely perfect in its class of strong drama.

Other good releases are January 7th, "Training a Husband," a fine comedy; January 19th, "Next," another excellent comedy; January 21st, "Spare the Rod," which is a lesson to the child-beater, and January 26th, "That Expensive Ride," another fine comedy.

All success to the Majestic Film Company—they are made of the right stuff.

Lao Tze was a Chinaman who died more than a thousand years ago. But his wisdom still lives! He was a wise Chink! Translated, the above bit of brilliant philosophy means:

"Setting the tap-root deep, and making the spreading roots firm, ensure long life to the tree. He who knows how to plant shall not have his plant up-rooted. He who knows how to hold a thing shall not have it taken away."

WISE WORDS!

Make the spreading roots of your business firm, and your business will sprout and spread!

Let GEM be the Root of your Tree of Knowledge!

GEM will not only plant the seed, but it will reap the harvest for you!

"He who knows how to hold a thing shall not have it taken away."

Doesn't that apply to Independent exhibitors? Ponder wise old Lao Tze's advice! He had your business in mind when he scrawled those wisdom-words!

GREAT NORTHERN SPECIAL FEATURE FILM CO.

By Our "Roving Commissioner"

AGAIN the sturdy trunk throws out into the vast area of motion picture commerce a healthy branch of the robust parent energy. This time it is the pioneer of the long feature drama, the Great Northern Film Co., that is thrusting forward in true independent style a child which is to be the quintessence of art and proper business methods in motion-picturedom and feature film distribution.

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Co., which has been really parented by the Great Northern Film Co., is a corporation distinct by itself—distinct and different from the parent company. Again the pioneer spirit comes to the front, for it is the first to enter the field in this capacity. Its mission will be to handle special feature films and to sell state exhibition rights of same to parties interested. Films handled by this company will be safely protected against any infringement by proper compliance with the copyright laws. In brief, the Great Northern Special Feature Film Co. has for its object the exploiting of state exhibition rights of feature films and the supplying to the public exhibitions of dramatic art equal to that supplied by regular theaters, but at a lower price.

Up to date the feature film has in a measure gone begging; it has been somewhat of an outsider—an outsider of great merit. The feature film is educational of necessity,—for is not the dramatic art one of the highest forms of expression?—and under its name are found subjects suitable for school and college use, as well as to the needs of the masses. A reliable corporation for the exclusive handling of such films is not only a much-needed innovation, but is, no doubt, the commencement of a new era in the history of the moving picture.

It is an all-apparent fact that in the near future the moving picture film will be as essential in the school as the text-book; as much in keeping with propriety in the church as the pastor's sermon, and more essential in the entertainment and education of the masses than any other form of entertainment or education. The moving picture in general is, to say the very least, a wholesome entertainer; the feature film not only entertains but, like the pouring of oil on the joints, it does its work without any actual putting forth of energy on the part of the subject; it is a diversion—it lubricates the imagination and educates the mind without any actual effort on the part of that organ.

As if with wings the moving picture is climbing to the very pinnacle of the Temple of Knowledge, there to stand side by side with the printing press, the phonographic record, and all modern invention for the distribution of knowledge. There is no reason to doubt the fact that in the schools of the future the moving picture film and the phonographic record will join hands with the text-book, and that the trio will form the foundation of all modern educational methods.

The old bugbear of educational authorities, the inflammable film, is, we are told, soon to be replaced by the non-inflammable, non-combustible type, therefore the last of the line of obstacles in the pathway of the installation of the moving picture in the schools is almost obliterated. Those will be the days for the equipments of special feature films. That will be a time of harvest for the farseeing individual, and we congratulate the Great Northern

AUGUSTA BLADE

Film Co. on its promptness in stepping into the embrasure.

The new company will take up its quarters in the Lincoln Building, 1 Union Square, New York. All films handled by the Great Northern Special Feature Film Co. will first be subjected to the criticism of the National Board of Censorship before being placed on the market, and the verdict of the Board will in every case be abided by. The films will all be two and three-reel subjects. Business will be in full swing by February 1st. Among the first films to be placed on the market by the company are the following: "A Victim of the Mormons," "A Nihilist Conspiracy," "Through Trials to Victory," and "The Call of a Woman."

It was my good fortune to be allowed a view of the last named subject, which will be one of the first releases of the new company. I have this to say in reference to it—it is a wonderful film. A story of marvelous human interest is told therein—told in a way that would touch the hardest heart—with a moral so prominently set forward as to be capable of fixing its impress upon the most obtuse mind. It is a picture wonderful in preparation, wonderful in action. As is known, the actors and actresses employed by the Great Northern Film Co. are the best that can be obtained in Europe, many being from the Royal Theater, Copenhagen.

The scenes are curtailed always at a point of keenest interest in just such a manner as are the different portions of a serial story—just when the suspense is greatest and the imaginative system is keyed up to the highest, the vision is cut off, leaving the onlooker at a tension of irresistible curiosity.

The principal roles are taken by Augusta Blade and Valdemar Psilander. The first scene is laid in a saloon, the tout ensemble of which is reeking with rowdyism—women behind the bar who interfere in a drunken brawl in which Owen Brown and his friends are participants. Later on Annie Bell, the heroine of the story, is insulted by the companions of Owen Brown; she is rescued by Owen. In consequence of his gallant deed he is invited to Annie's home. Seeing his apparent poverty, and in appreciation of the manly spirit displayed by the young man, she gives him money to buy a suit of clothes. On his second visit she discovers that he is unable to write, and immediately sets about to teach him.

Owen's visits at the home of his teacher and benefactress become more and more frequent. A strong tie of friendship having sprung up between them which gradually merges into a passion. Owen, unable any longer to hold his peace, pours out his tale of love and devotion at the feet of the young woman. His love reciprocated, they are soon installed in a home of their own, Owen still enthralled in the mazes of study, poring over lessons day after day, with the help of his gentle wife.

Once as they are walking and chatting gaily in the heat of a day in mid-summer, Owen is suddenly overcome by sunstroke. Nursed through a trying period of illness, he is at last convalescent but with a lapse of memory. Owing to his loss of memory, his old habits and passions creep back upon him, until one day, in the absence of his wife from the room, he throws aside the wraps with which she has so carefully and tenderly enveloped him, and after consuming the contents of the decanter of liquor which sat on the table beside him, he puts on coat and hat and is soon in his old den with his ne'er-do-well companions.

Horrified at finding her husband gone, on her return Annie, after searching everywhere, at last ends up at the saloon, where she finds Owen sitting at a table drinking. Tearfully she uses every persuasion to entice him away from the saloon, only to be pushed aside, unrecognized by the wandering mind, and rudely thrust from the door by the woman in charge.

rushes to find him, only to discover that the portion of his life history in which she has figured is to him still a blank. She returns to her work broken hearted, and in her grief attempts suicide by swallowing poison, but is restrained by a sister nurse.

Following this is the scene showing Owen being wined and dined and crowned with laurels by a gathering of notables. In the midst of everything he is seized by a violent attack of his old malady. Escorted to the identical hospital in which his wife is doing duty as nurse, he is pronounced insane by the head doctor, and carried by force to a bed and is strapped carefully upon it. Annie is

SCENES FROM "THE CALL OF A WOMAN"

Broken hearted, Annie applies for a position of nurse which she sees advertised for in the paper, and is accepted. In the meantime Owen, whose reason has taken another turn and who, seeing a reward of $5,000 offered for the best novel submitted to a certain publshing house, proceeds to set down the adventures of his life, or at least those of them which he remembers. Laboring untiringly at the manuscript until finished, he at last submits it. The prize is eventually won by Owen.

The following scene shows him installed in luxury in his beautiful new home. Reading the newspaper Annie accidentally comes upon the bit of news treating of the winning of the prize by the successful young author, Owen Brown. Hastily throwing off her nurse's garb, she the nurse allotted him. Recognizing her husband who, having become quieted, has dropped off into a stupor, she quickly unfastens the straps, calls him by name, entreating him to hear her. At last he regains consciousness, and with it the lost link enveloping the chapter of his life with Annie, and like a man awaking from a dream, he clasps his wife in his arms and the stream of life again runs smooth.

This particular film, though possessing such remarkable magnetism, is said not to surpass in interest, subject or quality of photography any of the long list which are already in reserve, awaiting the opening of what is expected to be one of the most successful business ventures that filmdom has yet known.

FRANK WINCH SUES BUFFALO BILL

The Doyen of Press Agents Starts Action for Royalties Due on History He Wrote for Buffalo Bill

Frank Winch is just now puzzling his brains to solve the question whether it is worth while to be in the position of an author or just merely a common garden press agent; that is, so far as the monetary returns are in consideration. It appears from information in our possession that the honors in authorship do not appeal altogether to Frank. He wants some of the things that make for justice and help the wheels go round when rent-day comes, and to put by a little nest-egg in addition. Here is the story as we have it:

Frank Winch, as is well known, has been for some time the press agent for the Buffalo Bill Wild West Show, and knowing of his ability, he was engaged to write the history of the famous Buffalo Bill. He accepted the terms, wrote the history, and 80,000 of the books were sold during last summer. The agreement with Winch is that he should receive 10 cents royalty on every book sold. Some of our mathematicians can figure out how much is due on 80,000 copies. Instead of getting the whole sum, he was offered a portion which was so insignificant that Frank just turned it down, and as a consequence he has not been paid his royalties.

Mr. Frank Winch is conceded to be one of the best agents in the country. He has served the purposes of the Wild West Show to good extent on the "farewell" to showdom of Buffalo Bill. In fact, to our personal knowledge, he has done what no other press agent possibly could do, and the farewell everybody thought was an actual fact.

We understand Buffalo Bill refuses to say farewell, but wants to start another campaign. More of this anon, but it is well known that during his run at Madison Square Garden last year Winch covered himself with glory not only that he set the record for publicity that had never been approached before, but gained the honor for publicity-getting that we question will ever be equalled again.

There may be another story back of this, one that is said to be the real reason for holding back Winch's royalty. It is alleged that he severed his connection with Buffalo Bill to accept a more important position with Barnum & Bailey Show, which comes to Madison Square this coming spring, and means a hard nut to crack if Buffalo Bill is not "farewelled," as the shows will run in the same towns and in close proximity, and it will make the gallant Colonel a laughing stock and make the public very chary about further farewell tours.

OUR WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., Jan. 3.—To have started the new year without the happiness that is supposed to exist in the initial week being general, would have "crimped" little 1912 considerably, so there was a special effort made to make the loyal legion of moving picture fans happy, anyway, and the opening of the new Central Theater, which took place Monday, was just the thing that was necessary.

It has always been a contention of mine that the pictures in many instances did not get a square deal in the way of theaters. Take, for instance, a reel that costs thousands of dollars to procure, one of the big spectacular masterpieces, such as Ambrosia is wont to put out, and show that in some of the "hole-in-the-wall" picture houses that can still be found in many cities, and it don't look right. One might just as well try and produce some of the most successful and high-class plays in cheap burlesque houses, the comparison would be about the same.

When Sidney Nutt and George Walker decided to erect the new Central Theater, they had in mind one thing—making the house ideal and complete in every way, and, believe me, they have done so. It is the finest and most complete picture theater in the South. Everything in it is beautiful. It seats over 600 persons, the floor having a convenient drop, with the swellest stage arrangement one would care to look at. The curtain is rather a novelty in a way, for it has been placed in a shadow bow arrangement, while the proscenium arch acts as the outer frame for the picture. The "throw" is about ninety feet, and the picture is clear as crystal. The good people of Hot Springs did not realize what they were to receive until the management made the announcement that they would give a free show on New Year's Day, to which everyone was invited, and everyone went. The entrance to the theater is on Central avenue, in the very heart of the business district. The lobby is about fifty feet long, prettily decorated, and on both sides of the same, in costly mission frames, have been hung large photographs of the leading moving picture actors and actresses in the various companies. The theater is ideal in every sense of the word. Another novelty that made a great hit was the lights. They are arranged up near the ceiling and are invisible to the audience, who sees the glow but not the light proper. Three great double doors provide ample exits and the aisles are wide enough for three persons to walk in them side by side. One of the great features of the house is the effects produced by Carl Hanson, the trap drummer, who left the Lyric to accept a position with this model theater. Carl is the original imitator and producer of effects, making all of them, and he has a complete "family." A great space in the orchestra pit was reserved for him and his effects, and with Pat Gilliam in the booth, well, Mr. Editor, the new Central Theater demonstrated that as a high-class picture house it is in a class by itself. It is the most complete and, to me, thoroughly satisfactory theater of its kind I have ever been in, and I have watched pictures in a few of them in my travels throughout the good old U. S. A.

There was another opening this week that also attracted considerable attention, and that was the palatial Maurice bathhouse, which cost a fortune to build and which represents the acme of sanitation and hygiene. "Billy" Maurice, an old-time actor and minstrel man, is the head of the institution, and in honor of the event Clement Ucker, Chief Clerk of the Interior Department, Washington, came on to assist in the dedication. The Maurice has been the mecca for the theatrical profession when in Hot Springs, and on New Year's Day, when the baths were opened for the first time in the new house, 1,000 took a dip, which is "going some."

The press agent of the Princess Theater pulled off a real live one during the engagement of the Six Kirksmith Sisters and when the town read the story everyone said: "My, what dear, sweet girls they are."

He told how Gertrude, the prima donna of the act, had received a note from some poor little girl, telling her how her mama loved singing and when the "chee-ild" had gone home after the matinee she told mama, who was poor and sick, about her. If only Gertrude would sing for mama she knew she would get well. Did Gertie warble? Can a duck swim? Gertie and the other five sisters found the little cottage where sickness and poverty had come. They took with them all manner of good things in the way of "eats"; also a violin, and they sang, and mama got well, and they nearly missed the evening show, and the girls refused to talk for publication and the manager smiled and the press agent got "cussed" by the other houses and the story made a big hit—so let 'er go at that.

It is soon time for the managers of the vaudeville circuit, of which the Lyric is one of the houses, to hold their meetings in this city, and it will bring to Hot Springs about 150 of the representative theater men of the Southwest. The sessions will be held in the Lyric Theater, I am informed, and Harry Hale, who secured the convention, will do the honors while here. Harry got this convention by diplomacy that should land him in the consular service. The last meeting was held in Chicago and two towns in Texas and one in Kansas were scrapping for the next meeting place. Harry had enough of the fuss so he stretched his six feet of fine physique, got the chairman's eye and made a speech. Harry isn't much of a public orator, but this time he had W. J. Bryan looking like a rank outsider. He opined that as neither of the cities would give in, and there was no chance for an agreement, what was the matter with selecting Hot Springs as a compromise? When they had that in their "noodles" he pictured in glowing terms the beauties of this bustling "valley of vapors" and moved that the resort in the Ozarks be selected. It went, and Harry packed his grip, took the first train and hiked for home, sweet home, and that is why his colleagues will be here some time during the present month.

The one show that I have been waiting for somes here Friday night and I won't be able to see it. Isn't that "orful?" It is "Get Rich Quick Wallingford." I sure would go, but on that night the local lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose install their new officers, and as I have been honored with election to vice dictator, it's up to me to cancel all other booking and be at the lodge. George Evans and his "Honey Boys" were here and did a great business. The show was immense, too. Social features in police court circles also became interesting during the week, when the dish washer on the Coburn Minstrel car thought that he could lick the entire police force of the city. Before coming to such rash conclusions he filled up on a beverage that wasn't the medicinal waters of this resort, and then he got busy. Also "he got his" and he is still working out a $25 fine on the city chain gang, while the Coburn show is far, far away.

"The Lady in the Baths" and yours truly have both been under the weather the past week and unable to review any of the pictures. Among our New Year's resolutions is a solemn promise to see them in the future, even if we have to be carried to the respective theaters. I managed to see a couple at one of the houses, but they were so positively old and rotten that I wouldn't cast a note of sadness in this letter by telling what I thought of them. Suffice to say the house "fired" the exchange and made a complete switch.

THE F. & E. FILM COMPANY

The Feature and Educational Film Company's plans for 1912 have been given out by the president, Mr. E. Mandelbaum, and already several have been put into execution.

The company will release an average of one special two or three reel subject a month for State rights sale. During the coming summer a factory and studio will be established at Cleveland, where the general offices are now located.

On January 2d, another branch office was opened, this time in Indianapolis. It is in charge of E. H. Brient, a well-known film exchange man. This makes three branch offices: one in Chicago, another in Detroit and Indianapolis. The next one to be opened will be in New York.

Two State rights men were started on the road the first of the year. Jerome Abrams, in charge of the Chicago office, is covering the West and Northwest, while his brother, Ben Abrams, from the Cleveland offices, is traveling through the East and South. C. R. Lundgren has been appointed assistant manager of the Chicago office and he will be in charge while Mr. Abrams is out of the city.

The phenomenal success of the Feature and Educational Film Company's three-reel production "Zigomar," has caused a clamor for booking from exhibitors everywhere, and for the benefit of those who did not know where to secure booking, the company suggests that they write to the general offices at Cleveland and their inquiries will be turned over to the State rights buyers.

The following States have been sold and exhibitors in these States will have an immediate opportunity to obtain booking:

Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Kansas, Missouri, California, Nevada, Oregon and Michigan.

IN THE NORTHERN WOODS

Imp Release of January 12, 1912

The beauty of snow scenes as subjects for the moving picture camera is well brought out in this film, which takes for its theme the treachery of a half-breed, who forms one of a group of logging campers working in Canada.

The half-breed bites the hand that succors him and later attempts to insult his benefactor's wife. Caught redhanded, his life is spared, but he escapes hanging only to fall by the bullet of an indignant member of the camp upon whom the half-breed turns in his rage.

The story deals with some rugged but picturesque phases of Canadian life. The film is replete with the atmosphere of the subject; the villainy of the half-breed; the tenderness and heroism of the wife; the manliness of the logsmen—all this is vividly portrayed.

SYNOPSIS

The good people living in the Solax Community realized that they have cause to make merry and celebrate before the advent of a New Year, because the Almighty had been so fortunate as to guide their bread-winning footsteps in the direction of the happy atmosphere of the Solax Studio, banked together, like the big happy family which they are, and gave expression to their happiness in form of a gift to the immediate cause of their good fortune and sunshine. The scenes present a people full of enthusiasm and good cheer. The plot is not a thick one, but the execution progresses smoothly and with "spirit." The events took the leading figure entirely by surprise and her emotion and her gratitude brought a lump to her throat.

SCENE ONE

The Surprise—Morning

The good people gathered in the Studio and unveiled a pedestal and a bronze figure—a copy from Rodin. The Megaphone then visited the office of The Cause and waylaid her to the Studio Magda Foy, the Solax Kid, revealed the secret and then the Megaphone made things more explicit by expressing the sentiments of the Merrymakers and all concerned. Loud applause. Madame, overcome with the flattering tribute, is unable to speak. Then up spoke Kid Pirate and threatened that she, The Cause, must herself carry the 200-pound statue home. The Villyan then squelched the Pirate and the Chi-i-ld falls into the arms of the Sob-sister. The crowd is dispersed with a club by the Master of Ceremonies.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

What the Cleveland Local No. 1 Is Doing

Mr. Exhibitor: Are you one of us? If not, why not? You need us as badly as we need you, and you cannot afford to "go it alone" any more than we can. Business competition or "personal grievances" should be forgotten at least once a week—every Wednesday, ten to noon, or thereabouts.

Every mercantile and business line is well organized, and the Moving Picture Men of Ohio are forming "close ranks" for their own protection. Single-handed and alone you are at the mercy of every crank, would-be reformer and busybody who sees fit to go after you. Organized you belong to a body of men who possess the power to make and unmake public officials. One slide announcement on the Cleveland picture screens weekly is read by half a million people, and the highest newspaper authority in Cleveland credits the tremendous majority for the recent vote on the Municipal Light Bond issue largely to the bulletins and cartoons used on our screens during the campaign. Are you alive to the fact that we are a power for good in this respect when organized and, invulnerable to attack from inconsistent and dishonest busybodies? If so, do you think it right that others should fight your battles for you, or are you merely careless in the matter? Think it over. We want protection against the introduction of unjust legislation by state representatives at Columbus. We want protection against local interference with our business except where justified. We want uniform Sunday rights to show wherever and whatever legitimate subjects our patrons wish to see. We are out to organize Ohio solid. Your place is neither too large nor too small to be represented on the roster of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, so please let us hear from you at once and save our secretary the trouble of sending you Circular No. 2. Our new quarters are open daily from 9 to 5. We meet weekly—every Wednesday, from ten to noon. Call or write the office for any additional information you may desire as to dues, initiation fee, etc.

Fraternally yours,

Samuel Bullock,
C. W. Christenson,
S. A. Lustig.

Committee

Out-of-town exhibitors are especially invited to register with us. Your League Card will be honored "at sight" by our city members. The benefits of trade acquaintance are mutual.

A FEW days ago, according to news dispatches, a woman recently tried for murder and acquitted was photographed for moving picture reproductions of the scenes enacted at the tragedy. It is further stated that the chief executive of the city near which the film was made told the manufacturers that under no circumstances would he permit the pictures to be exhibited.

In this decision the mayor will receive the commendation of all right-minded persons—and he should and probably will receive the commendations of all right-minded moving picture purveyors as well. Nothing could wreck the picture business sooner than the general exhibition of scenes of such objectional nature. The audiences of these theaters are largely composed of children, and the children are to be protected from films that are calculated to injure their morals, or distort their imaginations.

The unsparing censor, according to an editorial writer, is needed more frequently in the picture theater than in the house of dramatic entertainment, and largely so because of the difference in audiences—the picture theater making its strongest appeal to the young and susceptible.

With such censors as this Western mayor, however, there is little fear that the films of the character in question will be permitted to offend good taste.

* * * *

Some of the foremost educators of the country are considering the advisability of introducing the moving picture in the public schools, especially in the study of history. It is conceded that the modern film has a remarkably attractive power to children, and that, used in the right way, it can be made of inestimable value to them. Of course, the pictures would have to be confined to the facts of the historical subject and devoid of sensationalism, and should be projected by the finest of operators so that the steadiness of the picture would check the howl that the flicker is detrimental to children's eyes.

Dr. J. B. McFetrich, president of the Chicago Board of Education, is quoted as being in favor of the innovation. He says: "The pictures prove of absorbing interest to children. There is no inattention in the schoolroom while the pictures are being shown, and wherever they can be used they will prove of great value."

It might be added, remarks an exchange, that the moving picture could be used to excellent advantage in the Sunday School room and Biblical pictures, carefully true to the story, would attract many children to the churches who do not now attend.

* * * *

Apropos of the above statement, we must emulate Silas Wegg and drop into poetry.

"Father, I am very glad," said little Willie's ma.
"Son wants to go to Sunday School,
To keep him home seems very cruel,
I do not have to jaw.

"On the Seventh Day he's up and dressed
Before the first bell, in his best—Finest boy I ever saw,"
Said little Willie's ma.

Willie's papa: "It ain't the Scriptures—
The Sunday School has moving pictures."

The Picture Philosopher says: "Th' operator's the only indivool thet hed Jack Johnsing bested. An operator kin go an unlimited number ev rounds without gittin' his lights knocked out."

Silent acting is quietly enjoyed because the majority of audiences do not show appreciation of films by boisterous applause. Why do not moving pictures receive applause from their audiences? This is a question the philosophers of pictures are not able to answer. It is not often that the best films receive a hearty "hand" while the same story, produced even by "the ten, twen and thirt," would be sure to receive vociferous appreciation. It has been noticed by a Cleveland Leader writer that in theaters running both pictures and vaudeville that a splendid picture will end silently while so-called teams of "artists" take an encore. Yet, if the audience is questioned, it will say the act is "rotten" and the pictures fine.

It is the opinion of many managers of picture theaters that it is the picture, not the vaudeville, that draws patronage. "We can cut out vaudeville when necessary, but we cannot cut out the pictures," is an oft-repeated assertion. "It is the picture that holds out business and the vaudeville is a big mistake that we have been forced into by some exhibitors trying to outdo their opposition by giving bigger shows."

The enjoyment of the picture seems to be like the acting itself, "silent."

"Does the moving picture theater audience enjoy classical music? It certainly does," was the answer of Miss Martha Dana, musical directress of a Cleveland theater to the query of a reporter the other day. She went on to enumerate many classic pieces suitable to the various classes of films. In Indian pictures she uses Cadman's "Indian Music," in prison scenes the Tomb scene music from "Aida," and for sad or tragic events she says she always slides in minor harmonies. "There is such an array of classic music, operatic selections and instrumental music that can be used beautifully to illustrate the pictures thrown upon the screen that it seems strange moving picture show pianists have not turned to it before now," asserts the musical directress.

The city of Bellefontaine, Ohio, was probably the only municipality in the United States without Christmas entertainments in any of the churches the holiday week just past. Sentiment against the "Santa Claus myth" was so great among influential citizens that the churches were "dark." The moving picture theaters stepped nobly into the breech and showed Christmas reels to houses crowded with delighted and appreciative juveniles. Who says the moving picture theater hasn't a mission all its own?

NOTES OF THE WEEK

FROM THE OBSERVATORY

By G. F. Blaisdell

PRESIDENT TAFT has accepted the honorary presidency of the Modern Historic Records Association. This means much to the association. It means more to the general public. Very probably also it will mean that all the great governmental departments will co-operate with the association in the gathering of important records for the benefit of the people of to-day and the people of to-morrow.

It has been announced by the association that it proposes to take its first important phonographic and vitascopic historic records at the coming national conventions of the two great political parties. The intention is to ask permission from the managers and leaders of both conventions for the installation in the convention halls of the necessary apparatus for the taking of these records, which will be made available as soon as possible for educative purposes in the country's different free lecture systems.

Mention was made in this department last week of the splendid pictures of the Kinemacolor Company. The same program figured in the Christmas evening festivities at the homes of two leading New Yorkers, Mrs. J. P. Morgan and her daughter, Anne, entertained fifty guests with a Kinemacolor program, among the pictures being "Sunset on the Nile" and "Views on Lake Garda, Italy," the latter having special interest for the gathering by reason of the fact that Mrs. Morgan frequently, while abroad, visits this spot. Mrs. Abram S. Hewitt entertained 150 friends with an extensive coronation program.

Mrs. Amelia Mendel, of Indianapolis, widow of the operator who recently was burned to death, has been notified by the Moving Picture Managers' Association that she will receive $10 weekly from the treasury of this local organization as long as she may be in need of the sum. Benevolent citizens have obtained subscriptions to clear the debt of $570 on Mrs. Mendel's home. Mrs. Mendel was left with six children.

Says the Boston Times:

"Will that moving picture plant so soon to be established in the Orient show films of the white man's ways and doings, in like manner, as we are made so realistically aware of the primitiveness and picturesqueness of the members of the dark skinned races? At best, this will be but a fair exchange of favors, and a fair exchange is never robbery."

E. Edwards, of Scranton, Pa., writes the following interesting letter to the New York World:

"Will you kindly tell me whether there is any motion picture company which gives photo-playwrights a square deal? Some of the companies have a scenario editor who abstracts the ideas from the plays received, changes the titles and the incidents slightly, then returns the play to the author. One play was sent to three companies; each scenario editor stole the plot, made slight changes and it is now before the public, and the real author has not a cent for it; also no credit. I suppose there is no redress."

Probably there is no redress. A flagrant case came under the writer's observations last spring. A scenario submitted to one licensed company was held by it for weeks before returning. Almost simultaneous with its final rejection appeared a film practically the same story from another licensed manufacturer, and on the title screen was printed the alleged author's name—one of the best known writers in the United States! Complaint to the producing company elicited a reply from its head to the effect that the stuff came in in the regular way, but no attempt was made nor was any offer made to see if there had been rascality.

Those on the inside of the game say the manufacturers are looking for talent. Maybe. But it is quite probable that not all the stuff submitted gets to the manufacturer's eye.

A number of Indians belonging to a Wild West show are reported as having been thrown into a panic when they witnessed on a moving picture screen representations of themselves taking part in a drama. Venice, Cal., is the locality where the aforesaid fright is said to have taken place.

Perhaps the foregoing incident may explain why so many manufacturers prefer to use bogus Indians instead of the genuine article—fear of frightening the poor red man.

On New Year's Day the American printed this good one from Brockton, Mass.:

"Mrs. William H. Green, of this city, attended a moving picture show and there saw a picture of her husband and Mrs. Cora Wallace, a young divorcee of Abington and Brockton, moving along side by side on the crowded Midway of the Brockton Fair. Mrs. Green obtained a separation.

"She was formerly Miss Elizabeth Coogan, of Bridgewater, and is many years the junior of Mr. Green, who is fifty-seven, and is active in real estate operations in this section and at Nantasket Beach."

The Rev. George P. Taubman, of Kansas City, Mo., takes issue with Rabbi H. H. Mayer, who referred to modern church methods as "Christianity" and its doctrines as "bibioltry," as evidenced by the introduction of motion pictures into church services.

"You must reach the people before you can teach them," says the Rev. Mr. Taubman. "When churches began to print announcements years ago there was a good deal of adverse criticism at first. Folks said it was mercenary and talked of a crisis. Now they don't think anything about it. I hold the church may properly use any legitimate means to attract people within its doors. I wish I could incorporate a good, clean moving picture show in mine for the benefit of the young people especially."

The Rev. Cuthbert Fowler, Canon at St. Luke's, Portland, Me., speaking before the local Civic Club recently, said so many good things they are worth reprinting. Here they are:

"The people who never visit these places and so suppose that they are all bad, make a great mistake. So far as I have seen the moving picture shows in Portland, there is nothing objectionable in them. There are two sides to the question. Moving pictures and vaudeville are two different things. As a rule, vaudeville is not found in the moving picture house.

"Tastes may differ as to the quality of entertainment. There is one kind of vaudeville act that is coarse and vulgar, and cannot help having a bad effect on children. The thing of most importance to my mind is the need of teaching parents that they ought to go with their children, and that while places of public amusement are all right occasionally, they work harm when enjoyed too often. The whole question is a large one and we ought to see parents, pastors and school teachers consulting together for the good of the children."

THANHOUSER FILMS, "DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE"

We have long known that Thanhouser had designs on Robert Louis Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and therefore were not surprised to learn of its scheduling on that producer's list of "Greatest January" releases. The day is Tuesday, January 11. The production is made in a single reel, but the Thanhouser offices announce one, three and eight-sheet lithos for it since it is essentially a feature picture. This "paper" is obtainable at any Sales Company exchange.

The present production of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is not one that is calculated to inspire horror or dread in the spectator. Of course, much appears that will convey emphatically the terrible change that the drug wrought in Stevenson's wonderful character, but the emphasis is made with a finesse that is typical of the New Rochelle manufacturer. The picture well shows how the evil in Jekyll's nature obliviated the good, and will renew attention in the fine problem that Stevenson presents in this famous story.

CHICAGO LETTER

At the meeting of the Exhibitors' Association of Illinois, last week, a great amount of new business was transacted in preparation of the new year. Twenty-five new members were initiated, which makes the entire membership at the present time 315, an increase of 50 per cent during the last six months. Mr. Jones, of the Jones, Lemick & Schaffer combination, was one of the new members initiated. He expressed his pleasure at being a member of the association, and he stated he was very well pleased with it. Among the new business transacted a resolution was passed to recognize the union scale of wages for operators here, and to use a union man in preference of others, providing he was satisfactory. It was also agreed not to run more than three reels of pictures in five cent theaters, and if possible, boost the five cent admission to ten cents. For the benefit of the out-of-town exhibitors I have been requested by Mr. Gilmore to make clear that the Exhibitors' Association of Illinois is not a local organization, but is Branch Number 2 of the Exhibitors' League of America with the national headquarters in Cincinnati, Ohio. Illinois was the second State organization to join the National League, therefore, it was called Branch Number 2. If Iowa was the third State organization to join the National League, it would be called Exhibitors' Association of Iowa, Branch Number 3. There is but one branch of Exhibitors' League of American in each State, and is named the Exhibitors' Association in whatever State it happens to be, and it is Branch Number 6 or 8, providing it was the 6th or 8th State association to join the Exhibitors' League of America. Therefore, the exhibitors in smaller towns cannot organize a local association, and be admitted to the Exhibitors' League of America, but can get in touch with the branch in their State, where they will gladly be admitted. Any exhibitor in Illinois, wishing to become a member of the association can send in his application accompanied by initiation fee of $5.00 to Mr. C. C. Wheeler, at 43d and Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, who is the secretary of the association. They will receive their cards and other matter pertaining to their membership. The dues of the association amount to 75 cts. per month, which is very small in consideration of the benefit derived from it. I hope it is understood by my reader friends that there is but one State association, a branch of the Exhibitors' League of America, and that the business of the entire State is conducted by the State association.

A fad is fast becoming popular, to take moving pictures of children on their birthdays, and other eventful days of their early live, and it will probably no longer be the desire of the coming generation to wish to see themselves as others see them. The most progressive and popular business men in the country are all carrying this novel idea into effect, including Mr. S. Hatch, President of the Illinois Central R. R.; Mr. Harry Childs, of Yellowstone Park; Mr. W. K. Cochrane; also Mr. R. H. Cochrane, of the Cochrane Advertising Agency, and last but not least, Mr. Watterson R. LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Well, we have seen it and it was some picture. When I say "it," I refer to the film of the International Auto Races at Savannah, Georgia, which was taken by the Republic Company. This is undoubtedly the best sporting picture that has been produced in many a day, and it proved to be a big drawing card at the "College." In addition to this feature, the program included Rex's "Logging Industry," which is a fine educational subject, and "The Lady From the Sea," by Thanhouser, was a high-class production in every respect.

Mr. H. H. Wellinbrink opened his new house, The Pico Grand, at 1408 Pico street, last Monday night. This is one of the largest surburban theaters in the city, having a seating capacity of 650. Four reels of Trust pictures are shown; the admission charged is ten and fifteen cents. Mr. Wellinbrink's chief operator, Mr. Roy Robbins, has been transferred from the Central Theater to take charge of the new house.

The society vaudeville show, which was given at the Auditorium last week, was a success in every way. The main feature of the show was Burr McIntosh and his minstrels and they certainly made a hit. The entire receipts were turned over to charity for Christmas work. Various other entertainments were given by different charitable organizations and the poor and needy of Los Angeles are well looked after this year.

As the first of the year is only a few days off, we are beginning to look forward with much pleasure for those "Gaumonts" which it is understood we will receive about that time, and as all the exhibitors say they are going to get the first release, it looks as if it is going to take the combined efforts of Fred Dawes and Charles Morley to quiet some troublesome individual at Miles Bros. Exchange.

Mr. Woodley, of the Optic, has equipped his Mexican orchestra with bright new uniforms and they certainly make a fine showing. Majestic's latest release, "Little Red Riding Hood," was the attraction at the Optic this week and it was immense. "His First Monocle," by Great Northern, was a scream. Power's "The Little Chaperon," was also pleasing and the scenic views of Genoa, on the same reel, were especially good.

Messrs. Howell and Skinner, of the Lyric, have received a new special ground half-size lens, and it is giving the best of results. During Christmas week, the lobby of the Lyric was most beautifully decorated. A novel feature, that drew much attention to this house, was a large Christmas tree in the lobby, which was illuminated with myriads of tiny colored electric lights.

The Kinemocolor Company continues to draw many people to their new house. As many scenic and educational subjects are shown, the school children are attending in large numbers, and the pictures are receiving much favorable comment.

An ordinance was passed by the city council last July which made it unlawful for picture theaters, penny arcades and other places of amusement to use electric organs or automatic orchestras that could be heard in the street. We knew that it had been passed but as nothing was done at the time it had long been forgotten. Now, on Thursday, December 21st, the ordinance was enforced and Clune's Fifth and Main street house, the Banner at Fifth and Main streets, and the National, on Main between Fourth and Fifth streets, were all charged with violating the above ordinance. It is the plan of the city prosecuting attorney to make a test case of these three houses and the exhibitors are prepared to put up a strenuous fight, for nearly every five cent house in the city uses these automatic instruments.

The various owners of the penny arcades will assist the show men in the fight, and it is sure to be a hard one. The case will come up on Tuesday, December 26th.

Mr. Bert. L. Lustig's new house, which is being erected on Main street between Third and Fourth streets, is very nearly completed and the opening date set by Mr. Lustig is January 1st. This theater, though it will seat only 275, will be one of the prettiest and most up-to-date houses in the city and will be known as the Rex. The question of film service has not been settled, but as Mr. Lustig uses Independent pictures in the National he will probably use the same in the new house.

The Vitagraph Company are now located in Santa Monica, where a large studio is being built. This makes seven companies now producing pictures in Los Angeles, namely: the Bison, Nestor, Selig, Vitagraph, Pathe, Kalem and Biograph companies. Southern California is in truth the mecca of the producers. PHIL. WHITMAN.

REPUBLIC INCREASES THEIR SARANAC COMPANY

With a company of eleven performers, fourteen Alaskan dogs, four trained wolves and the greatest facilities in the world for producing wonderful Arctic pictures, the Republic Film Company, living up to its reputation of always improving, has added several prominent moving picture performers to their splendid company.

Assistant Manager Bernstein with ten people, occupying a special Pullman, left for Saranac Lake on January 1st, on the 7:10 train. These people are to be added to the already splendid aggregation of players who are making "Reps."

By special arrangement with the Hotel St. Regis, the entire second floor will be given over to the Republican Film Company for their performers.

The company consists of the following people: Directors, William Davis, Frank McGlynn; scenario editor, S. H. Starr; secretary and treasurer, H. Harvey; performers, Arthur Morrison, E. J. Brady, J. E. Casey, H. M. Wainwright, William Cooper, W. J. Moody, H. Boone, F. Perks, H. Frushman, J. S. Houston, T. M. Trenton, Miss Dorothy Arnold, Miss Lois Howard, Miss Grace Cunard, Miss Mary Charleston, Miss Marien Le Brice, Mrs. William Cooper.

The Imp Films Company's California party departed for Los Angeles on Saturday, December 30th. The director in charge is Francis J. Grandon and the company includes Margarita Fischer, Harry Pollard, Ed. Lyons and E. J. Le Saint.

AMERICAN TENDERS BANQUET TO EMPLOYEES

On Wednesday, December 27th, the employees from all but the producing department of the American Film Manufacturing Company, met at a banquet tendered them by the company. There were about sixty, all told, and many were the regrets expressed that the Producing Company in El Cajon Valley, Southern California, could not be present.

As all departments of the American are thoroughly systematized, President Hutchinson, who presided, called, in turn, upon various department heads for short talks. The policy of the American was thoroughly discussed and plans made for 1912. All employees were asked to give their opinion on the work and to work in harmony. President S. S. Hutchinson, after the courses had been cleared away, rapped for order.

"We have come together to-night," said Mr. Hutchinson, "for the purpose of getting better acquainted among ourselves and for the purpose of promoting a better spirit, founded on mutual regard and an understanding of the principles on which the American stands. This is the first annual banquet. We are really celebrating our first year in business. The management of the American Film Manufacturing Company is planning another banquet and house-warming at the opening of our new factory, which, it is predicted, will eclipse all previous efforts in this line.

"It was only a few years ago that the motion picture business was looked upon with something akin to contempt by other so-called legitimate businesses. The progress made has been phenomenal. We can now take a pride in our vocation and the fact that we have established ourselves on a high plane in the business world. We are educators, if you please. Press and pulpit have arisen in favor of the motion picture. Its pedagogical powers are becoming recognized among educated men and women. It is only a short step from our present position to that of the public school; and surely you will admit there cannot be a nobler kind of work.

"As I said before, it is only a little over a year ago that this company was formed. How much progress we have made during that period is best attested by the fact that we are to-day manufacturing a brand of pictures selling among the best in this and foreign countries. Our London and European branches have outstripped our most sanguine hopes. The popularity of our productions there is marvelous and the wonder of the trade. Our sales in Europe to-day, including all American and European makes are among the first ten, and considerably toward the front of that first ten.

"We are anxious for each and every member of this organization, whether a part of the office, factory or producing departments, to appreciate the fact that we are all working toward a common end for a common purpose. We want to make American films not only the best in the Independent ranks, but without peer among all motion picture manufacturers."

Mr. R. R. Nehls was then introduced by President Hutchinson. He said in part:

"In my opinion, the purpose of this dinner is not only to get better acquainted among ourselves, but to promote a better understanding among the various departments. It is up to the laboratory force to put forth its very best efforts on all American productions. The office is dependent on the work of the laboratory and must assume all responsibility for carelessness on the part of the laboratory force. After all, a substantial business can only be built on merit, and merit in the motion picture business is largely a matter of much care and attention to detail."

Mr. J. R. Freuler, Secretary and Treasurer of the American and head of the Western Film Exchange of Milwaukee, was then called upon. Mr. Freuler told a number of excellent stories in his inimitable way and one of them, centering about his own advent into the motion picture business, was relished by his audience. The genial and smiling Mr. Freuler was one of the most popular figures in the evening's entertainment, and those of the American force who know him, were glad that he could be present and those who were not acquainted with Mr. Freuler, were equally glad of the opportunity to make his acquaintance.

Mr. O. F. Doud, who has charge of the publicity department, was next introduced. Mr. Doud touched on the new advertising policy of the American for 1912 and the success thus far. Then followed a general program of amusement and a general good time was had, the members of the staff and employees furnished a quality of entertainment not to be excelled by any professionals. Everybody enjoyed themselves thoroughly and the success of the occasion has made sure frequent repetitions of its kind.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The exhibition of the actual scenes of the "rush hour" in a local newspaper office recently shown at the Times banquet was the first of its kind in this city. The workings of the newspaper have been caught before by the animated camera, but the placing of the motion picture camera in the news and press rooms of a home daily, and catching things just as they happened in the final rush for the evening issue of the Washington Times was something of a novelty. The greatest fun came when these same editors, reporters, copy-boys, printers, etc., saw themselves as the camera saw them on the screen at the banquet. This was the work of the Feature Film Company, and was a very creditable film. Another camera feature of the dinner was a series of cartoon slides of the various members of the Times staff, with a characteristic line about each. With the addition of a little music, the pictures formed the entertainment of the evening, which was thoroughly enjoyed and highly mended.

For some time past a few of the theaters here have been advertising and exhibiting four, five and six reels at a show. To the person who wants to get the most for his money (and we are all built on that pattern) this is sufficient to pass by the three-reel house and go to the one that has more. With the exception of one or two pictures, the films are junk, and the people leave these houses dissatisfied. Often they wished they had gone elsewhere, where they knew a good show is presented, but the nickel for that day is gone and the better man will have to wait. In order to eliminate this condition and with the best interests of the public and the industry in view, a movement is on foot, headed by Tom Moore and other leading exhibitors, to combine and pass a resolution to exhibit no more than three reels at any show, and possibly two reels, if conditions warrant this reduction. In this manner the best shows, the newest pictures, the most up-to-date managers, and the most expensive service will receive public patronage and the unsatisfactory junk will be taken off the Washington circuit.

New electric lighting systems have been installed in the Virginia and the Princess, in which the bulbs are hidden and the light thrown toward the ceiling. In this way the theaters are given a subdued illumination during the entire show without interfering with the screen. The "dark" theater has almost passed in Washington, and it is possible that the few remaining in these ranks will soon realize the necessity and advantage to patrons and box-office receipts of proper lighting in their houses.

Manager Notes of The Empress has exercised his charity by giving away at his theater Red Cross Christmas stamps during the entire week previous to this festival. The proceeds of these, which have been given to the Red Cross, amounted to a goodly sum. About 20,000 stamps were thus distributed to patrons.

Several of the moving picture theaters have instituted themselves agencies for the sale of Red Cross stamps and have thus helped considerably this noble cause. It has been an opportune reminder of the sufferings of others when indulging in a pleasure. The showing of the "Awakening of John Bond" has no doubt awakened others to a charitable spirit towards the Red Cross work.

"The Raising of the Maine," together with several other naval reels and the visit of Admiral Togo to America have had a week's run at the Belasco, with prices of 25 and 50 cents. There has been much disappointment expressed in these pictures, as the photographic art is not up to the standard in some places now presented and expected from the moving picture manufacturers. The series of slides of prominent officials at the time of the Spanish-American War exhibited before the reels pertaining to the raising of the Maine were scarcely worthy of a schoolroom show. The great engineering work being done in the Havana harbor is strongly impressed upon the public by these pictures, and many interesting facts are revealed. While the difficulty of securing pictures under such circumstances is fully appreciated, the film is unnecessarily lengthened out with repetitions of scenes. Mr. Theodore Hardy, the lecturer, spoke with a clear enunciation the explanatory remarks necessary for the best understanding of the pictures.

Several moving picture managers are co-operating with Rev. Zed. Copp in his Sunshine City Temple work, offering their theaters for afternoon and evening services. Among these are the Royal, Princess and Scenic. Since these are located in different parts of the city, this work in the cause of religion is being extended.

The Casino, one of our small vaudeville houses, has inaugurated a fifteen-minute lecture, illustrated with beautiful slides and motion pictures, as a part of the Sunday program. The speaker is Mr. Theodore Hardy, a man of wide stage experience as an actor and lecturer. Quite recently his remarks accompanying the presentation of Dante's Inferno at the Majestic received high commendation, as his entire text was composed of extracts from this great poem. This little lecture at the Casino has been well received, the present subject being "Yellowstone Park."

Manager Moore of the Plaza is issuing a neat souvenir in the form of a pretty post card of Little Mary, who is appearing every Sunday at this theater. In her particular line this talented actress is certainly queen—at least, this is the title given her in Washington.

The Christmas spirit is shown at many of the theaters in decorations and displays. Evergreens and bells are gracefully festooned, while the Virginia has Santa Claus himself heralding its program and the Plaza has all available space in the lobby covered with three large snow scenes suggestive of the season and a tree trimmed with colored lights. The Cosmos is quite elaborate in its display. The leader has its side columns hidden with Christmas trees surmounted with the head of Santa Claus, while the gallery over the lobby is brilliantly lighted and festooned.

J. Boyd Dexter is now managing the Mt. Vernon.

During the recent presentation at the Empress of the reels of the War with Tripoli the officials of the Turkish legation were in attendance and greatly praised the films. So much were these clamored for that Manager Notes made a return engagement of these reels, when they were greeted with great enthusiasm.

What might have been a serious fire in the Washington Film Exchange was thoughtfully prevented by the almost heroic act of Edward Ballson, an employee of this office. It was no cigarette or carelessness (for this exchange is very careful about such things) but combustion that caused the fire. Ballson picked up the flaming films and was able to carry them to the stairway entering upon the street before they did any damage to the offices. At this point it was impossible to hold them longer, and they were dropped on the landing, causing a charring of the woodwork and side wall of the hallway. The loss to the Exchange was three reels, but every one is thanking their lucky stars and stripes that they had such a lucky escape.

FATHERS AND SONS

Champion Release, January 15

Oliver Byron, a wealthy merchant, has only one son, Dowd Byron, whom he dotes upon. But the father is one of those stern, spartan-like men, who will brook no shortcomings in their offspring. Dowd is employed in his father's counting-room, and one day he succumbs to temptation and pilfers the strong box. The father detects him in the act and relentlessly hands him over to justice. This is a heart-gripping scene.

Now we come to the home of the Wilson Roberts, and here we get a glimpse of an American middle-class family at its best. The elder Roberts is a bookkeeper, but unemployed when we first meet him. Young Roberts is starting on a journey to take up with a very lucrative offer. His parting from his parents and sisters is one of the most affecting of scenes. A little later the father obtains a position as bookkeeper in the counting-house of Oliver Byron —the position made vacant by the absence of Byron's son.

Byron grows to like his bookkeeper immensely, and one Christmas day he accepts his invitation to dine with him at his home. That same day Robert's son comes into his father's office—what a joyous meeting it is—and is introduced to Byron, the employer. Byron is overcome, for he is overwhelmed by the thought of being without a son! He is alone and miserable.

At the Roberts home the table is spread with all the good things of the season. The father enters. Then into the house, surreptitiously, the son brings a companion, a poor, forlorn wretch, and hies him to his room for a change of raiment. Now Byron arrives and is seated at the place of honor. Grace is being said, the son and his new-found friend having just taken their seats, when suddenly Byron's eyes fall on the face of the stranger. Great God! It is his own son, whom he has cast off.

A frenzy takes possession of him and he heaps denunciations upon his son; but Roberts, his host, pleads with him, and just then the baby girl puts out her little hands to the obdurate parent and adds her pleadings. The heart of the father melts the tears well from his eyes, and his arms clasp around his only begotten son, who, in humble supplication, had cast himself at his feet.

A TALE OF THE SNOW

Champion Release, January 17

Alice Mason was as pretty a lass as could be found in the Northwest, and albeit her mother was sour and shrewish, she begot her attractiveness from her father, big, bluff, good-natured Jerrold Mason. Upon Alice Mason, Walter Burk, big of frame and handsome, had long cast sheepish eyes. This was to the liking of her mother, who had long wanted her married off and away, but Alice had not given it a thought. So, one day, when Walter, presuming on his good standing with the old lady, caught hold of Alice and kissed her, he wasn't prepared for the resounding smack across the mouth bestowed by Alice. He, maddened for the moment, then felt ashamed and asked her pardon, and left downhearted.

By a mischance blow, Jerrold Mason cut an ugly gash in his foot while chopping a tree, knee deep in the snow. Greatly in pain, he started for home with great difficulty, pausing ever and anon to cry, "Help! Help!" It came to the ears of his wife and daughter, and they bravely set out to find him, exhausted, and drag him to the cabin. Then Alice ran for assistance, the assistance of Walter Burk; but the poor girl sank exhausted in a deep gully, to which kind Providence directed the footsteps of Walter.

She was carried by him safely to his cabin to recuperate, when a greater calamity overtook them. A mountain of snow overwhelmed the cabin. Through this snow Walter started at once to tunnel, Alice bravely and resolutely coming to his assistance. (This is a most remarkable scene of what was a stern reality.) At last sunlight burst through upon their efforts and they went forth to continue the journey, knitted closer together by the bonds wrought in their common danger.

The father was suffering on his cot, administered to by his faithful wife, whose tongue, after all, was her only fault. But he cried in his agony for his daughter, while the mother also cast anxious glances toward the door. At last both watchers were rewarded as Alice burst in and threw her arms around the neck of her father, which brightened him up amazingly. Walter kneeled and examined the injured limb, and Alice, kneeling also, unconsciously encircled Walter's neck with her arm; the father smiling approvingly. For the picture he beheld was pretty indeed.

THE GANGFIGHTER

Reliance Release, January 10

RELIANCE.

A rough, overbearing leader of a city gang loses his prestige by rescuing a pretty little mission worker from the insults and badgering of his fellow gangsters. The rival for the gang leadership makes much of it and plays upon the feelings of the gang to the extent of causing a revolt against him. The leader tries to forget the girl, but he is gradually won over by her and becomes a regular attendant at the mission. His excuse to himself is that she needs protection, and he walks home with her most every night. The rival hears of it and takes the gang down to the mission one night to prove him a backslider. They find him there alone with the girl just starting for her home. They jeer at him and insult him, but she prevents his fighting. He finds he is deposed and goes to work on the docks, where he speedily gets to be foreman. Hearing of the chaos in his old district before the coming election, he goes back one night to get back his leadership, but the gang "get him" and the little mission worker finds him beaten up and takes him home. That breaks the last link between himself and the gang and he turns to his work —and the girl.

THE QUARREL
Reliance Release, January 13

The husband, wife and best man are dining together in honor of the first anniversary of the wedding. The two men imbibe a bit too much of the champagne and the husband and wife leave the restaurant. The best man sits alone bemoaning the fact that everybody is happily married but himself. As he gets up to go he finds the wife's bracelet and decides to go to their home and return it. In the meantime the couple have arrived home and have quarreled over the husband's intoxicated condition. He goes to his room to pack up and she, thinking she can stand it no longer, is writing a note that she intends to end it all. The best man arrives unobserved and looking into the husband's room is startled at his preparations for a hurried departure. Hearing sobbing in the next room he tiptoes there and finds the wife on her knees before the couch at the far end of the room sobbing. He slips in without being heard and reads the note. Realizing the situation, he sobers up and hits upon an idea for reconciling them. He puts his handkerchief over his face and seizing a silver brush, handle before him, he shouts "hands up." The wife thinks it is a burglar and screams. The husband thinking her screams are but a ruse, goes on packing. The best man, wondering why the husband does not put in an appearance, goes through all sorts of diabolical actions to make the wife continue her screams. At last the husband rushes in and takes his wife in his arms to protect her, telling the burglar to do his worst. When the best man sees that the couple are so busy with their reconciliation that even a burglar is forgotten he takes off his mask and makes his errand known, then quickly leaves.

THE WINNING OF LA MESA
American Release, January 8

The little cow-town of La Mesa was controlled by the gambler saloonkeeper. Aided by his faithful gunman, the cowpunchers coming in off the range were fleeced of their earnings and those that voiced their objections to the methods of the house were dealt with by the notorious gunman.

To add to the attractiveness of his place, the gambler employed Peggy, the waif of La Mesa, to act as barmaid, and the boys flocked to his place to exchange greetings with the girl. Her winsome personality was a magnet that held them until, fleeced of their wages, they were kicked out by the gunman.

It's a Streak of Good Luck
"THE THUNDERBOLT"
Three Reels Coming Soon

In the course of time both Tex Garvin, the gambler, and Bill Jones, the gunman, were in love with Peggy, and jealousy bade fair to break the business relations between them.

Matters were in this state when a young minister with his mother and sister took up their abode in the town. The minister's sister was a revelation to the neglected barmaid, and she secretly resolved to become more like her, and when the minister's sister was insulted in front of the saloon, Peggy put up a fight to protect her. The gunman turned his unwelcome attentions to Peggy, amid the shouts and geers of the assembled cowboys. The minister hearing the commotion hurried to the spot, and being a believer in physical as well as moral strength promptly knocked her assailant down and took away his gun.

Later when Peggy visited his sister, he asked her if she would like to make her home with them, and the happy girl accepted the offer with eagerness. Returning to the saloon, she gathered her few belongings and made her announcement. The cowboys all cheer her and accompany her to the minister's home, where they give three cheers for him and agree to join his church.

Left in the saloon alone, the gambler sees the beginning of the end of his supremacy in La Mesa. Peggy, the magnet of his place, in the church would have the same drawing power over the men who liked the happy-go-lucky lass. When his gunman enters the saloon the old gambler announces that one of them must make away with the man who has won the girl and all the boys from the gambling hell. They cut cards to see who shall do the deed, and it falls on old Tex Garvin himself. Bill taunts him and he flies into a rage. When he attempts to draw his gun, Bill fires and kills the old man. He nerves himself with liquor and rushes to the minister's home. He finds Peggy in the yard and she hurries to warn the minister of his danger. Regardless of her pleading, the minister determines to face the drunken, dangerous man. Peggy, who knows Bill's desperate character, picks up the gun that the minister had wrested from him in the previous encounter and follows. When Bill attempts to carry out his murderous intentions, Peggy fires and saves the minister who had befriended her.

THE LOCKET
American Release, January 11

Because he loved the widow of his old classmate, George Hughes managed to give her a house. But because he was a gambler, a follower of the goddess of chance, she feared to accept his kindly advances. One day while at her cottage Hughes is attracted by a locket attached to a chain around her son's neck. He offers to buy it from the boy, knowing that the locket contained a picture of his mother, but the lad refused to part with it. When he returns to his own house he writes a proposal to the widow, and in her reply, refusing his offer, he learns that she fears his influence on her boy in regard to gambling.

She leaves the cottage and goes out of his life. Crushed by disappointment the gambler loses his grip and steadily goes downward until at the end of two years he is a derelict without home or friends.

One morning he awakens in a Western town. Pushing back the door of the freight car that had brought him into the town, he shambles up the street to beg a drink of the first friendly hand. He meets with rebuff until a manly young fellow comes along and offers him a couple of coins. In extracting the money from his pocket he drops the locket, and the derelict picks it up and recognizes the son of his old sweetheart, grown to manhood.

But the lad had fallen in with evil companions and was a frequent visitor of the saloon in the company of another ranch foreman, who as his unsuccessful rival in love wished to encompass his ruin. Knowing the lad is desirous of obtaining more money in order to wed the girl, he tells him of a system in playing poker that is sure to win. Knowing that he has the pay check for the ranch hands he waits until the lad cashes it and then steers him against a brace game. He loses the entire amount and disgrace and ruin stare him in the face. He hurries to his home and the mother realizes that the fate she feared has overtaken her boy. His sweetheart assists the mother with the house and the distracted boy rushes out into the night. The old derelict, who had watched the game, determines to try to win it back for the son of his old sweetheart. With the coins given him by the boy he enters into the game and puts skill against skill, trick against trick, bluff against bluff until he has recovered more than the boy lost. When he cashes in the evil foreman has to be restrained from assault and his own Mexican partner.

Learning from the assembled cowboys where the lad lives, he hurries with the money. But he finds him before the home is reached. Stunned by his losses the boy is about to take his own life. Slowly the gun leaves the holster and is turned toward his temple. Then the hand of the derelict grasps the weapon and the boy's hand is stayed. The old man offers the recovered gold, asking in return the locket that he begged ten years before. The joyful son returns to his mother and sweetheart and tells them the joyful news, and outside the window the old man looks once more upon the face of the woman he loves and then passes out of her life forever.

THE RELENTLESS LAW
American Release, January 15

This remarkable dramatic production depicts that in our civilization the law is supreme and those that disobey its mandates cannot escape just punishment for their crimes. It also exemplifies that higher law beyond man, old as the world, that the innocent must suffer with the guilty.

Having transgressed the law of his country, Jim Dawson is tried, convicted, and sent to the penitentiary. After a year in the prison, he manages to escape and the intelligence in flashed all over the country. The relentless machinery of the law is set in motion and the man-hunt is on. He is discovered by a posse in the mountains and stalked as if he were a wild beast; a dangerous animal. Running and fighting, hiding and sneaking, he escapes their vigilance, and securing one of the horses belonging to the posse, again escapes, this time to the house of the woman whom he had married when he still retained the spark of manhood. During his absence a child has been born; born of a union that began with so much of promise and so little fulfilment. The desperate man does not realize that the child is his; that the woman suffering the torture that comes to those who realize that their love has been showered upon a worthless object is his wife. Hide me, save me, is his plea. Mechanically the dazed women sets about cleaning his wounds and feeding the famished man. Then the sound of approaching horsemen is heard and kissing the child, but repulsed by the wife, the hunted man leaps through the window and is gone. Up in the mountains he finds a cave and believes himself secure. Down in the valley the wife waits with a nameless dread in her soul. Up the mountain road the minions of the relentless law pick up the fugitive's trail.

They locate his lair and camp, knowing that without food or water he is as secure as if behind the thickest bar. At last, starving, thirsty and terror-stricken the maddened man attempts escape. The guns of the posse flash and the convict has paid the toll exacted by the law. Down in the valley a widow with her fatherless child in her arms waits with a nameless dread in her soul.

THE DESERTED SHAFT

Imp Release, January 15

A story of the West with the scenes laid in a village and the camp of surveyors.

Frank Davis is the favored suitor for the hand of Lottie Maxwell to the discomfiture of Edgar Perry. Both men are employed by a construction company. There is an opening scene of Perry proposing marriage to the girl and her refusal.

She meets Davis and they plight their troth, going to his mother for her blessing, which is given, and they are happy.

Davis is entrusted with the payroll to carry to the camp and, placing the money inside his shirt, he hastens away. Perry is piqued and bent on revenge. He meets Davis near a deserted mine shaft and the two have a war of words, terminating in a personal encounter in which Davis is worsted and hurled into the shaft.

The men wait at the camp for their regular pay, which is not forthcoming. They visit the offices and the management, in surprise, tells them the money was entrusted to the care of Davis. The delegation visits the home of the mother and she informs them her son has not been home. There can be but one solution to the problem—the young man has stolen the money and decamped.

There is a reward offered for his arrest and he is regarded as a fugitive from justice. Perry reads the placard and is astonished. He goes to the mother and confesses his crime in the presence of the sweetheart. The women lose no time in running to the abandoned shaft and find Davis still alive, although almost dead from his long exposure in the water. The assistance of the surveyors is sought and a quick rescue is made.

The scenes of Davis in the shaft are very realistic and the rescue is thrilling in the extreme.

AFTER MANY YEARS

Imp Release, January 18

An interesting child story in which brothers are reunited in a pleasing manner.

Harry Chilton is an enterprising young man, who gets on in the world and becomes wealthy and influential. His brother, George, at the opening of the story, is a ne'er do well addicted to strong drink and dissipation. Harry tries to reform George to no avail.

George has extraordinary talent as a musician, but neglects his profession as a teacher. He marries a trusting, confiding woman, but he makes her life one of misery and she dies, leaving him a little girl.

George and Harry drift apart.

Harry has a wife and daughter on whom he lavishes every attention.

George locates in the town in which Harry resides, not being aware of the proximity of his brother.

Little Grace, the daughter of Harry, is a sweet child, and she gives a party to her small companions on the grounds of her father. The little tots are the daughters of wealthy parents and are beautifully dressed; also are their large dolls, which accompany them.

The party is viewed by Ethel, the small daughter of George, through the iron gate. She has a shabby doll in her arms and her dress is extremely plain. Grace sees her looking through the bars of the gate longingly and her heart is touched. Throwing open the gate, she bids the little girl enter and seats her at the table. The petted children of the rich take umbrage at the intrusion, gather their dolls, and holding their dresses to avoid contact with Ethel, take their departure. The little hostess entertains the shabbily dressed child royally. She brings her into the house, where Ethel falls asleep, and Harry and his wife enter and find her.

Harry takes the sleeping child in his arms and carries her to her humble home, there to find his brother George, who has reformed and enjoys quite a flourishing patronage in teaching music.

The brothers are reunited through the kind heart of the daughter of the wealthy brother.

I WISH I HAD A GIRL

Imp Release, January 20

Tompkins wished he had a girl other than the homely specimen who confronted him in his boarding house day by day. So like the hero of Richard Le Gallienne's book, Tompkins went off in search of "the golden girl" of his imagination.

Very early in his adventure three or four of her turned him down, and even the maid servant in the house where he was making himself agreeable helped to pile contumacy on poor Tompkins' head.

His most promising adventure was making love to a pretty little cook. But this indignant lady not only repelled his amorous advances, but covered him with flour, so the unsuccessful wooer finally returned home and was content to accept the smiles of the homely girl in the boarding house. THE FLAG OF DISTRESS

Reuben Wilson has an appointment with a couple of friends who are awaiting him outside his house. Finding it impossible to escape the sharp attentions of his wife, he signals to them with a flag. Finally making a dash for it, he is also accompanied by his suspicious but unrelenting spouse. But his two friends are loyal.

They get up a row with Reuben and run away and are, of course, pursued by Reuben, who thus obtains liberty to join his friends in a visit to a masquerade, where the three of them have a high old time.

Meanwhile Mrs. Wilson seeks detective aid in finding her husband. Sherlocko finds the flag of distress and by some mysteriously intuitive process known only to the detective mind, tracks the deceitful Reuben down to the dancing hall, where he is surprised by his wife in the character of Mephistopheles.

Sherlocko gains a reputation for acuteness and Reuben has had a good time.

The element of burlesque enters into this laughable comedy, which is cleverly acted by Mr. Cumpson, Mr. Mack and the other members of the Imp Company.

THE NEW CLERK

Nestor Release, January 8

Dave Downey, obliged to work in a grocery store, makes the best of it, and the best is not at all bad considering the youth, beauty and charms of Constance, the grocer's daughter, who is the lady behind the counter. The old man, however, is the rock against which the bark of true love almost wrecks itself.

Poor Dave is caught in the act and promptly "fired" with neatness and dispatch. James Fixer, an old friend, proves a friend indeed. Dave shall have the girl, father or no father. Accordingly, he goes into the grocery store, makes a few purchases and then accuses the proprietor of stealing his wallet. The police are called in and the grocer is locked up. Enter Dave. Like a true hero, he tells the captain that he, and not the old man, is the thief. Jubilantly the grocer returns to commune with butter and eggs et similia, while Dave is placed in a cell.

Mr. Fixer is delighted at his clever scheme. Now for the climax. He goes to the grocer, to whom he apologizes, saying he had made a mistake and that the wallet was in his possession. The old man is deeply touched at Dave's sacrifice, and the pair forthwith gain the young man's release. To show his appreciation, the grocer gladly consents to his daughter's marriage to Dave.

THE LOST ADDRESS

Harry Locke and Dora Davey have safely navigated to Ocean of Love and are now entering the Port of Matrimony. The guests are all assembled, the bridegroom is being congratulated on his great win and the bride looks ravishingly beautiful in her immaculate robes and the orange blossoms. They are waiting—waiting for the Rev. Sackcloth, who is to perform the ceremony.

Where can his Reverence be? Out hunting for the house wherein principals and guests are impatiently waiting for his arrival. He has lost the address and recalls neither street nor number. After a strenuous but futile hunt, the parson returns home, removes his hat, drops into a chair and industriously wipes the perspiration off his massive brow. In the depths of his hat, he discovers the lost address, and, though two hours late, he rushes to unite two loving and eager souls, who were about to call a justice of the peace to the rescue.

TRACKED THROUGH THE DESERT

Nestor Release, January 10

Jim Conway, a young and energetic prospector, rebels at what he terms Sheriff Caldwell's impertinence and persists in his associations with evil companions. Victoria, his wife, at last wins him over, and Jim cuts loose from the gangsters. After due preparation he starts for the mountains to stake his claim; Victoria is to follow shortly after.

The gangsters, stealthily and in the night, go to Miller's Ranch and make away with all his horses. Sheriff Caldwell answers the alarm and with his posse is soon on the trail of the horse-thieves. The trail leads them through the desert. The sheriff is obliged to dismount and, before he can collect his wits, the horse has vanished beyond the horizon. Alone and with his canteen empty, he staggers on and on through the desert. Meanwhile the thieves, by mere chance, come upon Jim in the mountains and threaten him to make him join them. The posse's approach gives Jim the opportunity to slip away, but, being closely pursued, he's forced to jump over a precipice. The thieves are corraled and taken to the lockup.

Victoria, on her way to meet her husband, finds the riderless horse, and after a painstaking and dangerous hunt reaches the almost exhausted and thirst-maddened sheriff. She knows just what to do and quickly does it. The sheriff returns home not much the worse for his experience.

The posse apprises Caldwell of Jim's connection with the horse thieves and of his escape. The boys insist that the sheriff drop sentiment and perform his duty. Reluctantly Caldwell leads his men in the search for Jim.

Mrs. Caldwell, however, proposes to save the young man, and cleverly manages to decoy away the sheriff and his posse. Jim and Victoria cross in safety the border line, and in another state they begin life anew.

JUST TOO LATE

Nestor Release, January 13

Stephen Weldron is awarded a large contract and is delighted at his good fortune. Cornelia, his good wife, also rejoices, for she sees visions of lovely new hats and other good things forever playing a tattoo on the portals of the feminine heart.

Stephen must catch the early morning train to Boon City, to make legal and final arrangements with the contract-givers. The matter is of utmost importance, and Cornelia wakes her hubby in time. Stephen, however, returns to dreamland while the Mrs. is preparing breakfast. A more urgent call is made—there are but twenty minutes to catch that blessed train, on which hinges the Weldrons' future. Stephen jumps out of bed, dresses, eats and departs like a streak of lightning, and then begins a series of highly humorous mishaps. He misses the train, thanks to a lot of people and things that get in his way, and boards a freight car, but luck is against him. The next night he devotes considerable attention to his alarm clock, determined that the next time opportunity knocks at his door he shall not be "just too late." On the same reel is

POWER OF INNOCENCE

Republic Release, January 14

REP Lucy Davis, of Hamilton, Ind., not contented with the lowly comforts afforded by her mother and grandmother decides to seek employment in New York City. After writing several big concerns and receiving one note with a little encouragment she prepares to leave home.

Her mother and grandmother do their very best to dissuade her, but to no avail.

Arriving at the little station in Hamilton, she attracts the attention of George Edwards, a traveling salesman and intimate friend of several notorious people in New York City. He presses his attentions upon her and insists upon helping her on the train, having previously wired Violet Bowers, an old friend of the underworld in New York, advising her as to the time of their arrival. Violet, much interested in seeing new faces, prepares to meet George and his "find" at the Pennsylvania Railroad Terminal in New York.

Lucy, on her arrival in the Metropolis, is much amazed at its magnitude and is an easy prey for the clutches of George's friend, Violet Bowers. Violet has little trouble in persuading Lucy to take quarters at her house until such time as she secures a position. Arriving at the beautiful residence sustained by Violet Bowers, Lucy tells the story of her family's early prosperity, her father's untimely death, later of their want and poverty, and that she has come to the city in order that she might provide more comforts for the folks at home. Violet is touched by the innocence and youth of Lucy and decides to save her from the many pitfalls of friendless girls in the big city.

George Edwards arrives, demands an interview with Lucy and when refused by Violet, decides to accomplish it by force, when he is intercepted by Jones, a friend of Violet. A short quarrel ensues and George leaves, swearing vengeance on Jones. Violet returns to Lucy, insists upon her accepting a loan and induces her to return to her mother. She accompanies her to the station, waves a fond goodbye and feels the better for having saved an innocent girl from a life of misery and shame.

A BLUE RIDGE ROMANCE

Republic Release, January 27

Jack Wilson, a young revenue officer, falls in love with Edith Murray. Edith does not love him, however, and tells him so. Their parting is a sad one for Jack, who though rejected as a suitor, promises Edith to always be her friend.

Edith later marries Dick Noble, a handsome young Virginian, whose supposed occupation is that of a lumberman. After the honeymoon, the young couple go to their home in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Everything is happiness for Edith until by a chance she learns that instead of being a millman, her husband is a moonshiner.

Fate has decreed that Jack Wilson shall enter into the lives and happiness of the Nobles. He is detailed by his superior officer to search out and arrest Noble (whom he has never met). The very night that Edith has discovered Dick's illegal occupation Jack and a fellow officer are trailing him through the mountains and getting evidence against him. After seeing Dick at the still, Wilson and his companion watch him on his homeward journey. Not wishing to encounter him within the immediate vicinity of the still, they are careful not to get too close to him; this causes them to lose the trail. At a cross trail, Jack and his companion separate, Jack gets the right trail, and soon catches up to Dick, whom he watches to his home.

When he arrives there, Dick meets Edith, who is in tears and heartbroken over her discovery. He promises her to give up his illicit pursuits and he has hardly done so when Jack Wilson dashes into the room and places him under arrest.

The scene which follows is the big scene of the film and is absorbing in its tension; enough to say that love triumphs and Dick and Edith seek the new life in the great West, ever mindful of the man who jeopardized his reputation in a sacrifice to a tender friendship.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE

Thanhouser Release, January 15

Dr. Jekyll, a young physician, is possessed of the idea that medicine can effect the soul as well as the body, and has many discussions with his friend Lanyon, a doctor of the old school. Jekyll continues to experiment in secret, and finally his efforts are crowned with success. He discovers a mixture that brings out all the bad in his nature, and another that will act as an antidote.

But when he stands forth in his evil guise, Jekyll is horrified. He is such a wicked, repulsive creature that even the interests of science are lost sight of; and he decides to bury his discovery from everyone, realizing that it does not pay physicians or anyone else to bring out the evil that is in one.

The doctor finds, however, that it is easy to start evil doing, but not always possible to accomplish reform. The wicked genius that he brought to the surface, simply in the interests of science, returns at intervals to plague him. And in those stages of existence the courtly, polished, tender-hearted Dr. Jekyll becomes Mr. Hyde, a monster who is feared and hated.

By the aid of his medicine, Dr. Jekyll is able to drive Mr. Hyde away, but as the change often takes place at times when he is far from his office, he is unable to mix the drug that restores him to a rational being again. At these times he lives in wretched lodgings, under the name of Mr. Hyde, and pays secret visits to the home of Dr. Jekyll. The latter's friends are surprised that the courtly doctor should have such an intimate, but he sadly disregards their remonstrances. For he alone knows that Dr. Jekyll cannot ever be rid of Mr. Hyde.

Jekyll loves the vicar's daughter, and his love is returned. While calling upon her one day the change in identities comes upon him, and he hastily excuses himself to his fiancee. But as he passes out of the grounds he becomes Mr. Hyde, the man who tortures little children, and is a hater of all mankind. He returns to the girl, not as a suitor, but intending to be her slayer.

The vicar hears his daughter's cries and gallantly runs to her aid. The feeble old man, however, is no match for the maniac Hyde, and is killed. Hyde flees, safe for the time being.

When Dr. Jekyll is restored to himself his grief is profound. His life is forfeited, his happiness ruined. And at intervals growing briefer and briefer, the demon Hyde asserts his mastery.

An accident deprives the doctor of the medicine that restores him to the Jekyll existence. He locks himself in his room, ordering his servant, through the barred doors, to bring him certain drugs. The servant, who loves Jekyll, does not recognize the voice of Hyde. He runs off and calls assistance, believing that the kindly doctor has been slain by Hyde, the man the servant hated.

The police arrive and Hyde is commanded to open the door in the name of the law. He is unable to restore himself to the Dr. Jekyll existence. As Hyde, his life is forfeited, and the wretched man ends his life with poison, just as the doors crash in, and the police enter, too late to save him for the gallows.

A NIAGARA HONEYMOON

Thanhouser Release, January 19

A well-to-do family, living in a suburban town, was annoyed on receiving word that the wife's sister-in-law intended to pay them a visit. For she was a widow, far from being well off, and, as the haughty daughter said, "Auntie is absolutely of no use to us."

When she arrived she was greeted coldly, compelled to perform menial services, and treated more like a servant than a relation. Naturally she was very unhappy.

About this time the family was thrown into excitement by the news that the father's old chum in college, who had gone to Australia to make a fortune had returned with $1,000,000, and intended to marry and settle down. The parents figured that this was an excellent chance for their only child and planned to marry her to the millionaire.

The rich man came to be their guest, but strange to say the fascinations of "daughter" had no effect upon him. Although the aunt tried to efface herself, she attracted his attention, and he soon fell in love with her, but the family did not suspect it.

The aunt went away, taking with her no regrets, leaving behind her no sorrow. The rich man, pleading an unexpected business engagement, hastily departed, too, and they met on the same train.

The man from Australia decided to waste no time. He wired ahead to the city clerk of a town along the line to meet the train with a marriage license, promising a big fee. He also directed him to bring a minister along.

The aunt was bewildered by this chain lightning courtship. Before she realized what was going on, she had signed the application, and the minister was performing the ceremony on the observation platform of the rapidly moving train. When she left the town, she was a widow; two mile posts beyond she was the bride of a wealthy man who loved her for herself alone. And the train was headed for Niagara Falls, where their honeymoon was spent.

Many couples have gone to Niagara Falls on honeymoon tours, but none of them ever took the minister and the marriage service along with them. So there was some eclat to this wedding.

The happy couple returned to greet the bride's relatives, and give them a chance to show how social training enables persons to conceal rage, envy and chagrin under the most trying of circumstances.

ECONOMICAL BROWN

Solax Release, January 10

In the Solax production of "Economical Brown" is reflected a peculiar characteristic often discernible in many American husbands. This characteristic is one of extreme extravagance outside of the home and absolute parsimony on the inside. In other words, there are men who never stint themselves when they are "out" with the "jolly bunch" having a good time, but as soon as they cross the threshold of their own homes they are seized suddenly with a wild desire for economy. Usually the wife is the sufferer. "Economical Brown" is just such a man. Good cigars, taxicabs, high-class tailors and good wines are not too good for him, but his wife he insists "must economize." Brown's wife is too clever for him, however; she soon shows him how truly wrong are his principles of economy. In fact, she has such convincing arguments for him that he finally loosens up and "comes across" with a three-figure check.

This is how it all happens: When Brown's wife asks for anything Brown's reply usually is, "Oh, we can get along without it—we must economize." Mrs. Brown gets back at Mr. Brown when they have visitors. She not only appears in her plainest attire, but serves very humble food. Brown's visitors leave hurriedly, making bum excuses while Brown is furious at his wife. She, however, shows him an itemized comparative table of the family's home expenses and Brown's outside extravagances. Brown then sees a light and realizes how wrong he has been.

BLACK SHEEP

Solax Release, January 12

An old inventor has a son who is worthless and wayward. The son promises the father that if he would give him enough money he would go to another city and try to "make good."

The son goes to another city, but he gets into difficulty and turns criminal. He serves in the penitentiary for four years. In the meantime the old inventor dies and his daughter marries her father's benefactor—a man who took an interest in his inventions.

The girl lives happily until the shadow of her brother darkens her path. He continually asks her for money and she gives it to him to keep his disgusting presence out of her sight. She is ashamed of him and does not want her husband to know of the Black Sheep in the family. Her husband, however, sees her in the presence of the Black Sheep and he grows suspicious of his wife.

The Black Sheep soon grows dissatisfied with the pittance his sister allows him periodically, so he decides to break into the home and steal as much as he can. In this he does not succeed, for detectives, who follow him for a former offence, interfere. He tries to make a get-away, but is shot dead in the attempt.

During the mixup the husband finds the Black Sheep in the embrace of his wife. When the criminal is shot and brought into the house dead a note in his pocket discloses his relationship.

This is one of the strongest Solax dramas in many months.

BY THE HAND OF A CHILD

An outlaw escapes from his pursuers. He roams the wilds for a time and then nears civilization. In the woods close by the home of a sheriff he finds the sheriff's little girl in a shrub. She had fallen from a cliff and had narrowly escaped being dashed to pieces.

The outlaw picks up the little girl and brings her home. The sheriff's wife receives him thankfully. The little girl is not worse off for the experience. As a reward for saving her life the child presents the outlaw with her doll. Then he departs.

The outlaw is soon caught and is about to be shot when the sheriff sees protruding from the outlaw's shirt his own little girl's doll. Explanations follow and the outlaw is given another chance. He "makes good" and becomes a better man.

THE BRAID

Comet Release, January 15

John Jackson and his wife, Sarah, are very much devoted to each other. Illness overtakes her and she dies. In order to remember her John cuts off a braid from her hair and places it in a jewel casket. For days he wanders alone, distracted and on the verge of suicide. He wanders into a public park and there sees a woman, an exact counterpart of his dead wife. He learns that she is an actress and follows her to the stage door. Then he buys a ticket for her performance, after which he seeks an interview. When he sees the woman he makes ardent declarations of his love, but keeps from her the secret of his infatuation which is the striking resemblance she bears to the departed Sarah. Out of pity she consents to visit his home and dine with him. As a joke he asks her to put on one of his dead wife's gowns, a request to which she readily complies. The actress looks for all the world like poor Sarah, and John, maddened at the sight of her, tries to clasp her to his breast. She playfully eludes him and goes to the jewel casket, and taking out the revered braid pins it on her head. John is about to choke her when he fancies he hears the voice of Sarah emanating from his wife's portrait. He stops and the actress quits the house, shaking her head in pity at the strange actions of John. A vision of Sarah then confronts him and on his knees he begs forgiveness, which is freely and quickly given.

THIRTY DAYS

Comet Release, January 19

Jack Ralston is a young millionaire, and as he says, he "never did a stitch in his life." Naturally when he visits the house of his prospective father-in-law, Jonette Wilson, asking for the hand of his daughter, Hazel, in marriage, the old man says that he is willing to give his consent provided Jack will essay to earn $30 in thirty days. So nothing daunted Jack starts out. The first day he visits a bank president, asks for a position and is coldly turned down. Then he orders his chauffeur to drive him to a place where he hears they need a janitor's assistant. When the janitor sees Jack and his machine he thinks the millionaire is insane and tells him to depart. Jack's next job is in a clothing store, where he is engaged as puller in. He gets into a row and is discharged. His last effort is as a hod carrier, but he is so clumsy and upsets a man coming down with bricks that he is forthwith sent adrift. Jack has one last resort, and that is to hire out his machine. He takes a stand at the railway station and who comes along but Mr. Wilson. He is on his way to New York on an important business engagement. He wants to use Jack's machine, but Jack says it will cost him $30, which he unwillingly but finally pays. Jack has earned his $30 in less than 30 days, and wins Hazel.

THE INEVITABLE JOHNSON

Great Northern Release, January 13

This is a story somewhat on the lines of a bad boy's diary, with Johnson as the bad boy. He is the perpetrator of joke after joke, each of which excels its predecessor as a hilarity producer. Johnson, short and podgy, it is who, in the schoolroom, brings down the anathemas of the professor by his pin-sticking proclivities. He it is who brings ruin upon the professor's headgear. And when the boys have retired, he it is who makes night hideous with ear-splitting blasts upon the trombone, and each time Johnson comes out on top, the innocent suffering for the guilty. Similarly, when Smith endeavors to hand a bouquet from out his dormitory window to that of the dainty little confection in the adjoining room, and drops the posy, Johnson secures it and covers himself with honor by presenting it to the fair damsel. Like the poor, Johnson is always with us, or at any rate, is always ousting Smith. The latter, to take his attention off the professor's daughter, engages him in conversation as to the purchase of a lottery ticket, where once more Johnson scores by securing the first prize. This and similar trials is more than Smith can bear, and he loses his reason, once more to find that Johnson has been successful and is in charge of the asylum whither Smith is conveyed. The last scene shows Johnson occupying Smith's place at home, having possessed himself of Smith's wife, his favorite chair, his pipe and worldly belongings. Moral: Beware of all Johnsons.

HIS FATE'S REHEARSAL

Majestic Release, January 14

Sometimes a "jolly good fellow" makes a very bad husband, and Hazel Nelson, three years married to James Dillon, finds herself late one night waiting in fear and terror her husband's approach. Before their marriage, and in fact, during the first two years of their wedded life, she had found him all that a girl could wish for in a man, a lover and a husband. At the end of those happy years he had inherited a large fortune and had been unable to withstand the temptations which unlimited money and leisure opened to him. He fell into the company of a set of fast young clubmen, and while he had disdained joining them in certain dissipations, he began to drink heavily, and the most charming of men while sober became, drunk, a savage beast. As is often the case, he was quite unconscious in his sober moments of his conduct while under the influence of liquor.

The time had arrived when the young wife, only a girl in years, had come to fear actual harm to herself or her baby, and fled to her father's home for protection; but in a few days, won over by her repentant husband, returned to him, hoping for the best, but fearful of what might happen when once more her baby's father gave way to his only weakness. Her father, a celebrated physician, had raged and stormed at her husband. His daughter was an only child, and the thought that his little girl was in constant exposure to actual harm drove him at times to swear that if she ever came to any hurt, he would take the law into his own hands in dealing with her husband.

The father was summoned by a charity call to the wretched hovel of a poor creature insane from alcoholism; he administered what temporary relief he could and sent the poor woman to the hospital. Her husband had died some years before from the effects of drink, and she had been unable to provide for her baby, who had died from sheer want. The physician gazed about the wretched little home, and he wondered bitterly if his daughter would ever sink to such a level.

At this point he was interrupted by his daughter's maid, who had been searching for him, and who told him with shaking voice that her mistress, in fear of her life, needed him. He hastened to his daughter's home and found Dillon in a drunken stupor, and his daughter and her baby locked in her bedroom. His daughter's presence prevented him from wreaking summary vengeance upon her husband, but even while listening to the girl's pleadings of her husband's many virtues to shield him from her father's wrath, the physician evolved a rather desperate plan. Wife and stupified husband under the influence of an opiate were taken to the wretched hovel, which the physician had just left, and while his daughter dressed herself in some old rags which she found about the place, the father made a like change in her husband's attire. Then dating a note three years ahead addressed to his daughter, to the effect that as she had sunk to her husband's level, he, her father, would no longer help her and was done with her, he gave her instructions as to her part in the grim little comedy to be played. The physician then left the hovel and awaited results.

Dillon finally awoke from his stupor, looked about the room in amazement at his surroundings and the clothes in which he was dressed, and then started to his feet in horror, as he saw seated at a table his wife, unkempt, unclean, and drinking heavily. Bewildered, he demanded an explanation and she showed him the note from her father.

"Three years gone—three years gone." Horrified, he fell to the floor as he listened to his wife's almost insane ravings. He asked for the child, and she laughed and said, "As if he did not know," and pointed to the other room. He went in and found only a faded wreath, with the word, "Baby" upon it. He staggered back, and insane from grief fell at his wife's feet begging forgiveness for what he had evidently brought her to. She only laughed the more and told him that she knew what to do and taking from her dress a small vial, before he could stop her, drank half the contents, and fell prostrate over the table. He seized the half-empty bottle and saw that it contained a deadly poison. Racked with remorse, he gladly finished its contents and fell beside his wife.

The physician, waiting outside, entered quickly, and as the bottle had contained only a weak opiate, soon brought his daughter to consciousness. The still insensible husband was again dressed in his proper clothes, and taken to his home. He awoke to find himself alone in his usual surroundings. His joy when his wife answered his call can be readily imagined, and when she showed him the baby sleeping quietly in its crib, he took her into his arms, almost weeping with happiness and swore he had received a lesson whose effect would last until his life ended. The father, listening from another room, smiled happily, and left the house with the conviction that his child's future happiness and safety were assured.

NEXT

Tony Guardio, the handsomest barber that ever stropped a razor, is bewailing his lack of trade, and there comes to him Marion Trevor, a very pretty girl, who asks to be allowed to open a manicure stand in his barber shop. As there are very few who come to be barbered, Tony cannot see where her customers are to come from, but impressed by the girl's charms, he consents and she proceeds to install herself.

One of Tony's regular customers, a young gentleman of a wealthy family named Edward Robbins, after once looking upon the fair Marion readily consents to be manicured. His efforts at conversation with her inflames the temperamental Tony to jealous rage, for Tony has looked upon the manicure girl, and having looked has been lost.

Edward goes home to his devoted father and mother, but can think of nothing but the little girl who held his hands so gently and looked up at him so demurely when he addressed an occasional word to her. His father is greatly alarmed over his condition, but the boy tells him that all he needs is occupation, and in search of said occupation, he returns the next day to the barber shop laden with roses, which he sends in by a small boy to Marion—and still the next day he returns on the same errand, and is confronted by a sign on Tony's shop indicating that the place is for sale.

An inspiration strikes the quick-thinking Edward, and he decides to become a business man. He enters the shop and Tony frowns upon him forbiddingly, but the frown turns to smiles when Edward makes him a proposition to purchase the shop. The transaction is no sooner completed than Tony tells the manicure girl that he will open another shop, and requests her to join him there, but Edward makes a stronger bid, and the girl decides to stay in her present location. Tony scowls at Edward and leaves the shop.

Edward's father and mother are left in the dark as to his whereabouts during the day, and Edward lives for some time in just a dream of happiness. He is awakened to a full sense of his feelings for his manicure lady by becoming jealous of the coy attentions of a fat traveling salesman to Marion, and asks her to marry him. She consents, but their new-found bliss is rudely interrupted by the entrance of his father, who has dropped in for a little tonsorial attention, but to his amazement finds his son and heir in full barber regalia and kissing and kissing a very pretty girl. Edward happily and proudly tells his father that she has consented to become his wife, but strange to say, the old gentleman does not receive the news in the same spirit, and even goes so far as to apply some insolent epithets—to the girl, which her fiance feels called upon to resent. His father gives him the choice of leaving the shop and the manicure girl, or being disinherited, and Edward demonstrates his decision without a word by taking the girl into his arms, and his father storms out.

The young couple are married, and are happy despite the fact that they are soon reduced to their last penny. In the meantime a silent ally has been fighting in Edward's favor with his parents—their longing for their son. There is never a meal at which his cheery presence is not missed—never a night that his mother does not silently weep at her son's empty bed. She finally prevails upon father to see if he cannot effect a reconciliation.

In the meantime temperamental Tony, the barber, has made many efforts to induce his one-time manicure girl to again work for him, and when he at last finally learns that she is married, his rage passes all reason. He secures a small nitro-glycerine bomb and determines to wreck his old barber shop and be revenged upon the ever-smiling Edward. At the very moment when he has stolen into his old barber shop and placed the bomb on the floor, Edward's father has made his way there to make peace with his son. The old man enters unexpectedly upon Tony, sees the bomb and struggles with the Italian. Marion, hearing the noise, rushes in as Tony knocks father down and escapes out the door. She bravely picks up the bomb and hurls it out the door, where it explodes, doing no harm.

Edward sets out in pursuit of Tony, bidding his father care for Marion, who has promptly fainted. She quickly comes to, however, and seats father in the barber chair. He has received a sharp cut over the eye, and is in a generally mussed-up condition from his struggle with Tony. She bathes the cut, and forgetful of her previous interview with him, tenderly administers to his needs.

She finally remembers that this is the same man who has disinherited his son on her account, and she starts to leave. He has been watching her closely, however, and holds out his arms to her and asks her if she will not be a daughter to him. She sinks sobbing with joy at his knee. Mrs. Robbins, who has been anxiously awaiting the result of her husband's visit, enters the barber shop, and gladly learns of her husband's reconciliation with the manicure girl.

In the meantime Edward has been busily engaged in pounding Tony, to the delight of several hundred small boys, and disdaining to have the Italian arrested, drags him back to the shop, where he soon forgets his rage at Tony in his joy upon learning that his father and mother have taken Marion into the family. He gladly accepts his father's offer to return home, and to the astonishment of Tony, who begs for forgiveness, he handsomely makes him a present of his old barber shop. His father proudly takes his daughter-in-law under his arm, and the reunited family leave for home, while Tony leans back in his chair repeating in bewilderment, "What—Next."

LITTLE BOY BLUE

Powers Release, January 16, 1912

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS
TRADE MARK

The poem that tells this pathetic story is the one that made Eugene Field famous. Who does not remember the scenes:

The little toy dog is covered with dust,
But sturdy and staunch he stands;
And the little toy soldier is red with rust
And the musket moulds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new
And the soldier was passing fair;
And that was the time when our little Boy Blue
Kissed them, and put them there.
"Now, don't you go till I come," he said,
"And don't you make any noise."
So toddling off to his trundle-bed,
He dreamt of the pretty toys.
And as he was dreaming, an angel song
Awakened our little Boy Blue—
Oh, the years are many, the years are long,
But the little toy friends are true.
Aye, faithful to little Boy Blue they stand,
Each in the same old place,
Awaiting the touch of a little hand,
The smile of a little face.
And they wonder, as waiting the long years through,
In the dust of that little chair,
What has become of our little Boy Blue
Since he kissed them, and put them there!

The Duplex Studio has done these beautiful lines full justice, with a full company of child actors.

COMING

OR, THE CHILD OF FATE

Adapted from Thomas' Famous French Opera

The exhibitors who are booked for "Mignon," the second in the series of the monthly features, will receive from their exchange a copy of a "Potpourie"—meaning scores of a melody of popular selections for piano and violin—from the well-known opera.

Owing to the infinite preparation which this feature production requires, it has been decided to postpone its release from Sunday, January 28th to Friday, February 2d.

By the Hand of a Child

RELEASED SUNDAY, JANUARY 14th

"There is some good left in the worst of us." A keepsake, a small doll, influences the life of a desperado—after he is "given a chance." The doll and what it represents to him, guides him in the path of righteousness.

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17th

This is a Western comedy that is different from other Western productions. It is an exhilarating novelty—something far above the ordinary. The story is about a girl parson who is the spiritual guide of a bunch of wild cowboys. The way they all try to "get in right" and the way Billy Quirk "puts over" the comedy is a revelation. Take it from us straight—no kiddin'—Parson Sue is a winner.

RELEASED FRIDAY, JANUARY 19th

This production shows the Jew in a different light. We see him here as a man ready and willing to make a sacrifice and to forgive and to forget. It is a pathetic story that not only grips but kindles up in us an entirely new sensation.

BILL'S SURRENDER

Powers Release, January 20

These noble girls who go down to the settlement houses in the slums to spread light and give aid to the needy can tell strange stories. Lucille is one of them, and she holds to her work bravely; this, even though she must each day tolerate insults from the street corner gang as she goes to the car to and from the settlement building. But one day one of the gang calls an emphatic halt on the proceedings; he becomes her friend, she his. He becomes, too, the link between her and her good work. The big opportunity comes when she saves them all from a term in jail, and her reward is not only a dozen or so new recruits to her class, but also a choice collection of guns, brass knuckles and blackjacks, the use of which the owners swear off for good and all time.

THE BOARDING HOUSE MYSTERY

Rex Release, January 11

Ambition is wholesome, of course; aspirations are a stout asset in life; reaching out for the glories of the world is a commendable stunt, and even only attempting to achieve is a laudable proceeding. But when one whose sole qualification for fame and glory is a mere desire for them attempts to connect his lofty brow with the laurel bay troubles are going to bother, and bothers trouble him. Just such an uppercut from fate is landed upon the chin of Andrew Lancelot—who had too much of it.

A. Lancelot is one of the common or garden variety of Rubes, and like the rest of his gender, aspires to become the Big Something-or-other in the teeming metropolis. His particular weakness is flattering himself into the belief that he possesses ventriloquial powers, but he is just enough of a ventriloquist to have things happen to him. He saves up sufficient money to buy a dummy and a costume—never mind exactly how many years it took—and sets off for the city, and fame. His clothes make a sufficient noise to acquire a vaudeville engagement, and the future looms up roseate and radiant for A. L. In his ecstasy he goes clear off the planet, and selects a choice collection of clouds as his stamping ground.

But every silver lining has a cloud. The night when he is to (de)but (pronounce it that way as a favor, won't you?) into the limelight takes its place on the calendar, and Prof. Andrew Lancelot takes his place among the celebrities of the age. He executes a song via his dummy, and the audience is panic-stricken. Vaudevillians can stand for a whole lot, including their rights, and they commence to announce in something above a whisper that they intend to have them—and use them. They do, also employing sundry antiquated tomatoes and a few things of a less tender and clinging disposition as a means to their end, their end being Prof. Lancelot's five diminutive feet of nerve. He is discouraged on the face of it. His reception is simply stunning, and on the theory that he who sings and runs away may live to sing another day—not mentioning whether or not the others live—he makes his absence conspicuous.

He meanders back to his boarding house, very much meditative. He is very grave—in fact, he is almost tombstones. And then Fate enters to complete the bout. The landlady had painted his room that very day, and left the pail of paint in a corner. In his grief and rage he hurls his dummy into a corner, and it just happens to be the wrong corner. "Beyond the pale," so to speak. The dummy, being only a dummy, connects with the paint. A pair of lovers on the veranda outside, doing what it is not our business to know, later see him pack the paint-covered dummy into a trunk. We have neglected to state that it was red paint, and the pair at once conclude that a gruesome murder has been committed. Immediately, if not sooner, they arouse the house and advertise their conclusions. . . . When the mystery—and Prof. Lancelot—are finally cleared, what is left of him is filled with but one desire—to take the first road but the Erie back to the farm.

At last in peace, or in pieces, he boards the train, leaving a train of harrowing thoughts behind him.

ARABELLA LOVES HER MASTER

Lux Release, January 12

Jimmy Jimson is too attentive to the bright and sprightly maid, and Mrs. Jimson acts with great promptitude and forthwith removes the source of danger. Exit the maid. Madame Jimson then writes to a local employment bureau and requests them to send her a domestic of certain age and disposition. Arabella is the product of this request, and she certainly is perfection itself. Of her age there can be no doubt, and her face bespoke a most serious nature. The face itself was a very serious matter—extremely serious. However, the handsome husband attracts the attention of the slavey and finally becomes the object of her adoration. Then follows the fun. On the same reel is

BILL, EMPEROR OF THE SAHARA

Some people are born great, whilst others have greatness thrust upon them. The latter is the case with cheerful Billy, who is borne off to the Sunny South by a camel, who is anxious to exchange his stable at the Zoo for sandy plains of his native land. Bill's wife follows the ship of the desert in its wayward flight and arrives there just in time to see her obedient spouse appointed King of that wide domain. His Majesty Bill Snoo, better known to his loving subjects as Billy, thus acquires further dominions. At present he is busy governing the Kingdom of Laughter, where h's sway can never be usurped.

FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT

London Office of the News,
8 Sherwood street, West.

The Middlesex County Council has decided to close down all shows on Sunday. Previously they have been allowed to open for "charity." Some of the most populous London suburbs, including Ealing, Hornsey, Crouch End, etc., are under the Middlesex Council and undoubtedly this somewhat arbitrary proceeding will cause great inconvenience to thousands of people. It is suggested that the names of the gentlemen who voted for the measure should be blacklisted at the time of the next election, with the idea of defeating them and so getting the order rescinded, but so little interest is taken in municipal elections by the average person entitled to note, that I doubt if much good will come of this proceeding, which at the best will be a lengthy one. However, it seems about the best available.

Personally, I think that if similar steps were taken by all licensing bodies, it would in the end work for the good of the trade by making possible a straight fight on the question of Sunday opening, uncomplicated by the somewhat peculiar "Charity condition, which simply means that the showman pays a commission on his takings to one of these organizations to enable him to get round the regulations. Nobody believes the shows would be open on Sunday if the charities received the whole of the takings, less expenses only, as they are supposed to do.

I understand that Mr. W. Day, of the Tyler Apparatus Co., will shortly sever his connection with them, and rumor says he will be starting a business of his own. Mr. Day was responsible for about the biggest boom in projectors ever seen in this market—the sales of "Tyler-Ernemann" under his management reaching remarkable figures and practically every new concern installing one.

THE ART OF Scenario Writing

Second Edition — By WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT

The MOVING PICTURE NEWS has secured the sole right to republish this standard work on Scenario writing, and offers it as a premium to all new subscribers of $2.00 for one year.

ART OF SCENARIO WRITING, separately, $1.00, post free.

Read what the Moving Picture World of February 25th, 1911, says of this excellent aid:—

The Art of Writing Scenarios

By William Lord Wright. Author of "Twixt Loyalty and Love," "Simon Kenton," etc., etc. Published by the Scenario Instruction Publishing Co., Bellefontaine, Ohio. Price $1.00.

In a very interesting series of articles published in our pages last month, Mr. G. R. Craw told the aspiring scenario author how to write scenarios. Those articles have been favorably commented upon as being of great practical value. Now comes Mr. W. Lord Wright with a little book of about 30 pages which still further adds to our knowledge of a subject that has perplexed many would-be moving picture authors, namely: How to set about work; how to acquire its technique; how, in fact, to prepare goods suitable for the market.

Mr. Wright, who is a successful scenario writer, first of all points out what is in demand by moving picture makers. Then he indicates what is not wanted. After reviewing the function of the scenario editor, he gives some of his own experiences, his failure and his successes. Then we come to some practical advice. He tells the author how to get ideas; where to market the completed scenario; how it should be written and presented, winding up by printing a sample scenario as a guide. Finally, he points out the value of action in this branch of dramatic work, and takes the view that though unhonored, the moving picture scenario writer may some day come into his own in the way of publicity, fame and fortune. We hope he will, though we think this agreeable state of things a long way off.

Meanwhile, we welcome Mr. Wright's little book just as we welcomed Mr. Craw's articles. These things relieve us of some responsibility. We are often asked how a scenario should be written; where it should be marketed and how much money there is in it? Mr. Wright answers all these questions for us. We invite all our readers who are interested in this department of dramatic work, to get a copy of this book and study the formula that he gives. Of course, it is one thing to give a formula for a moving picture scenario, or plays, or a novel. These things may be delivered to managers technically correct in every detail; and yet lacking the one essential which no book on earth can teach: The selection of a theme which will get over; this is the divine afflatus referred to long ago by the anthor of the phrase: Poeta mascitur non fit: The poet is born, not made. So we believe is the scenario writer. Still, for the benefit of those who are not born and who think they can be made, Mr. Wright's book should be of great value. It will sell well on account of that. It may have a negative value, too, in that it may possibly act as a deterrent to many people who think they can write scenarios and cannot realize their unfitness for the work. There are two or three books extant, and they have run through numerous editions on how to write plays. It is not on record that any playwright who has succeeded during the last quarter of a century, traces any of his success to these manuals, which, perhaps, have been instrumental in diminishing the output of unsuitable plays. It is no easy thing to write a good play; it is no easy thing to write a good scenario. So we hope Mr. Wright's book will encourage the aspirant who aspires to some reasonable hope of success, will discourage those who have no fitness for this form of work. There are too many of the latter kind in the moving picture field to-day.

Ask these authorities what they think of the book. GILES R. WARREN, Author, Playwright, Editor, Lubin Mfg. Co.; C. B. HOADLEY, Editor Scenarios, Imp Company; HORACE VINTON, Author, Editor, Shamrock Company. We have endorsements on file from THE ESSANAY FILM COMPANY, THE POWERS COMPANY, CHAMPION COMPANY, THE IMP COMPANY and THE AMERICAN COMPANY. Also dozens of unsolicited testimonials from writers who have been helped by this work.

THE ART OF SCENARIO WRITING contains a sample scenario recommended as the best form, by GILES R. WARREN, who is acknowledged as one of the most successful and original scenario editors of the present day.

THE TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK

Are now among the most popular pictures in the Independent market. They are thoroughly good, business drawing, audience satisfying pictures.

Every picture is a feature because of its strong plot with heart interest.

They are directed by one of the most careful and competent directors in the business and acted by an ALL STAR STOCK COMPANY, whose combined ambition is to appear in

PICTURES OF QUALITY

FRIDAY, JANUARY 19th

"NEXT"—A light comedy love story—a real young fellow with a personality that the audience will "shine up" to—the girl has her way, too—once more the good plot—unexpected complications—a real, tender love story, full of comedy settings.

Approx. length, 960 feet

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21st

"SPARE THE ROD"—a big, vital idea—the training and bringing up of a child is set forth tenderly—the iron will of an upright but too severe father is broken by the delicate, hitherto submissive little wife—a gripping story that will command the entire attention of the audience.

Approx. length, 960 feet

EXCELLENT FEATURES TO FOLLOW

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26th, "THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE"—comedy.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28th, "A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE—strong heart drama.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2d—"AN OLD LADY OF TWENTY" AND "LUCKY MAN"—a high class split reel comedy

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4th—"HONOR THY FATHER"—an intense drama.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9th—"A GAME FOR TWO"—a society comedy drama.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11th, "ARRESTING FATHER"—a side-splitting comedy.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16th—"HIS STEPMOTHER"—a powerful sex problem.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18th, "PETTICOAT PERFIDY"—A prescription for the blues—comedy.

Read the night letter received from Dolly Spurr, owner of The Royal Theatre, Marion, Indiana:

"What's the matter with Majestics? They're all right. My patrons are simply going wild over them. Don't know what I'll do with my crawds if Majestics keep on gaining in popularity. Without a doubt Majestic pictures are going to be a strong rival to any other make of pictures I am running. The 'Actress' was simply magnificent, photography superb, the acting perfect, best I ever saw. Am going to get that second release even if I have to go ta my exchange myself to get it."

The above is only one of many congratulatory telegrams and letters which we have received, and it proves that we are giving the public exactly the sort of pictures it needs.

THE FIRE QUESTION

EVERY now and again, trouble occurs with the license authorities, with the Board of Fire Underwriters, and with the various fire departments of the cities. A thought occurred to us the other day, which is due to Ex-Chief Croker of New York City, whose name and fame is world wide, as the finest fire fighter known in the realms of fire brigades; we remember when we were connected with a little fire brigade in our home town in England that Chief Croker was then an authority, and we all looked to him for pointers, but as this is not a boost for Chief Croker we will not say any more on this subject at the present time, but will get down to our muttons. In connection with the Charles Francis Press, Moving Picture News, and back of these offices the space is occupied by two of the largest Webb presses and six Miehles, below this floor in the basement is the storage for paper and the heating apparatus. On the second floor, which is the press room proper, there are seventeen cylinder presses in full work. The third floor comprises the composing room, and in addition to the large body of compositors there are now seven linotype machines in active work day and night. This floor also has four small cylinder presses and seven jobbers. The fourth floor is occupied by the photo engravers and electrotyping department. The fifth and sixth floors comprise the bindery, occupied by some of the best machinery ever invented for knowledge of the fire drill, held bi-monthly, Chief Croker assigned every individual in person a certain position, and we illustrate a fire drill which took place last week, and to get illustrations for this article we got our friend John C. Hemment to come and take the snap shots. Figures 1 and 2 show the front on Thirteenth street with the men from the composing room, press room, etc., and figure 3 shows the whole of the employees assembled in the street.

(where we hold our office,) Chief Croker has instituted a series of fire drills, and when we tell our readers that we are allied with one of the finest printing establishments in America, and we say to them that on the first floor we have the main offices of Charles Francis Press and the folding, delivering, assembling, and stitching, gluing on the covers, etc., etc., in an up-to-date bindery. The space occupied by these floors is 50x150 feet each and the full number employed throughout the various departments approximate three hundred souls. To keep these in full

These illustrations, and this article are published to point a moral and adorn a tale, and the thought that germinated in our mind was this: All the theaters of the City of New York, and not only New York, but every large city in the country, might adopt such a means to allay the fears of their patrons. Why not get a prominent fire chief to come in and give a theater drill? It might be very simple, even for the lecturer, or the song slide singer, (if he has got brains enough,) to explain to the audience wherein he is employed that a certain number of chairs, or rows of chairs should go to their right, and a certain number of others should take the exit to the left, while others should go forward to the stage entrances, and if the theaters are, as some of them in New York City are, four and five tiers up, they should be instructed to take certain rear, side or front exits to the fire escapes leading to the ground. By adopting these means we feel sure that nine-tenths of the fear of any fire would be entirely eliminated from the minds of the theater-goers wherever they may be situated.

As an example we might take the way the children of our public schools are being trained. They are taught to form themselves in certain positions as soon as the fire bell rings, and at the command of their teachers, they go in such and such a way, and in two minutes, oftentimes two and three thousand children are out into the street. Take an audience of any theater of say 299. They could be emptied into the street in less than two minutes. If we take as a criterion this five-story building of the Charles Francis Press, where the three hundred employees were on the street in less than two minutes, we think it is exceedingly simple to empty a ground floor building in less than two minutes. If we go to those holding 2,000 or more, the exits are ample and fully equipped for all that may be needed, and can be emptied in a very short space of time. Will the various authorities put these practices in operation, or is it too much trouble? Would it not be as well for every exhibitor in the country to adopt this principle even though the larger theaters will not? By so doing the whole of the risk and fear that some of the city authorities have will be eliminated from their minds and full free safety from the moving picture show assured.

In addition to the above opinions we have expressed, the following suggestion by John L. Clower might be worth trying:

"If all the moving picture places were compelled to show on the screen, at the commencement of every exhibition, a film showing the actual results of the burning of a film in the booth in a show there would be no excitement in the audience when such an accident occurred. It would educate the people to such things. When we first had electric light a fuse would burn out and all would flee, expecting a fire, but who would run from such a thing to-day? The same is true of the pictures. No fire can extend beyond the booth, hence why be frightened?"

TEACH MORALS BY MOVING PICTURES

From Boston a correspondent writes that they are beginning to teach morality in the public schools by means of photographs and cinematography from actual life, showing the pupils what is right and what is wrong. Our correspondent says that the first test was given in the public schools of Fitchburg, a suburb of Boston. He says the pictures were taken in proper series and will impress the children's minds to the rights and wrongs of certain questions arising in everyday school life such as fights between the boys, squabbles among the girls, playing of games fairly and unfairly, finding some of them in baseball or such like games making illegal touches and whose proving to the boys where they are wrong, the teacher gives a few words of explanation which may frequently broaden out into quite an elaborate lecture. A number of these lectures have been prepared by Milton Fairchild, the originator of the product. Some of the lectures and pictures were given last week.

We want to give credit where credit is due and will say that the work is strictly under the direct supervision of Professor H. C. Barbour, of the Fitchburg High School. In addition to this we learn that Professors George F. Moore and James H. Ropes of Harvard have served in the capacity of advisers for the plan. We will look with a great deal of interest to the extension of this scheme both far and near. It is well known that other schools are awakening to the value of moving pictures as an aid to education and the NEWS has done its quota in awakening this interest. We have letters from New York educationalists and various centers of the industry even from Saskatchewan, who are extremely interested in educational matters. We note with interest the large and growing demand for something along educational lines which will ultimately tend to elevate the industry to the position it ought to occupy.

MARION LEONARD SHANGHAIED!

Ocean Liner Tries to Steal Gem Leading Lady! But the Captain Finally Surrenders the Prize Captive and She Is Safe Again In Our Midst. Marion Leonard Cried—Well, Even Captains Are Not Granite

Talk about popularity! Say, everything else is a whisper when it comes to the Big Shout in film circles that goes by the name of Marion Leonard. The rest of them are only echoes, she's the original Noise. She's the Desirable Citizeness, the favorite of two hemispheres, because there are only two. Shortly prior to her engagement to the Gem Motion Picture Company Miss Leonard rambled all over Europe on an all-summer tour. Her personality, her irresistible charm, her sweet loveliness and lovely sweetness, got working on the denizens of the Old World, and when she left to return to this country and make great pictures for Gem, Europe was cast in gloom. The continent went into the wholesale devastation business. That's why the wars broke out. They had to give vent to their feelings in some way, so Italy, Russia, Turkey, Persia and Brooklyn went on a rampage to sooth their nerves. Even distant China heard the rumble, and opened the battle field for business.

But Miss Leonard lingered on in the great and glorious country. And Europe, yearning for her blithe self, was forced at last to take drastic measures to effect her return to the vast and dreary void that the continent was without her. So it commissioned the Kronprinzessin Cecilie to abduct and transport her thither.

This is how the near-calamity occurred:

The Gem Motion Picture Company had arranged with the captain of the steamer to take a few scenes for some local color for a forthcoming Gem release, "He Would a Sailor Be." Fifteen members of the Gem Company were to figure in the scene, and the party was lost in the surging throngs that were bidding good-bye to friends and dear ones. The camera man had a little trouble in getting his apparatus by the customs officer on his return to shore, and he didn't have time to see that every one left the ship. Some of the officers had volunteered earlier in the morning to show Miss Leonard over the vessel, and her work over, awaiting the call of the camera man to round up the company, with seven others she accepted the kindness of the officers, and started on her tour around the vessel. Of course, the apparent kindness on the part of the officers of the vessel was the ruse whereby they were to effect Miss Leonard's abduction. But the sweet little lady, with that trust in her fellow-men that only enhances her charm, assigned no other motive to the offer than a kind interest in herself and the other members of the company. The first they knew of the foul plot was when they observed the vessel sailing down the bay. That's when the hysterics started. Miss Leonard was panic-stricken more or less, but she tried to keep up the nerve of the party. Two women insisted on fainting, and were rather consistent about it. Miss Leonard had a busy few minutes convincing them that that wasn't a very effective means of bettering the situation. But it was a predicament. Here they were sailing for Europe with nothing but despair, with not even a toothbrush in the crowd.

The women wept, the men railed and stormed at the storm rail. The camera man, in the meantime, had telephoned Stanner E. V. Taylor, the producer of the company, who was rushing down to the Battery in an automobile. For once, the self-composed, cool, calculating Mr. Taylor was excited. Arriving at the Battery, he at once got a tug, the Dalzelline, Captain Keene commanding, reputed to be one of the fastest tugs in the harbor. Mr. Taylor urged the captain to go full speed in pursuit of the ocean liner.

On board the ship, Babel reigned. Above the hysterical shrieks of the women, Miss Leonard's frantic efforts to calm them and the men's yells, the captain's stentorian voice was heard. He demanded to know why they had not taken leave at the "all-ashore" signal, and the reply of the unhappy actors that they had been too absorbed in their work to hear it, and that the invitation of his sub-officers was directly responsible for their plight, didn't exactly assauge the injured feelings of the captain. Captains are not very tender or sentimental creatures, and for a while it looked as though Bremen was to be the first stop.

Miss Leonard exerted all her wiles—remember her personality—on the captain. She pleaded, she begged, she—yes she did—she cried. The sorry little figure of woe at last penetrated the adamantine of the captain's heart. He decided to stop the ship at Quarantine, where the tugboat already was waiting for them.

That's the story of the thrilling rescue. We newspapermen, we are frank to state, first thought it was a "plant," but we are convinced now that it was a bona fide accident. In an interview with Miss Leonard after her thrilling experience, she said:

"I can't say very much just now. I'm glad it's over. I feel as though I have just awakened from a distressing nightmare. The predicament in which we so suddenly found ourselves was upsetting, to speak mildly. When it looked as though the captain didn't care less than a hang whether we went to Germany or not, we got a definition of despair that was stronger than any you can find in Websters. And when he finally decided to stop the ship at Quarantine, we knew what happiness was, I'll tell you.

"I'm glad it's over. The others in the party don't know it's over yet."

Here we interrupted her to tell her that we had heard she had cried real tears. She frowned a little, and said:

"Well, I did it just to be sociable. All the other women in the company were manufacturing the salt pearls, and I thought it was my duty to my sex to do likewise. We felt better after it, too—but you men won't understand that."

From the appearance of those who had gone through the gruelling strain, it looked as though the only part of the occurrence that was a plant was the intention of the captain to really abduct them.

Among those who "also ran" down the ship's ladder into the tug-boat besides Miss Leonard, were W. A. Howe, W. Graham Velsey, George V. Frothingham, Josephine Crowell, Claire Whitney and Lillian Coffin.

"He Would a Sailor Be" got a little too much local color, from the standpoint of the Gem bunch.

GAUMONT DURBAR FILMS

One of the most remarkable feats ever known in the way of quick transportation of moving picture films has been "put over" by the Gaumont Company. The first of the series of pictures of the Delhi Durbar will be ready for the market on Monday, January 15th. The first of the Durbar celebrations occurred and was filmed by the Gaumont photographer on December 12th, 1911; the first shipment of films arrived here on Tuesday, January 9th. To use an American expression that was "going some." It seems almost impossible to realize that in less than a month's time these films traveled here from the extreme opposite side of the earth, some 16,000 miles. Nevertheless this is a fact, and this beautiful film was shown to one of our staff the day following its arrival here.

This film shows a number of interesting scenes which happened on that memorable day for all those present, the 12th of December, when King George V. of England was crowned Emperor of India, with all the pomp and display that an Oriental country affords.

One of the most impressive scenes in the picture, with all due respect to their majesties, is the review of the veterans of the Indian wars. To the writer it was very touching indeed to see the remainder of those who weathered it through the terrible Indian wars in safety —or rather succeeding in holding on to the thread of life, for as is to be expected many show signs of the hardships which they underwent.

The coronation ceremonies which took place beneath a magnificent triumphal arch, were, as would be expected, a dignified happening amid most gorgeous surroundings. Beneath the arch in a space approached from every side by wide marble steps were situated the throne chairs, which during the ceremony were occupied by their majesties. As the king and queen mounted the steps, the trains of their gorgeous robes borne by the train bearers, by the side of each walked with solemn deferential air Hindoos bearing large and richly decorated sun shades, which were lowered only when the shade of the canopy was reached. Following the coronation came the proclamation when all heads were bared and cries of allegiance and royalty rent the air. Then came the pledging of allegiance to their newly crowned emperor by the Indian princes. This was a very impressive scene, each in his turn bowing low to his sovereign, and laying at his feet his sword—raising the sword again after recognition from the sovereigns, and backing out of the royal presence.

It was indeed a treat to be allowed to view this film, and a like pleasure is in store for all patrons of Independent, for we feel sure that no Independent exhibitor will allow his program to be completed without this film. Other celebrations of the Durbar will follow this one as rapidly as they can be gotten out. Among those to follow will be the great elephant parade which was delayed on account of the king's hunting expedition.

Another beautiful film which by the way is hand colored, is entitled, "Heaven's Messenger," and is one of the prettiest little romances we have ever seen. The locations for the settings of this picture are of course in France. The picturesqueness of the story is much added to by the insertion of the old-fashioned water wheel. It is a peasant story and very beautifully and simply told in the picture. The heroine of the story is a beautiful young peasant girl in love with a plain peasant boy, to whom her father takes a dislike, forbidding his daughter to have anything to do with him. As she is persistent in her intention of marrying him the father forbids her his house and the girl is turned out on the street, carrying all her belongings in a bundle. She comes to the home of her sweetheart's mother, who takes her in. The young pair are married, and a child is born, the mother of the young woman comes to see the baby, and among them they devise a plan by which her father can be won over. The baby is put in a wicker basket and floated down the stream to the mill where the old man works. He takes the child out of the basket wondering. By the time the others arrive he is so much taken up with the baby that he immediately forgives his daughter, the little child proving a messenger from Heaven indeed.

The first of the Gaumont regular releases from the American Branch of the firm, the American Company being under the control of the Parisian firm, will be "Christian Martyrs," January 27th. The fact of the Durbar films not being released before is on account of all the films not being received, and all Exchanges requiring to be supplied at the same time, it was therefore necessary to withhold them until a little later date.

The Gaumonts will release two a week. The Saturday release will be dramatic and hand colored, the Tuesday, will be comedy.

A few weeks later the Gaumont Company will put out a Gaumont weekly which will consist half of European incidents and half American.

With reference to the "Christian Martyrs," there will be one-sheet and three-sheet posters supplied.

MIGNON ADVERTISING TIPS

From the Solax Offices

The following is a statement issued by Madame Alice Blache, the president of the Solax Company, in regard to the Solax production of "Mignon" which is to be released Friday, February 2d.

"Before we decided to furnish exhibitors with music for our feature photopera, 'Mignon,' we consulted with an authority on musical programs. We were advised that our feature production may be accompanied in three different styles. We could get an orchestration and a number of selections covering different parts of the opera and a potpourri or a medley of the most popular airs, with scores for both violin and piano.

"After some discussion we decided that it would be impracticable to furnish orchestration of 'Mignon,' as the majority of picture theaters employ only a pianist. Some exhibitors, of course, employ both a pianist and violinist. Hence for practical purposes an orchestration would be out of the question. However, those prosperous exhibitors who use full orchestras will be supplied with orchestrations on request.

"We finally decided on the 'Potpourri' or the medley of the tunes from the opera, because its scores are for both piano and violin and because it can be played in about sixteen or eighteen minutes, which about covers the full length of the reel. The medley will give the proper atmosphere, and if the musicians exercise a degree of discernment, they will suit the action of the picture to the musical spirit of the opera. Thus an intelligent interpretation of the picture will eventuate.

"Very often an exhibitor may have a feature subject on his program and still do substantially nothing to swell his box-office receipts. Whether he overlooks his opportunities because he lacks enterprise or because he has a negative knowledge of advertising, we are not in a position to determine. Suffice to say that he is negligent. This negligence costs him heavily.

"In advertising our production of 'Mignon,' we are endeavoring to pave the way of the exhibitor as much as a manufacturer is able to. We are not only putting out a drawing attraction of exceptional merit, but we are going to furnish the exhibitor with the ammunition with which to draw.

"We have in preparation a three-sheet poster, a special lobby display and special music, besides the regular material we are furnishing through the trade papers and our own weekly house organ. Cuts and "still pictures" will also be furnished on application. With all this material on hand from which to get thunder, the exhibitor can make a corking campaign.

"The exhibitor is in a position to appeal to the music-loving element as well as the artistic and pleasure-loving wings of his constituents. At any rate, do something, Mr. Exhibitor. We are giving you something good. Go out and get it, and then make a noise about it. Don't wait until your competitor gets you up against a solid wall. Don't be a deadhead. Make that a New Year's resolution!"

Olathe, Kan.—C. H. Hyer, F. R. Ogg and several other business men have formed a company capitalized at $15,000 and will build a new opera house.

THE LEGEND OF THE BALANCED ROCK

(Solax)

The country surrounding Colorado Springs has often been called the "Garden of the Gods." Poets and prosaic business men have sung the praises of that section. One of the most fascinating places near the Springs is the Balanced Rock, a huge stone projection from the earth, with a small base as round as a ball.

The rock stands as if suspended in the air like a house without a foundation. One is often cowered by its menacing aspect. The imaginative people living in the neighborhood tell many interesting stories about the rock. It is not only the subject of myths and legends, but is threateningly employed by mothers to subdue fractious children.

The Solax production, which is beautifully tinted and toned—thus showing to advantage the beauties of surrounding scenery—deals with a compelling legend which runs something like this:

Little Rosalie has a stepmother who is very cruel. One of those men who eat children for their breakfast thinks Rosalie will make a good meal, and so offers to buy her. Rosalie, not relishing the idea of a home in a cannibal's stomach, runs away.

She runs on and on until she finds herself in the Garden of the Gods. Here she falls asleep. Pollywaggs, a dwarf, happens along and sees her. In haste he goes off and brings his cohorts. They awaken the frightened Rosalie, but their kindness and reassuring manner instills her with trust. She tells them her story and they weep. They ceremoniously crown her their queen and pay her great deference.

But her happiness is soon ended when along comes the cannibal and takes her off to his cave and locks her up. Pollywags discovers the cave. The whole dwarf nation sets out to rescue their queen. They enlist the aid of Prince Sunshine, a bold knight. The knight and the cannibal meet in combat and the cannibal is worsted. He runs off and by magic ascends and takes refuge in an inascendable mountain of rock.

The cannibal comes to terms when the dwarfs begin to undermine and dig away the foundations of his refuge. The rock stands out with only a few feet of base. When the rock almost begins to topple, the cannibal throws down the key of his cave and the queen is rescued.

Prince Sunshine takes her in his arms and they are happy ever after, while the balanced rock stands a monument to her rescue and a cannibal's disappointment.

Marquette, Mich.—D. E. Rice, who has operated the moving picture theater in the Quale Building, on Main street, has sold it to Fred Zema and Arthur Herron.

LIFE IS A PLAY

the gifted bard once put into immortal words. But whether it is a comedy, drama or tragedy he neglected to state. Sometimes it is all three, with a suffragette ballet thrown in. Often, too, its humor and its tragedy are only divided by a hair-line, and in most cases it's a woman's hair. We humans are the only animals that make fools of themselves; and if sometimes our errors are redeemed, it is not because of our wisdom, but in spite of our folly. We prove these few facts in

An Explanation

September 21st, 1911, a franchise was voted unanimously by the Board of Directors, of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, to the GEM MOTION PICTURE COMPANY. Later, the makers of product whose quality could not stand competition, realizing that Marion Leonard, as a star in our productions meant cancellations, succeeded in working up a scare among themselves to such an extent that they succeeded in influencing enough votes among the Sales Co. Directors, to have the franchise rescinded arbitrarily the same day the franchise was granted. The matter was then laid over for the next Directors meeting, and the Sales Company would not then consider marketing our films, (which we claim to be the best on the market, whether Independent or Licensed), unless we paid a commission of two cents (2c) per foot to the Sales Co.

This would add an immense loss weekly in addition to the $40,000.00 we have already invested.

At the Sales Co. Directors meeting, January 10th, we tried to avoid litigation and trouble by offering to pay TWICE the amount in dues and assessments as any other Sales Co. manufacturer on a one release basis, and a bonus of $5,000.00, about $15,000.00, all told, for the privilege of marketing one reel a week. This they also voted down.

WHAT CHANCE for QUALITY HAS AN INDEPENDENT EXHIBITOR, IF CAPABLE MANUFACTURERS ARE SUPPRESSED?

To the many exchanges who have shown their appreciation of our product by ordering it, and also to the many, many hundreds of exhibitors who have written, commending us for our efforts, we sincerely thank you all, and regret to announce, that for the above reasons, the GEM will not release on the advertised date.

The REX Motion Picture Manufacturing Co., who intend making two releases weekly, commencing January 28, 1912, have purchased all our "Marion Leonard Gem Negatives."

PRACTICAL POINTED PARAGRAPHS OF INTEREST TO CAPITAL AND LABOR OF THE MOVING PICTURE AND STEREOPTICON TRADE

By Mary Lawton Metcalfe

YESTERDAY I happened in at the office of the Southern Railroad, Fifth avenue, New York, and was fortunate to find the eastern manager at his desk. Mr. Thwaite is a Southern man and so affable that I drew a sigh of satisfaction that he did not seem in such a beastly hurry as some of the elevated folk that they cannot give you the name of the station in American.

I talked with this gentleman on the amazing development of moving pictures to tell the story of that great, wonderful, beautiful Southland, where millions of fertile acres grow only weeds, because industry and capital have no imagination of what is waiting development.

Mr. Thwaite informs me that a splendid collection of land development films have been prepared by the Southern Railway and extraordinary interest is centered on moving pictures to attract attention to the possibilities already opened up.

Mr. M. V. Richards is manager of the land department with offices at Washington, D. C. I wrote at once at Mr. Thwaite's suggestion for an interview with Mr. Richards. As a writer for such homely topics as pure food, I want these railroad people to let me take up this matter of rice—the pearl of the Orient. It feeds two-thirds of the human race, and frantic housekeepers should be shown moving pictures of the South, where we grow this weed that has no dope. It must be introduced among the pure food pictures as a valuable substitute for meat.

It is most valuable to pass on the news of the good remarks heard of films to show the culture and treatment of cotton. I am told that the manufacturers of these educational, economic films can have them used in all the progressive schools if they are properly submitted by intelligent and educated representatives.

Mr. John R. Kendrick, a capitalist and publisher of trade journals, is in New York this week. This gentleman is one of the most successful Georgia men who crossed the Mason and Dixon line to build up a splendid national reputation in the carpet trade interests. A copy of The Moving Picture News was sent him yesterday and by return mail I have a letter of assurance that it is just in line with his latest enterprise.

The Chris. Hand Ocean Pier Company, of Camden, N. J., have responded to the demand of the inland towns and cities of New Jersey and Pennsylvania for a high-class amusement center and aggregation of seaside amusements.

It has secured one hundred and sixty feet frontage on the ocean side of Ocean City, extending to the surf. Superb site for a mammoth auditorium and moving picture theater. The first work of the company is to print its gold-edge prospectus, which shows an artistic and spacious theater and pier to be ready for next summer.

Mr. Kendrick is the treasurer of the wealthy and representative corporation that believes that the people must have healthy entertainment, and there is nothing more popular than moving pictures.

Philadelphia is not slow to take up Penns and pictures for good.

Last week I was introduced by our mutual friend, Mr. Spanuth, to a most interesting man and one to whom I suppose every man and woman of the trade—if they can pull out hatpins—make obeisance. Mr. Charles Efros was presented, he who stands shoulder to shoulder with Edison as the most prolific inventor. It seems to me the greater a man is, the easier he is to interview. When Mr. Spanuth told me how this tall, dark man has delved into the mysteries of mechanics, electricity, lights, shadows, wheels and things, I thought he would be so puffed up that only the writer, Miss Sparks, would be snuffed out without notes.

But Efros, the inventor, is genial, courtly, affable and merry. Just to think of it, with so many ideas buzzing and jigsaws and wheels running in his brains all the time.

The hour was late, but great Monsieur Efros promised to send brand new ideas to The News from off the reel, to tell the ladies and gents that the picture machines are only in the beginning of excellence. Improvements are being made every day.

There are certain lurid and inviting advertisements in the daily press of New York by certain men who advertise the most fabulous bargains in picture theaters. I sent an ambitious young gentleman who wanted to go from an airship factory to get a picture house. The advertisements were perfect fakes. Several personal letters I have written to get the truth of this matter, but those who advertise "Come quick and get onto the job" do not even answer for interview.

I wish The Moving Picture News would focus on this department and encourage capital to be invested, and theaters to be rented from advs. in their columns. We should then be sure that they were not delusive shadow forms and ignus fatui to chase after without ever reaching.

A friend of mine was telling me a few days ago what a brilliant success a little widow—not at all merry, or grassy—is making of her enterprise of running a picture house in New York. Her husband died suddenly and left her a barrel of unpaid bills. Out of the sale of her fads and fancies she scraped together a little money and hired a theater. She employs a capable man to project and manage, but she selects the best films in the market herself and is doing a land office business.

Enterprise and pluck will win out every time. Women have to hustle these days that storage eggs are five cents and "emphasized" butter forty-five.

Brave is the woman who can step out of society's ranks and take the initiative to pay a man's debts and earn grits for the family.

Turkey and China have been very much in the public eye recently.

The world's greatest need, we insist, is the distribution of knowledge. It is because pictures teach instantly that which the human tongue cannot impart that I am aroused to center all my enthusiasm on this department of education.

The person who comes from a section where modern history is being made is much more valuable as a moving picture of truth than that stuff which is read from the yellow press, or church papers.

Mr. John Abdel-Nour, a silk merchant, who has lived for years in New York, has recently returned from Hong Kong, China. This gentleman of Damascus is a Syrian and went abroad to the Orient, where he spent fifteen months in Hong Kong.

His story of the misery, crime, disease, dirt and shocking conditions of the Chinese, even in the English city, Hong Kong, makes one shiver with disgust.

"It would be well if moving pictures could be taken of the places and sights where this mass of humanity labor to make silks for the world. Leprosy is rampant everywhere. People with faces and hands covered with sores walk abroad. The Christian missionaries are murderers; all the American people should know.

"Yes, because the poor Chinese whom they convert are so few compared to the millions of heathens that love their gods and idols, when a street riot or dog fight starts, the few Christian Chinese are butchered first for spite.

"The missionaries are, in many cases, from the New York Bowery and enjoy life in good homes provided by American missionary societies.

"It is all awful for our churches to send money to foreign missions," said Mr. Abdel-Nour. "There are heathen enough in New York who have already come here to need all that missionary societies can spend."

Mr. Abdel-Nour has sailed for France for the winter, but his testimony deserves consideration.

Capital, lying around in banks at four per cent, might just as well walk out and go into new idea moving picture theaters. It is particularly so now in the thickly settled counties of the warm regions of the Gulf and South Atlantic, where, I am told, the greatest good is to be done and the most money made. The weather is warm down there, so that no fuel bill is needed in a theater.

Dec. 30, 1911. CHRYSE O. CALLAHAN

HAS VAUDEVILLE REACHED THE LIMIT OF ITS SPEED

By Robert Grau

THE theatrical manager and producer in recent years has had to contend with an almost constant competition from sources of a scientific and progressive character and it is a moot question as to how long the regular amusement providers can survive the constant encroachment on their no longer exclusive realm.

The motion picture, the phonograph, the player piano, and their kind have gradually been calling theatergoers patronage away from the establishments they have been wont to attend, and these with the increased interest in the automobile and aeroplane have created a condition so serious that the men who cater to the public entertainment in the older fashion are less inclined to assume great risks than at any time in the last twenty-five years, and now comes what may mean the most serious problem that this element has as yet had to cope with. We know that the scientific inventions have encouraged public entertainment on an enormous scale in the homes of a class identical with that which the amusement provider has depended on to make up his audiences. Therefore, the advent of "the theater in the home" though still in the primitive stage, may well cause alarm on the part of the theatrical manager.

The home theater and the intimate theater are the gradual evolution of the heretofore exclusive custom in vogue abroad—Madame Patti has in her castle at Craig y Nos, Wales, the most beautiful and concrete little playhouse to be found anywhere in the world. Although the seating capacity is but two hundred, the stage and technical investiture is equal to any playhouse in London or New York. The Camera Theater in Berlin undoubtedly started the intimate theater movement now spreading all over the world. This bijou temple of Thespis has a subsidy from the government and is also greatly aided by private parties, so that the policy of presenting not less than twenty new plays each season can be indulged in. "The little theater" in London has been successful also, in fact it was this little gem of a playhouse that provided the incentive for the erection of similar theaters in the mansions of London's ultra swell set, and it is the practical certainty of the custom finding great vogue in America that creates the managerial problem previously mentioned. The Edson Bradleys are the first in this country to erect a palatial home theater in their beautiful residence at Dupont Circle, Washington, D. C., and this announcement received so much publicity, when their plans became known, that several other wealthy members of the social set in different cities have already emulated them. The advent of these bijou theaters constitutes a new era. How much this may be due to the custom of late dining now-a-days may never be known, but if we go to the restaurants of the better class at eight o'clock in the evening we find every table taken and in some of these an exodus is not in order before nine o'clock, hence the public of high grade, such as one sees enter playhouses after nine and even after nine-thirty, may welcome these home and intimate theaters for a reason that the theatrical manager has not reckoned with.

It is this very condition that has caused the larger restaurants located in the theater zone to greatly improve and enlarge their entertainments. This to some extent was also due to the vogue characterizing the Folies Bergeres at the outset. At any rate that institution started a plethora of Cabaret shows while the class of performers engaged to participate in these were not much inferior to those seen in our best vaudeville theaters; in fact, the entertainments given in such establishments as Louis Martin's, Reisenwebers, the Hotel Knickerbocker, "The Garden," Shanleys and other hotels in the Long Acre district, were of such a character that the organization often referred to as the "vaudeville trust" has made a vigorous protest, with the result that an embargo has been placed on all the artists doing business with this association, which means that the vaudeville concern will refuse bookings to those appearing in these "food" resorts. Nevertheless, there are thousands of competent performers who are unable to find engagements in the theater, but whose talents are such that they become popular in the restaurants—then these change their names, go out of town for a period where reports of their "making good" are sent out, and in due course they are seen in New York's high-class theaters of varieties. The layman would be amazed were he to learn the facts about their stage idols in this respect.

The "food theater" found great vogue in California long before its advent in the East. "The Portola" in San Francisco was the pioneer institution and here the policy of presenting well-known vaudeville stars and even grand opera celebrities met with a vigorous public response, with a result that is now shown in the Golden Gate City in that the ever popular thoroughfare is dotted with similar resorts.

As a rule population increase provides a public to absorb all the additional sources for public entertainment, but the legitimate theaters and the producers who provide the attractions for them have had to face more competition and encroachments than any of their colleagues in other fields and yet these same producers of plays, operas and spectacles have to expend vastly more money to-day than when they had the public almost entirely to themselves. Salaries for stage talent to-day are at the highest rate they have ever been, and the cost of conducting a playhouse is about double what it was before the advent of motion pictures, automobiles, phonographs and the like.

At least one important group of managers has called a halt. The men who compose what is called the vaudeville trust, but in reality just a number of sensible business men, properly organized, have finally decided that the player is getting not only the majority of the profit but they now believe he is getting altogether more than is fair, so these gentlemen, noted for their conservatism and discernment, have announced that from now on no salary in excess of $2,500 a week shall be paid by any of their number.

The spectacle of these managers proclaiming their unwillingness to pay an individual more than $2,500 a week is indeed a unique one. One must presume then that there are many to whom this extraordinary sum is unsatisfactory. It means that Eva Tanguay, who recently demanded and received $3,000 weekly, will have to be satisfied with the smaller figure or else give her services to such few competitors as the so-called trust has, and in these days such competitors are not visible on the horizon.

The decision, however, to limit the inducement to great celebrities in vaudeville is suggestive of perhaps the first retrograde movement in that propitious field since the commencement of the present era, and the effect will be to end the ambitions, to induce the Bernhardts and the Lauders, and the Gaby Deslys to enter the variety theater ranks, and this is a decision that many will question the wisdom of, for who can say that Lauder has not been worth his price? Even $4,500 a week is not too much for a player who can draw $25,000 to $30,000 a week without exceptional support, and by the same mode of reasoning Eva Tanguay never has an idle week save from choice, hence the managers must regard her as cheaper at $2,500 a week than any other artist they can feature in her place, willing to accept smaller compensation.

Bernhardt received $4,000 weekly in a London Music Hall. It must have profited Messrs. Moss and Stoll else they would not re-engage the divine Sarah for four extra weeks. There is just one manager among the vaudeville magnates whose previous attitude in this respect leads me to doubt that he is in sympathy with any restrictive method as to the programs he shall present and that manager is Mr. Percy Williams. The writer will have to be shown where this gentleman has ever been associated with any retrograde movement in the field wherein he has labored so upliftingly, and it is extremely unlikely that he believes that the compensation to the star is the problem vaudeville managers have to solve. As a matter of fact the day will never come when a manager will not be found available to pay the price demanded by a real celebrity with a compelling draught at the box office.

AFTER MANY YEARS

Imp Release

Although the Christmas season is passed the spirit of it still lingers, and to some extent it is manifest in this film. The story of which has to do with the influence of good on some little children.

Two brothers part and take different paths. One of them makes a success in life; the other is, if not a failure, at any rate, not conspicuously flourishing.

It chances that both brothers are residents of the same city unknown to each other. The little daughter of the wealthy brother gives a children's party. This attracts the attention of a poorly dressed child, who is invited into the party out of pity. The child is taken sick and is carried home to her parents by the rich father of the party giving child. When the two fathers meet it is discovered that they are brothers. So they are brought together again by the always powerful influence of children.

The settings of this story are particularly attractive—the producer having gone to great pains to select locations that have not been worked to death.

A very pretty study of child life is shown in the children's party—this is so good, we think it would make the fortune of any film.

This drama comes as a relief to many recent Imp dramas, which have been highly dramatic in theme. "After Many Years" is of the lighter sentimental kind and will be appreciated on that account.

THE FLAG OF DISTRESS

Imp Release, January 20, 1912

The Saturday Imp comedies have acquired widespread popularity for their humorous subjects and acting. J. W. Cumpson, whose fame as a moving picture comedian is so widespread, appears in them and has already made millions of friends for himself.

In "The Flag of Distress" Cumpson gets a chance of which he takes the fullest advantage. "The Flag" is an emblem by which he conveys to his friends the desired information that his wife has him under such strict surveillance that he cannot accompany them to a masked ball. However, he contrives by a clever stratagem to elude the lady's vigilance, and he and his friends make their way to the masquerade, where they have a specially good time.

Meanwhile, the poor lady, in distress over the mysterious disappearance of her husband, consults the great detective, Mr. Sherlocko, who, picking up the "Flag of Distress" on the sidewalk is enabled to trace hubby to his destination, a dance hall, and not to, as the poor lady supposed, a place where his life was in danger.

A feature of the picture is the droll acting of H. S. Mack as the detective and the fun-making antics of J. W. Cumpson in the role of the erring hubby.

"The Flag of Distress" will no doubt be popular with the Saturday Imp audiences.

WARREN KERRIGAN IS MATINEE IDOL HERO

Warren Kerrigan, the leading man of the American Film Manufacturing Company and often termed "the handsomest man in the moving picture business," came in for a full-page writeup in the Chicago Tribune on Sunday, December 31st.

Mr. Kerrigan was shown in the center of a large heart, surrounded by zinc reproductions of love letters that he has received during his years as a motion picture actor. The article was headed, "How It Feels To Be a Motion Picture Matinee Idol," and there followed a dissertation on the annoyance of receiving a hundred love letters each week from young ladies he had never before seen. The body of the article was taken up with extracts from many letters from among "Handsome Jack's" conquests.

It was excellent enterprise on the part of the American and has been the cause of much speculative comment as to how Mr. Kerrigan may be expected to feel when some of the young women whose heart throbs have been laid bare apprise him of their sentiments. The article did not publish the writers' names, of course, but the fact may not alter the situation materially.

TURNING MOVING PICTURE THEATERS INTO CHURCHES

The moving picture industry is finding its way into every field of human endeavor and one of its latest entrances is in the religious sphere. The present aim of both manufacturer and manager is moral up-lift and education; but the turning of moving picture theaters into churches is something out of the ordinary. This is what is being done in Washington, D. C., by Rev. Zed. H. Copp in the establishing of Sunshine City Temple. The movement has been accomplished by the efforts of Mr. Copp, the hearty co-operation of the Miller Brothers, managers of the Leader, and of other theater managers, the generosity of the Exchanges, and the interest of the public. Such a unique enterprise in a line of modern progress has caught the attention of others connected with this industry, resulting in the offering of theaters in various sections of the city for religious services. Already Sunshine City Temple has become a fixture in the National Capital.

An interview with Mr. Copp revealed many interesting points. "I ought to state at the off-set," he began, "that I am a convert to the very moving pictures which I am now using to convert others to an even higher enlightenment. Yes, six years ago I will be remembered as appearing in the District courts against the immoral tendency of the moving pictures then shown in Washington. I succeeded in making these officials watchful, but the cinematograph was not hushed. I became more watchful myself, and I have seen this industry drag itself out of the mire and rise triumphant to its present high standing. So strong has been my conversion that I am preaching the Word of God in those very houses with the very machine I tried to banish.

"I am aware that my work is in a pioneer stage, but so exceptional has been the reward of my labors that this epoch will be comparatively short. I began with morning services in the Leader, but within a short month, I was able to secure the co-operation of other theaters. Among these are the Royal, the Princess and the Scenic. In this manner has 'extension' work started at once and later a missionary movement will be possible in the outlying districts. It is a great work, incalculable in its results and limitless in its extent.

"In my past religious endeavors, I have most enjoyed working among the poorer districts of the city. It is this element I will reach in the turning of moving picture theaters into churches. In a canvass of a large section of Washington, I found that lack of money, either for proper clothing or the demands of the church, was the chief cause of the people not attending religious services. Of course, there was mingled with this a pride to dress as well as and give as much as their neighbors. Therefore, in establishing the Sunshine City Temple, I offer everything free and finances are only mentioned in the negative.

"At the same time I realized," went on Mr. Copp, "that these people must be approached in religion through some common avenue. Many were ignorant, unused to anything that savored of culture. They must be amused as well as instructed. So I hit upon the moving picture with its universal language of action.

"And why not?" questioned my speaker with added enthusiasm. "Do not the masses enjoy these exhibitions—from the street urchin to the college professor? Why should religion bar that which best impresses and instructs? Seek that means which invites the crowd and you will get the crowd. Accentuate its best side and your audience will be compelled to see it. Ministers may fight against the moving picture, but they must yield in the end; just as they once fought the stereopticon and failed.

"In establishing Sunshine City Temple in the Leader Theater, I scarcely expected the hearty co-operation I have received. As yet I am doing the work alone, but shortly I will need others to assist me. The services last one hour, including one Biblical film with a text and a short address while it is in progress, one photoplay with a good moral, hymns, vocal or instrumental solos, short prayers and announcements. Every one is given a cordial welcome and invited to return again. This sort of reception means much to the poor and lowly, who usually believe that nobody cares about them.

"I find a dearth of Biblical subjects in the motion picture form and I have some difficulty in finding text for the photoplay, or in securing a photoplay with a simple moral. Oh, I did not expect to have it easy in selecting my program for these services; but I believe with a demand for such subjects the manufacturers will be ready to make such reels. It is my intention to interest sufficient churches in using the moving picture for the Sunday School lesson that some company will furnish these films weekly. I would not expect reels to be made for which there is no market, but a market will be created at no distant date. I wish some company would illustrate the Lord's Prayer; I could make immediate use of this.

"The object of Sunshine City Temple is full salvation: for the body, recreation; for the mind, education; for the spirit, faith. You would be surprised at the motley congregation—the well-dressed and the ragged; the erect and the bent. I have created order and attention out of what threatened to be chaos. Some have entered in order to see a free moving picture show; others, for curiosity. The cause is naught to me, just so they come. It is my part to make them continue to come.

"The future of Sunshine City Temple, so humbly begun, is limitless. I hope to build a big temple one of these days in the Capital of our nation, which will comprise not only the church with its moving pictures, but offices for all kinds of business, reading rooms, gymnasium, and an information bureau for everything, everybody, everywhere. I advertise 'social services for Washington' but it is my desire to offer 'social services for the United States' in the near future. The edifice I have in mind will be an adornment as well as a service to the City of Washington. I expect to get members of Congress interested in my plan and make a National movement out of it.

"Now that the door is opened, others will enter. The moving picture has simplified science and education; let it simplify religion by accentuating the good qualities of mankind and the sweetness of human nature, so that evil tendencies will be thrust into the background and forgotten."

AMERICAN FACTORY READY FOR OCCUPANCY

Despite the pessimistic beliefs to the contrary, the new $50,000 factory of the American Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, is now ready for occupancy. The structure was promised by architect and builder for January 15th, and the former managed to precede the cold weather by a few days.

It is a thoroughly modern property, no expense being spared in providing all those facilities which make for more efficiency and better work.

The first actual work will be started in a few days, when the present factory quarters will be vacated.

The property is located at Evanston and Devon avenues, Chicago, close to Lake Michigan, where clear air and a maximum of sunshine are assured.

The realty secured was purchased from Edward Hines, the famous lumber magnate, at an extraordinary high price for factory property. This is due to the fact that the neighborhood adjacent to the plant is one of the best in Chicago for residence purposes and has advanced in value more rapidly than any other. It is believed by President Hutchinson that the realty itself is an excellent investment.

Chicago, Ill.—J. Kohlmann will erect a new theater at 5419 South Ashland avenue at a cost of $6,000.

Pomona, Cal.—Architect Myron Hunt, of Los Angeles, has completed plans for the open air Greek Theater to be erected by Pomona College.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

By G. F. Blaisdell

IN THE construction of palatial homes for the display of motion pictures the West maintains its supremacy. Denver is now to the front, with two theaters, one of them being actually under way, on the same block. The cost of the two structures will approximate $200,000. The Paris, to be owned by the Paris Amusement Company, will be a four-story, marble-front building, with a seating capacity of 2,500. The second theater is to be built by S. L. Baxter, proprietor of the Isis Theater, and will seat 2,200. With the completion of these two houses Denver will possess seven picture theaters with a combined seating capacity of over 10,000.

Innocent looking suitcase leaning against pillar on platform of Union Station at Albany. More or less innocent newspaper, moving hither and yon at the whim of a half gale, snuggles around suitcase. Less innocent smoker, after lighting cigar, throws away match. Match lands in newspaper; blaze results. Man who has been quizzing station master makes what is reported as a wild dive for suitcase and separates it from fire. Station agent gets real wide awake; wants to know if there's dynamite in the bag. Custodian of last-named article replies rather testily: "No; but there's a thousand dollars' worth of moving picture films in it, and, if those films had got going, besides my loss there would have been some real excitement around here."

The films so narrowly saved from destruction by the "wild dive" of Arthur H. Sawyer, of the Kinemacolor Company, were later shown in Harmanus Bleecker Hall for the benefit of the Homeopathic Hospital, netting for that institution about $1,500.

For two years O. T. Crawford, of St. Louis, has each week furnished without expense to the city a set of films for the entertainment of the inmates of the infirmary. At times 300 are gathered at the exhibitions, some so feeble as to almost crawl. The only money appropriated by the city has been a small amount to pay a musician and a manager. The failure of the city authorities to provide for the meager sum heretofore given has aroused resentment among those interested in the institution, and as a result the City Council will give a hearing to all who may be concerned.

Staid Methodists of Morristown, N. J., are reported as having been shocked, when at a Sunday School's Christmas entertainment, held on a Wednesday evening, children applauded pictures of the repulse of "bad Indians" by presumably good white men. Well, what would they? Should the children have cried?

The Chicago Record-Herald says that a Michigan iron mine has paid $15,000 to a Chicago motion picture manufacturer for taking a series of films in its mine.

The dramatic field seems to be about as well developed as the present market will warrant. May the same be said of the commercial field?

For the holiday pleasures of the troops in and around Tripoli, the Italian Government caused to be made motion pictures of village groups in the sections from which the soliders were recruited. The Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, in commenting on the foregoing, expresses the thought which must arise in the mind of every one who has ever been an "exile from home:"

"The kindly motive of the Italian authorities compels admiration, but is its philanthropic device likely to work out in the manner expected? To the lonesome wanderer far from his own fireside there is no song more distressing than 'Home, Sweet Home.' Reminders of intimate associations 'once loved and lost a while' are apt to depress rather than cheer the temporarily homeless. It will be interesting to learn later the effect produced by the moving pictures on the soldiers. Should it be beneficial, the military authorities of other nations will doubtless be quick to take a lesson from Italy's altruistic ingenuity."

H. H. Buckwalter, manager of the General Film Company, and some of his associates, recently decided to reduce worn-out films into merchantable wares, after extracting the silver, of which there is said to be about two dollars' worth in a hundred pounds of film. Denver was selected as the site of the proposed factory, owing to its central position as regards Western territory, but the excessive freight rates caused the abandonment of the city in the hills and the business will be located in New York City.

New Jersey is sometimes accorded the honor of ranking first as the home—perhaps it would be harsh to say inventor—of strange or of freak stories. Connecticut seems to be at least a close second. The Messenger of New Canaan perpetrates the following (just note the fact that the libeled are "foreigners"):

The story is told that at a recent moving picture show at the New Canaan Opera House two foreigners were present who sat in back seats. At the close of the show one asked the other:

"How did you like the show?"

"It was all right," responded the other, "but the next time I am going to get a front seat. From where we sat I couldn't hear a word the actors said."

Captain Hagemann, of the North German Lloyd liner Kronprinzessin Cecilie, was pretty warm on the occasion of his last departure from New York. Before he sailed fourteen actor folk and a camera man had been doing business on his decks. Up to this point the stories tally. It is said all went ashore but four women. Also it is said all departed but four men and four women. It is agreed that the camera man remained aboard also.

Both are good stories. The films will show which is right.

Taking the Sun's version, the story was the familiar one of too-long lingering friends. Four tearful, or apparently tearful, women appealed to the captain to put them ashore. The skipper, while endeavoring to induce the women to modify their lamentations and promising to see what could be done, heard the whirring click of a camera. Turning, he saw it bearing directly on himself. Language—the husky stuff that only sea captains can use and escape with their lives—resulted. Tug appears alongside (with another camera man), with request for rope ladder over the side of the Cecilie. The captain, however, has had experiences with women and with rope ladders. The two non-affinities are bracketed; distinctly not separated. He spoiled a spectular film and lost a valuable half-hour by unaccommodatingly lowering an accommodation ladder—which, of course, was exactly what the scenario did not call for. The Sun's story concludes:

"The picture man who had worked his machine aboard went down last and was not included in the film of the expert on the rescuing boat. Captain Hagemann's farewell was not cordial. The young women kept up the agony until they stepped into the tug. The picture men said they had a bully show, especially of Captain Hagemann's muttering 'Donnerwetter!'"

Because he finds he cannot reach all of the 2,500 Italians in Fitchburg, Mass., the Rev. Father Carpinella, of St. Anthony's, has instituted a moving picture show for Sunday afternoons and evenings. The pastor has organized an orchestra from among the young men of his parish, and music will supplement the alluring features of the program. The afternoon pictures will follow the session of the Sunday School and the evening entertainment follows the regular evening service, which closes at eight o'clock. The afternoon show is intended for children, although adults may attend. Children will pay a nickel and grown folks a dime.

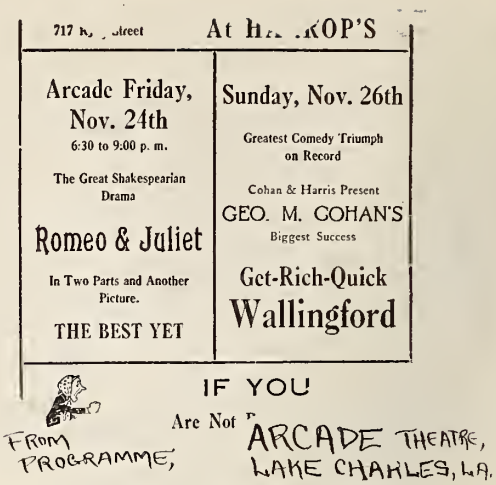
PRESENTATION TO FRED. J. BALSHOFER

Mr. Fred. J. Balshofer, Vice President of the New York Motion Picture, and General Manager of the Bison Company, its Western branch, was recently given the surprise of his life, in the shape of the presentation of a beautiful solid silver loving cup, presented to him by the members of the Bison Company, as expression of their appreciation for the many past courtesies extended to them by the manager and directors and officers of the company. The cup was a very large one, measuring 24 inches in height, and with a width of 13 inches from handle to handle. The cup bore the following engraved inscription and names:

"Presented to Fred. J. Balshofer, General Manager, by the members of the Bison Moving Picture Company, on the occasion of his birthday, November 2nd, 1911. J. B. Sherry, Warren Ellsworth, Raymond B. West, Charles Avery, Richard V. Young, Jesse McGaugh, Bud Powers, Harry Davis.



FILM FEATURES ALONGSIDE STAGE FEATURES

The above was torn from the program of one of the largest of Southern theaters, and serves as a sign of the great advance of the motion picture. The "Romeo and Juliet" presentation mentioned is the Thanhouser film of that name.

CHICAGO LETTER

A very practical and economical idea for the changing of the singers in five-cent theaters has been thought out by Mr. C. A. Anderson, vice-president of The Exhibitors' Association of Illinois, Branch No. 2, which idea has been successfully carried out by Mr. Anderson in forming a theater circuit including eight theaters, the majority of which are on the northwest side, within the district of Forty-eighth avenue on the west, Halsted street on the east, Twenty-second street on the south and Belmont avenue on the north. Ten theaters are as many as it is cared for in this combination, which is purely for changing of singers each week and does away with the commission of theatrical agencies. No singer is paid higher than $15 a week, and Mr. Anderson stated that it is not hard to obtain a good singer at this salary, as they are usually glad to go where they can get a steady booking. In this manner there is no expense at all incurred in this venture except the salary of the singer, who usually proves to be very good. The theaters at the present in this combination are: The Hermosa, Magnolia, Winchester, Grand Avon, Cornina, Roslyn, Bismarck and the Cupid.

A fireless film has been invented which it is thought will be very successful and if used to a great extent will be the means of reducing moving picture theater panics. A demonstration of the incombustible film was recently given before the Berlin Chemical Society, Berlin, Germany, and was pronounced a decided success.

The following film men have recently been elected to represent the ways and means committee on the Chicago Association of Commerce: Mr. Hutchison, of the American Film Manufacturing Company; Mr. O. Davidson, of the Selig Polyscope Company, and Mr. Watterson Rothacker, of the Industrial Moving Picture Company.

It is said that the moving picture men of South Bend, Indiana, have organized a company to manufacture advertising pictures, which will be sold independent of the Sales Company and Patents Company.

The big engineers who are responsible for the construction of the huge dam at Keokuk, Iowa, which will harness the Mississippi, recently were entertained at the Laemmle Film Service here where moving pictures of the work of construction were shown to them. They all spoke highly of the exhibition and left Laemmle's more pleased and interested in the moving pictures than before.

Industrial pictures were recently taken showing fishing through the ice on Lake Superior. They are to be used in advertising a certain brand of canned fish.

There is sure style to the manner of taking flashlight pictures by Local No. 2 of the I. A. T. S. E. here. Recently a picture was taken where celluloid film was used for a flashlight, although I did not find out if this was the excellent work of Frank Murphy—still it might not have been. I asked the boys if there was any special news this week and one of them told me to take a chance and put in the following daffydils:

"If a big show couldn't see a quarter, would a nickel show?"

"If your booth becomes too warm, freeze your carbon."

Jack Miller, the business agent of the Union, to help the comedy came along and told about a new theater, which was just built, where no switches were used in cutting off the current for the machine, as the electrician told the manager all that was necessary to put out the light in machine was to open the carbon and the light would go out; if it didn't, he should blow it out. The manager thought better of this idea and has now a regular switch to cut off the power, which he is well pleased with.

The Devon Theater at 6417 North Clark street, was damaged by fire a short time ago, loss amounting to $800, which ruined the former screen and also a great amount of scenery. It is the intention of the manager to install a Sunlight Metallic Cloth Curtain.

The manager of the Parkway Theater, at 2736 North Clark street, just south of Diversey boulevard is contemplating a change in the vaudeville program of the theater, eliminating some of the vaudeville acts and increasing the number of pictures shown, which will show the tendency of the patrons toward a picture program and if satisfactory will make another large vaudeville house into an excellent picture house.

Mr. Jerome Abrams, manager of the Chicago office of the Feature & Educational Film Company, left Chicago last week for a trip in the extreme West, and will probably return about the first of next week. During Mr. Abrams' absence the Chicago office will be in charge of Mr. C. R. Lungren. Mr. Abrams wishes to notify all State right buyers that if they see a "Z" in town to get in touch with him at once, as both "Zigomar" and "Love and Aviation" are features for which State rights are being rapidly disposed of.

Our smiling friend, Mr. E. Mandelbaum, President of the Feature & Educational Film Company, Cleveland, Ohio, was in town last week. He left for Indianapolis Saturday, where he will open the fourth branch office of the Feature & Educational Film Company. By the looks of Mr. Mandelbaum he must have had a prosperous New Year and from conversation with him, his only wish is that there were ninety states in the Union, as the State rights for "Zigomar" and "Love and Aviation" are selling so fast that unless he gets another large feature soon his office force will be sitting idle, which they fully deserve as they are now working almost day and night in getting out this work.

During my visitation of the exhibits in the past month, a great amount of comment has been made about the new yellowish tint appearing in the Imp films, and as several of the exhibitors are interested about same, I asked Mr. Norman the object of the Imp Company in using this tint. He informed me that it has improved the quality of the films and also the photography, as the picture has a tendency to show a much lighter effect than with an ordinary dark background, thereby showing a bright picture with less current than usual.

Miss Minnie Dienstag and Mrs. Maurice Fleckles are again back in Chicago, after a pleasant visit in New York City, where they have been since the holidays visiting friends. Mrs. Fleckles made the trip especially to visit her sister, Mrs. Carl Laemmle.

Selig's "Cinderella" was shown at the Oak Theater, Milwaukee and Western avenues, last week. The evening's program consisted of three "Cinderella" reels, one spot and one illustrated song. The seating capacity of the Oak is about 800, making it profitable to put on this production in the proper manner, which excellence was added to with a lecture delivered by Mr. Luman Mann, who is different than most lecturers by not making a short comment on each particular incident, but made a continuous story throughout the showing of the pictures, which aids one greatly in grasping each detail.

ONLY a few days ago I decided to steal a march on the Reliance Film Company, which has been modestly silent as far as publicity is concerned, other than as regards the excellent quality of the work they have been sending out.

inviting; passing from the rear to the reception room I was met at the entry to one of the largest and finest equipped scene and property rooms in the country, by Mr. Anthony Sullivan, assistant stage director, and conducted by him to the second floor to the business offices, where I was treated to a very pleasant chat with Mr. J. V. Ritchey, manager of production. Mr. Ritchey, as is known to most of our readers, hails from Chicago, and has but recently connected himself with the Reliance Film Company.

After picking the brains of Mr. Ritchey to a finish I found my way to the lower floor, where I was again met by the smiling good-naturedness of Mr. Sullivan, who, however, glided a second time easily out of reach of my foils by afflicting me upon the polite patience of Mr. Geo. Terwilliger, scenario editor for the company. In Mr. Terwilliger I found a genial companion of the pen, and I fear I encroached much upon the precious time of a busy man. Mr. Terwilliger in his turn escorted me to the able stage director of the Reliance Company, Mr. James Kirkwood. Mr. Kirkwood who, though made up past recognition as one of the principal characters on the picture, one of the scenes of which he was about to rehearse, nevertheless kindly gave me a few moments in which to acquaint myself with him and with his work and a few of his ideas. Mr. Kirkwood was with the original production of "The Girl of the Golden West," and though he has had large experience as an actor is unwilling to speak freely of his own accomplishments. Mr. Kirkwood states that it is much harder work to pose for moving pictures than to act upon the stage, because there are more limited facilities of "getting over" the intention of the piece—the action of the piece must tell the story without the aid of the voice. Also he makes the statement that the best actor is often a failure in moving pictures. As I bid him adieu he said jokingly, "You needn't say anything about me except that I am tall and slight, with red hair, and a beard which is in a state of incipiency." However, I will venture no information as to the color of Mr. Kirkwood's hair on my own authority, or on the authority of his joke—I would not for worlds vouch for the fact that he was not without a wig. While in the property room I ran across Mr. Edward Shulter, technical director, hard at work at a table in the midst of the confusion of setting of scenes. In the projection room two excellent films were shown me, "Rosana's Dream," for release January 27th, and "Solomon's Son," for release January 31st. The latter was a Jewish story told in the picture with dignity, minus the burlesque atmosphere usually attending the Gentile's version of a Jewish story. The former was one of the first of a series of pictures in natural history which are being gotten out by the Reliance Film Company, and was original and unique in conception. The story is of a little girl, who after putting a number of toy animals away in a miniature Noah's ark, falls asleep, dreaming that on taking them out again they have all come to life. The little girl in the picture does actually take from the little ark one after another, all kinds of small animals, even to the snake, laying upon the table with her baby hands two or three venomous snakes four and five feet long. It was marvelous how this child of only five years played, apparently untouched by fear, with the different animals. The name of this brave little girl is Rosana Logan.

The factory of the Reliance Film Company, which covers 10,000 square feet, is at Neptune avenue and West Twentieth street, Coney Island. The company has installed thousands of dollars worth of new machinery there. The factory force numbers about 65 people. All departments at the factory are under the careful supervision of Mr. J. C. Graham, manager, another new member of the firm. In addition to this the office force, stock company under regular contract, and studio force vary from 45 to 75 people. Two releases a week are turned out by the Reliance Film Company, comedy and drama; release days Wednesday and Saturday. The Saturday release now on is a split-reel comedy. Their natural history series promises to be very interesting. "The Usefulness of the Snake," "Extracting the Poison From the Snake," and other equally interesting subjects are encompassed in the series.

The sales of the Reliance films abroad are very large, and an increased demand is reported on the foreign market, as well as an exceptionally prosperous business in the United States.

The Reliance Film Company employ three camera men, one of which is kept busy on the topical and industrial end, while the remaining two do duty at the studio. Since the installation of the new management a marked improvement in production and photography has taken place.

The foreign representative of the company is Mr. Roy Aitken, whose offices are at 7 Rupert Court, Rupert street, London, W., England.

The Reliance is one of the most elaborate propositions in the business, and has one of the finest studio equipments in the East, no money being spared to make the business a success.

Among the stock company of the Reliance, whose pictures appear with this article, are to be found some of the cleverest and most popular people in the profession, who under the management of Mr. Kirkwood, are turning out remarkably fine work.

Mr. H. J. Streyckmans, well known and popular in the trade, is the advertising manager for the Reliance Film Company.

AT 35 BELOW ZERO AT LAKE SARANAC

Taking moving pictures out of doors with the thermometer at 30 and 35 below zero is no cinch. Nevertheless this is what the Republic Film Co. are doing. The accompanying illustration shows the open air studio, the barrel stove at the side for heating the interior, plenty of icicles, and Caribou Bill's sled and dog team without.

Although this company of brave actors and actresses have suffered much with the cold weather in the Adirondacks, Miss Charleston, one of the leading actresses of the company being on one occasion completely overcome by the low temperature, still they continue to apply themselves to the work with quite as much vim as one would expect under more agreeable circumstances. However, the problem of getting a steaming hot meal when on a long cold tramp has been solved by taking along a fireless cooker, and on top of Mount Baker and at other points where they were at work afar from the camp, steaming hot meals have been served to as many as twenty-eight people.

In this studio the following subjects have been worked out and photographed: "When Men Love," "Invasion of the Wilderness," "The Reckoning," "The Girl Who Waited" and others.

Just recently work had to be suspended for a day owing to trouble between Caribou Bill's wolf dogs and the trained wolves both of which are being used in the pictures, and which resulted in one of the men getting his hand badly chewed up.

HERE ARE THE COLD FACTS

On January 8th, 1912, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York dismissed the suit of the Motion Picture Patents Co. vs. the Yankee Film Company, and also dismissed the suit of the Motion Picture Patents Company vs. Steiner, Miles, and others. The Court awarded costs to Yankee Film Company, Steiner, Miles, and others, and $150 additional in each case, because of the unreasonable and vexatious conduct of the Motion Picture Patents Company. These suits were begun in November, 1910, and motions for preliminary injunction were made in them and granted by the U. S. Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, but on appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Southern District of New York, the decisions were reversed and the injunctions were vacated. The surrender by the Motion Picture Patents Co. of Edison Reissue patent 12037 caused these suits to abate and was the ground of the dismissal.

In the matter of the recent decision in Washington, D. C., against the Chicago Film Exchange, for infringement of the Edison Film patent 12192, the facts are as follows:

The case was argued in May, 1911, and was not decided until December 21, 1911. No opinion was written by the Court. A decree was entered on December 23rd, 1911, for an injunction and an accounting under one of the claims of the patent; but on the same day an order was entered suspending the issue of the injunction and accounting pending an appeal, which has been already taken.

On March 10, 1902, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in considering the original Edison patent for this film, held that the claim for the film was invalid, saying:

> "The film was not new, and if the other characteristics of the product are not new, or are new only in the sense that they add to the article merely a superiority of finish or a greater accuracy of detail, the claim is destitute of patentable novelty."

Edison then reissued the patent claiming this same film in a narrower way. As no opinion was written by the Court in Washington, it is impossible to tell why this same reasoning did not lead it to hold the reissue invalid. Our counsel advise us that in their opinion it is invalid and that they are confident that this decision will be reversed on appeal. This appeal will probably be argued some time during the spring of 1912. We are advised by our counsel that a further appeal can be taken to the United States Supreme Court, and that such an appeal would probably be reached for argument about the fall of 1914

THE OPERATOR

After all is said and done, the operator has the power to make or mar the best show the manager can procure. It doesn't matter what it is, unless he understands his business and performs his duties as he should, the finest film ever released will be utterly spoiled. This is so much of an axiom that practically everyone understands it. Moreover, operators are conscientious and try to do their work as well as possible under all circumstances.

The principal difficulties do not arise through ignorance. Probably most of them are due to carelessness or lack of just what may be required in the particular instance under consideration. Sometimes machinery goes wrong. Again the film may have been run a good many times and is broken and worn. The best of operators will have trouble with a film of that character. Further, often the current is bad and there is difficulty in getting the proper light, or what they do get is uneven. All these things may happen, and when they do there will be all kinds of trouble. And for none of them is the operator really to blame.

The manager can assist the operator by providing the best possible apparatus with which to work. He can see that it is in proper repair and he can encourage a good operator by paying him well. Perhaps this last has as much influence as anything. Good machinery in the hands of a discouraged or indifferent operator will not do good work, and the lack of proper pay will often discourage the best of men. Probably all are alike in this respect. Nearly everyone needs to be paid what is a fair wage for the work they do. Good men will not expect more, but they feel that they have a right to that.

Hold the operator up to his best. That is the only way to secure such shows as you believe you are entitled to. When he does well say so. If anything happens point ont the difficulty, if you know, and see that it is corrected before another picture is run. In this way you continuously improve your shows. Your operator will help.

There is a great difference in the way a film is run. For instance, they are made to go a certain speed. Anything below or above that speed tends to distortion, either in movement or appearance. If too fast the figures appear rushed and often jump about like puppets set on springs. If too slow the movement is spoiled. The whole effect is ruined and the best film ever made would appear poor. Proper operation in such instances is absolutely necessary. There should be no hurrying, neither should there be any slowing up. It is all a matter of practice and each operator should understand his work well enough to keep the pictures at the proper speed.

Of course there are very many other ways in which an operator can make or mar a picture. But these occur to the writer as the principal faults. They are easily corrected, yet, unfortunately, there are far too many cases where they seem to be the principal feature about the place. A little care exercised here and there will overcome everything of this character and make the pictures all the quality of the film permits, which is, after all, the real limit of excellence in production.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM "CANUCK IN THE CATSKILLS"

Port Jervis, N. Y., December 29th, 1911.

Mr. A. H. Saunders,

Dear Friend: Am taking advantage of a few minutes rest to give you a little of the news from Port Jervis. In looking over last week's "News" I noticed a letter from the Odeon Theater, Coldwater, Kan. Now Mr. Crowley, I believe, has a much better chance than we have here in the East, when it comes to getting film in half decent shape. I think that New York has about the poorest lot of Exchanges that could be found anywhere. I am not saying this out of spite. Just to show you a little example: I have been working in my present position four months and have spent from one to four hours every day examining film, putting spring catches on reels, patching up cores, and straightening the sides. What do I get for it? The Film Exchange tells my employer that I am scratching the film. Now to-day was a particularly bad day, I had about twenty stops on account of film parting in upper magazine. Title of pictures that caused this trouble were, "Rip Van Winkle" (Thanhouser) and "Where Sea and Sky Doth Meet" (Reliance). God only knows what kind of machines these films are run through; you can just imagine what condition they were in, when I tell you that I had to cut out parts from four to eighteen inches long, where the sprocket holes had been torn, some one said, some both sides. This is the junk that they call commercial, and the only ones that get the worst of it in a case like this are the operators and the audience. I put operators first because they get it first, and last, from Exchange exhibitor, and audience. Oh! it's awful to be the "Man Behind." I would like to say to Mr. Crowley that he guessed right when he thought I was heart and soul in the business when I am not at work. I am trying to think of something to improve the picture. Of course I ask lots of foolish questions, but let me tell you that it's a pretty wise man that never makes a blunder. Now that I have relieved my thought dome of a little extra pressure I will try to write a little better. Now Brother Crowley, I believe you can help us to get what we want and that is a "Chat Column" for operators in the "News," by sending in a few questions regarding projection; take anything to start with, burners, condensers, mounts, lenses, the head, or the sheet. You start next week and I will follow later. Once more I ask you to help us to get this column in the "News" to make it the paper for everybody. Glad to hear from other operators any time. Don't be bashful, you don't need to have a pull to get questions answered, you'll be treated just as good as I and I have had no kick ever since the first "Moving Picture News" was printed. Here's hoping the New Year will bring in a big batch of questions from operators that are really interested and want to know how to improve their projection.

With best wishes for a prosperous and happy New Year to "Our Editor" and brother operators, I am as ever, sincerely yours for good projection.

KINEMACOLOR THEATER

Continuing at the Kinemacolor Theater, Fortieth street near Broadway, New York, are the natural color motion pictures of the Coronation of King George and Queen Mary of England, and the great Royal Horse Show at Richmond, England. After a run of 300 times in the city these pictures are the senior of all the attractions on the boards, and yet they are as popular as ever, full capacity houses being the rule.

On Christmas night Kinemacolor parties were given by Mrs. Abram Hewitt and Mrs. J. P. Morgan, to entertain their guests, for these films have become the vogue in the houses of the "Four Hundred," who throng to the theater in such nnmbers that no other theater in town except the Metropolitan Opera House has such distinguished audiences.

In addition to the representations thrown upon the screen, the Southwark Glee Singers are sure to delight, while an excellent speaker accompanies the pitcures with an explanatory chat.

Performances are given every evening, including Sundays, at 8:30, lasting two hours, and daily matinees at 2:30 accommodate the suburbanites. The prices range from twenty-five cents to one dollar.

EAST LYNNE

The filming of "East Lynne" by the Thanhouser Company, of New Rochelle, N. Y., has proved to be a very remarkable success. The story, as is well known, is one of intense dramatic and heart interest, requiring a wealth of dramatic talent, a keen insight into the emotional characteristics of each individual part, and an intense concentration on subject-matter and detail by the director, are essentials which have been supplied to the top notch by the Thanhouser Stock Company and their able director, Mr. O. Nicholls. The work of Miss Marguerite Snow, Miss Florence LaBadie and Mr. James Cruze, stands out well in this production. The camera man, too, must be remembered in the criticizing of this production of "East Lynne," for the photography certainly reflects great credit upon his skill as a motion picture photographer. The dramatization of the story and its working out in the picture is something to be remembered in the history of the motion picture; for is not every single step toward the advancement of the industry, whether in a technical or an artistic sense, of invaluable use in the building up of a reputation for the trade. The scenes are all artistically and appropriately arranged, each scene being a masterpiece in itself.

MANY thanks, fellows—and girls, too—for your kindly words of commendation ament our observances concerning giving credit to the scenario writer. When we stated recently that the time was coming when author's names would appear on the film, we really didn't appreciate the fact that that halycon period was so near at hand. It is, tra, la. The Edison concern, with characteristic enterprise, proposes to start the ball rolling, in a modest way, and probably other manufacturers will soon follow suit. Such action, we repeat, is only just. Without the picture play plot, all else is trash. The plot, idea, or story—as you will—is the foundation of all else. The originator of the plot should be given full credit. Before many moons the scenario writer's name will blossom forth under the film title, in all its pristine glory. We predict that it will stimulate better work, and more careful workmanship upon the part of the author. Let the humble writer have his share of the glory that is so freely being passed around.

Comment concerning that "War in Tripoli" release will not down. The Cincinnati Times-Star, in a leading editorial has the latest comment, which is rather pertinent. Says the Times-Star:

"There is one side of war that can be depicted on the moving picture screen without doing any particular harm; there is another side of kinetoscopic reproductions which should not be tolerated. No exception need be taken to those moving pictures which show the movement of troops and the preparations for battle. But the brutal side of war should not be advertised through the medium of the pictures.

"One of the large companies now in the moving picture field announces that it has withdrawn all motion pictures entitled 'War' and purporting to represent a phase of the present Italian war in Tripoli. The pictures in question assumed to reproduce with photographic fidelity some of the alleged 'Italian atrocities.' Some of them showed Italian soldiers in the act of maltreating non-combatants.

"There is a double reason why such representations should not be allowed. In the first place, it is highly desirable to keep brutality and bloodshed off the screens. In the second place, the authenticity of the pictures is by no means unquestioned. So many motion pictures are known to be 'faked' that the suspicion that something of the kind was done in this instance seems to be well justified. It is only natural in the circumstances that Italians and Italian sympathizers should feel and display resentment, and it is this resentment that has probably induced the withdrawal of the films."

Many of the scenario editors in commenting upon the scarcity of good comedy assert that a large number of the manuscripts submitted for comedy purposes consist more of a series of incidents rather than convincing plot which, of course, does not meet with requirements. The series of incident style of picture is rapidly disappearing and is very rarely put on by first-class concerns. Authors whose manuscripts display considerable originality and who should be encouraged, persist in depicting a chain of ludicrous happenings to one or more characters to the complete elimination of convincing plot. A well-known editor has brought this matter to our attention and requests that we pass on the information to the great army of beginners in the scenario writing profession.

The "two lovers'" story is rapidly becoming taboo. In fact, it threatens to run neck and neck with the "Wild West" scenarios which are received by the bale in almost every editorial office. Protests are being made against the "elopement" and "second marriage" epidemics which is being done to death by certain ambitious authors. Says one critic: "The frequency with which a young woman has two lovers, one of whom she marries and then becomes a widow only within a too short space of time, leaving the way open for the return of the other sweetheart, is becoming painful. 'None wed the second but who kill the first.' was a harsh denunciation from Bill Shakespeare upon the second marriage problem, and while it is easy to conceive an occasion when circumstances may bring about a second marriage problem, the pictures now before the public are often so loose in tone as to suggest, mentally at least, that none wed the second love without killing off the first love. The 'second marriage' plot promises to be worked out in as many ways as the 'first mortgage problem.' Let there be surcease!"

Imbued with a spirit of charity, moving picture show proprietors of Columbus, Ohio, have contributed quite a sum of money to the Ohio Newsboys' Association. Over a dozen theater proprietors gave a certain per cent. of one night's receipts to the charitable enterprise. The movement emanated from the moving picture men themselves and what they did to help swell the charitable fund was purely voluntary. They recognize in the association work a movement that smacks of worth and one that warrants aid at the hands of all interested in helping the other fellow. There was no effort to outdo each other in giving. Smaller moving picture shows were not expected to contribute as much as those centrally located and reaping the logically larger harvest incident to a heavy transient trade. The donations of the picture men was much appreciated by the promoters of the association. The picture show proprietors of Columbus, as elsewhere in Ohio, are among the big-hearted public-spirited citizens of the Buckeye State.

Scenario editors are taking no chances since the decision of the Supreme Court against the Kalem Company, charged with reproducing the copyrighted work of "Ben Hur." Any manuscript that bears ear-marks of being filched from the columns of some readily accessible magazine or book is handled gingerly. The majority of scenario writers do not have the cheerful habit of referring to back numbers of the Popular Magazine for their plots. However, there are exceptions. These writers should understand that there is a severe penalty imposed by law for the action of appropriating plots from back files of copyrighted magazines. They should also appreciate the fact that once under suspicion, they cannot sell their work no matter how original it may be. There are several writers already "blacklisted" in certain editorial offices and others will have "their names written there" unless there is a quick change in procedure. It is not an easy matter to "put one over" on an editorial staff of a moving picture concern. The editors and their assistants read the books and magazines as generally as the contributor. There is nothing to be proud of, if such a plot is sold to an unsuspecting editor. The action may possibly cause the manufacturer much trouble and expense and it will close the profession of scenario writing to that particular contributor. Happily such methods are followed only by the very few. The majority of writers now in the scenario field are striving to succeed by their own originality and labor and not by the thoughts and talents of others.

PACIFIC FILM EXCHANGE

During the past week one of the most successful Exchange men in the business, and incidentally the youngest, called at our office., Mr. Ray A. Grombacher, President and Manager of the Pacific Film Exchange, at Seattle, Wash., has been in the East for the past six weeks, spending the Christmas holidays at his home in Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Grombacher had many interesting things to say with regard to the industry, and it was a real treat to hear him tell of the manner in which things are going ahead in the moving picture business in the West. The Pacific Film Exchange is the oldest in the West, and is the pioneer of Independent film Exchanges there. Five years ago young Mr. Grombacher landed in Seattle with six reels of pictures in his suitcase; in the afternoon of the day he landed he had one customer. This was the commencement of the very successful career of Mr. Grombacher as an Exchange man. The Pacific Film Exchange is owned and controlled by the Progressive Investment Company, which corporation also owns and controls the Pacific Film Exchange, Butte, Mont., a buying Exchange which is under the management of Mr. J. M. Mullen; the Independent Film Exchange, Portland, Ore., manager, Mr. A. H. McDonald; Independent Western Film Exchange, Spokane, Mr. Hill, manager; Independent Film Exchange, Boise, Idaho, Mr. M. Hasbrook, manager, and the Western Film Company, Vancouver, B. C., Mr. Wm. Brown, manager. During Mr. Grombacher's absence the Pacific Film Exchange is in charge of Mr. Geo. Endert. This exchange is one of the largest buying Exchanges in the United States, and only the very best class of films is handled by it. Mr. Grombacher reports that two-reel subjects give best satisfaction.

For the benefit of readers not familiar with the inner workings of the trade, we will take the opportunity at this time to explain something about the Exchange end of it. The Exchange buys the films outright from the manufacturer. The exhibitor rents from the Exchange man, who prepares the program for each of his customers according to the character of subjects that they make application for, and which is balanced up as carefully as the Exchange man knows how.

Mr. Grombacher tells us that in the getting out of the three reels three times a week to each customer they are kept busy from early morning to sometimes midnight, taxis coming and going from the doors conveying the films to the different trains for shipment. Says Mr. Grombacher: "The exhibitor finds that the change of picture only three times a week pays better than giving the patrons too much for their money."

"How does the work of the manufacturer as to quantity and quality suit you?" he was asked.

"We are glad always to see quantities of pictures coming out, but it would please us better if the manufacturer would pay more attention to quality than quantity," was his answer.

Continuing he said, "We are running now at about an even break with the Trust, and if we are ever to come out on top the Sales Company must back up the Exchange man by encompassing among its members all the best Independent film makers who come into the market."

A number of interesting facts concerning Western theaters was gathered from Mr. Grombacher. He tells us that the largest moving picture theater in Seattle, the Lyceum, on Second avenue, left the Trust for the Independent ranks the beginning of the present year. Just recently there have been erected in Seattle no less than ten moving picture houses with seating capacity of from 350 to 800 people. James Q. Clemmer, owner of the Dream Theater, Seattle, is putting up a moving picture theater on Second avenue at a cost of $100,000. Mr. Clemmer does things on an elaborate scale; the Dream Theater is one of the best equipped theaters in the country—elegant curtains, Persian rugs, etc., form a part of the decorative and useful furnishings. The Montana Amusement Company, the heads of which are Mr. Geo. H. Grombacher (brother of Mr. Ray A. Grombacher) and Mr. F. T. Bailey, and which controls a large chain of theaters in Montana, has in view the erecting of a number of theaters throughout the country. They have now under construction a theater for moving pictures only, in Butte, Mont., at a cost of $50,000. Another enterprising man has spent on a small moving picture house in Butte, Mont., called, because of its elegant electric display in lighting the exterior and interior of the house, "The House of a Thousand Lights," $15,000. The remarkable point about this is that the house has a seating capacity of only 299 presons.

On being asked with regard to the prospects for the educational film Mr. Grombacher said, "The prospects look good to me. We find that the exhibitor is always anxious to get hold of an educational film—he finds that his audiences like them. The Savoy Theater, in Seattle, which seats some 225 people, was packed for four successive days when 'Hands Across the Sea' was showing there; and the same with the submarine picture, 'From the Bottom of the Sea.' This latter should be very gratifying to know to those who have been in the lead in the manufacture of educational films."

Mr. Grombacher will return to the West very shortly, where he will again resume his duties as manager of the Pacific Film Exchange.

EXTRA KINEMACOLOR FEATURES

In addition to the regular pictures of the famous Coronation of King George and Queen Mary of England which have been running so long at the Kinemacolor Theater on Fortieth street, near Broadway, New York, the "Investiture of the Prince of Wales at Carnarvon Castle," with the appropriate Welch national anthem, "Men of Harlech," rendered by the Southwark Glee Singers, is now being shown. Young "Prince Eddie" is the first heir to the throne of England since the Black Prince to be invested into his principality with all the ancient ceremonies, and the required presentation to the people of Wales from the towers of Carnarvon. The event is one of the most picturesque ever reproduced in the natural color motion pictures, which were all taken by royal command. They have before been omitted solely because there were so many other subjects in the Coronation series, which seemed of relatively greater importance. The performances are twice daily, at 2:30 and 8:30, the prices ranging up to one dollar in the evening, while the best seats are but fifty cents at the matinees.

EAST LYNNE BY THANHOUSER, WITH FEATURE BILLING

When the Thanhouser Company put out their "Romeo and Juliet" last summer, they issued three-sheet lithos with the picture, making it the first regular-release-day film to ever carry that size "paper." That the innovation met with success became apparent when "She" came out last month with three-sheet billing matter. Finally "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" was announced, with eight sheets in addition to the three sheets. So substantial was the demand for both varieties of billing that the latest Thanhouser feature, "East Lynne," is now also stated to carry three and eight sheets. Certainly, the motion picture has attained high standing in the community when it is considered important enough to bill as big as the largest of legitimate attractions.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

Hot Springs, Ark., Jan. 10.—An authority on correspondence once stated that it was bad form to begin any communication by propounding a question, but as there are exceptions to almost every rule, possibly this is the proverbial one. Anyhow, I cannot refrain from asking in the opening paragraph of my letter this week if you ever noticed how quickly a good thing was immediately appreciated?

Nine times out of every ten, when a long-felt want has been gratified, when something that was badly needed became a reality, especially where the public is concerned, appreciation will manifest itself. All of which is a prelude to the statement that Hot Springs' leading motion picture house, the New Central Theater, is doing the business that its promoters hoped it would.

When this house threw open its doors on the first day of the week and admitted the ladies and children free of charge, it practically lost, by this generous method of introducing to the public a real theater for motion photography, several hundred dollars, and I am informed that there was a corresponding howl of protest from the other amusement enterprises, the management of which realized that if there was one day in the year when ready money would be forthcoming it was on the holiday of the opening of the New Year. The New Central people, however, seemed to know what they were doing and I guess they considered that if they cared to let the free admissions go in and lose that amount of cash, that it was their proceeds they were passing up. It hasn't worked out wrong, either, for it served to get every one in the city who cared for motion pictures into the place, and the result is that a majority of them have been coming ever since.

The new theater has made a wonderful hit. I have noticed during the week parties of from five to fifteen from the larger hotels who visited the new house and who enjoyed the pictures. Furthermore, the house has won a host of friends by the courteous treatment they are receiving. Also, they believe in advertising. They are carrying in the local papers an "ad." for which they are paying a higher rate than any other amusement place in the town. Now, then, what are the papers doing in return? Why, gentlemen, they are boosting the place. Every evening there is a notice in the amusement column of the local dailies of the program at the New Central Theater. The house installed a rectifier, which, they claim, makes the pictures brighter, so that facility was described in detail. They are not overlooking a bet where this house is concerned, for the reason that the management realizes that "out of print, out of mind" would soon become a reality. Their advertising is bringing results and everyone appears to be satisfied.

Also, here's something else they did that won the house a first-page story. Fire destroyed the interior of the First Presbyterian Church, which is conceded to have one of the wealthiest congregations in the city. The members had no other place in which to worship, so the management of the new house concluded that it might be well to tender to the congregation the use of the theater on Sunday. Did the church accept? Say, will a kid make snowballs if "the beautiful" is on the ground? They jumped at it. Really, you know, there's nothing like being progressive, boosting a good thing when you have it and the public has responded, too, and the prettiest motion picture theater in the Southwest, the New Central, of Hot Springs, Ark., is getting the business.

It won't be long before Mr. Rothaker and his corps of moving picture men are in Hot Springs to take a series of views of this resort, and the town is really becoming interested in this event. The date of this visitation has not as yet been set, but plans are already pretty well formulated as to what views he will take. Central avenue on that day promises to contain more resident and visiting population than at any time in its history, because the local press will issue a clarion call to "come out and get in the picture."

The Lyric Theater was well filled last Sunday night by the followers of spiritualism. At present there is a celebrated medium in this city who is attracting attention by her work and the manner in which she receives messages by wireless from the departed has given those present a rather uncanny feeling. No one complained, however, even when she informed a certain lady who had been in doubt as to the cause of the demise of a very dear friend that the man in question had taken his life. The Lyric is doing a good business and a rather clever drummer has taken the place made vacant by Carl Hanson, who joined the new theater forces.

Business at the Lyceum is also up to the standard, and the Photo Play, with its fine line of Independent pictures, featuring the "Flying A," is also doing nicely. Two great massive frames of artistic design have been added to the lobby of this theater and are attracting much favorable comment.

There is just one thing, however, that I am afraid the local picture houses are going to get into a "jam" with the city administration over unless they rectify matters, and that is placing their picture frames out on the sidewalk. The new theater started this and their pretty frames hadn't been outside but a few hours when the Lyceum followed suit. By and by one of the stores and then another saw what was being done, and they too, slipped something on the outside, until at present Central avenue looks like a lane for a bargain counter sale. One would think that the "Midway" at the State Fair had been revived and transplanted on the city's principal thoroughfare to see how the old avenue was changed.

An old New York favorite came to town the past week. He is "Charlie" Bowser, who is starring in vaudeville in his latest successful sketch, "Superstition," a humorous treatise on politics and journalism. "Charlie" got a great reception when he stepped on the Princess stage, and his act was a winner. Coming as it did in the heart of a busy political contest, local politicians "ate it up." Another excellent act seen at the Princess was the Bradley Martin Company's offering, "A Quaint Proposal," which proved a treat. The Princess has had some difficulty in booking its acts, owing to the fact that theaters in Texas were not quite ready to take the big show that this house and the one in Little Rock handled, but the matter, I understand, has all been straightened out and things are moving along nicely now.

Every one had a great laugh at Lubin's comedy, "Mr. and Mrs. Suspicious" and "Quick! a Plumber," which came to the New Central. Selig also sent, "Brown of Harvard," which was much enjoyed, as was the Biograph reel, "As In a Looking Glass" and "Caught With the Goods" and "A Mix-up In Raincoats." The new house is making a feature of the Biograph product.

Bison sent the Photo Play a thriller in, "The Foreman's Courage" and some of the worthy "Flying A" pictures seen in the same house were, "The Last Notch" and "Bonita of El Cajon."

One of the greatest horse shows that the South has ever seen will be given in this city March 5th to 9th. Already there are over 200 of the best and bluest-blooded steeds in the country entered. Prominent exhibitors of as far East as New York will participate. There will be one matinee given and I understand that during the day some arrangement will be made to take moving pictures of the various events. It will be the great feature of a busy winter season and promises to attract more notable men and women to Hot Springs than any other feature.

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

THE WORTH OF A MAN

Imp Release—January 25th, 1912

A young surgeon, who is a hunchback, has a series of unpleasant experiences at his university. He is despised for his deformity, and even the girl of his heart is kept from him on that account. The mental anguish he endures does not, however, abate his ardor in his profession. He secures a hospital appointment and devotes himself with all his earnestness to his work.

Chance brings the girl he loves to the hospital as a patient to undergo an operation which it is his duty to perform. He is almost through his doubly delicate task when the hospital takes fire. His assistants take to flight, but Arthur Severn sticks to his post, completing the operation in the almost suffocating smoke and menacing flames.

Cheating death, he escapes with his insensible patient to a place of safety, but is himself badly burned as a reward for his heroism.

By proving his worth as a man he also proves his worth as a lover, and in the end is rewarded with the hand of the girl whose life he had twice saved.

Graphic scenes of university and hospital life are shown in this fine human picture. Harry Pollard enacts the part of the young surgeon with singular ability, and Margarita Fischer, as the heroine, has a very congenial role.

Photograhpically and dramatically this picture takes high rank amongst "Imp" dramas.

A Breezy Westerner Fresh From Range and Cattle Corral

With the STING and BLOOM of the West in his cheeks, blew into the AMERICAN'S office one day last week. "Came," he said, "to find out just where AMERICAN FILMS were made."

"ABSOLUTELY TRUE TO LIFE—THOSE COWBOYS WERE REAL COWBOYS—COULDN'T FOOL HIM—WHY SOME OF THOSE BOYS WERE BOW-LEGGED FROM HORSE-BACK RIDING."

Contagious, wasn't it—and highly gratifying! "Gallery-God Applause is the Sincerest Form of Flattery," is an old Theatrical Wag and We Must have felt like the Star Heavy Lead on a first night when the Gallery Burst into Howls of Delight!

AMERICAN FILMS depict the West as it is today—the Great Rolling Prairies, Mighty Mountain Ranges and Sylvan Dales with its rough, almost primitive life, its Healthy, Wealthy, Quick-Witted Emotiona Inhabitants!

AMERICAN photography is Stereoscopic, clean-cut, and flawless, with backgrounds of surpassing beauty obtainable only in Beautiful, Historic, Dreamy El Cajon Valley, Southern California.

AMERICAN PANTOMINE is founded on a stock company especially selected, drilled and equipped to produce the HIGHEST POSSIBLE GRADE OF WESTERN PICTURES.

WHEN YOU BUY "AMERICANS" YOU BUY THE BEST.

"The Mormon"

(Release January 25th. Approx. Length 1000 feet. Western Drama.) A tale of the early days when wagon-trains were held up by Mormons in the hope of forcing white women to join their polygamous faith. Stirring, historically true, charged with quick action, this film will pack houses. It's an epoch-making picture well worth your particular attention.

"Love and Lemons"

(Release Jan. 29th. Approx. Length 1000 feet. Comedy-Educational.) Combining the educational with the story-interest. Will teach much concerning the lemon industry of So. California. Throughout runs a love story, absorbing, dainty, delightful, centering about the purchase of a lemon grove by a charming Eastern Miss.

"The Best Policy"

"The Real Estate Fraud"

(Release Feb. 5th. Approx. Length 1000 feet. Western Social Drama.) A charming, delightful story centering about the efforts of two real estate sharks to swindle an inexperienced but pugilistic young man, and how that attempt was frustrated by the "Boss's" own stenographer.

LITTLEST REBEL A POWER STAR

Theater-goers of New York are still flocking to the Liberty Theater, where William and Dustin Farnum are enjoying a long run. But there is no question among those who have seen their play, "The Littlest Rebel," as to who the real star is; for a little girl, whose title furnishes the name of the play, does all the real emotional work.

Little Juliet Shelby, ten years old, is the star. For four long acts this little wonder plays on the heartstrings of staid metropolitan audiences, rendering everything from emotional symphony to high-comedy libretto, so to speak. You weep, you laugh—you are thrilled with patriotic fervor, you mourn with the sad voice of the little heroine. And there's hardly a minute, from the first scene to the final drop of the curtain, when she is not holding the center of the stage in that vivid war play.

This same little wonder will be seen by picture lovers in a stirring domestic Powers picture play entitled "The Nurse." It will be released on Saturday, January 27th.

Jamestown, N. Y.—Mozart Amusement Company, capital $40,000, M. W. Peterson, M. L. Woods and C. Woods.

Chicago, Ill.—Harry Moir will erect a one-story theater addition to the building at 21-25 North Clark street, at a cost of $18,000.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—Wayne Amusement Company, capital $7,500, T. C. Young, G. F. Underhill and others.

AN AERO AND AUTO RACE

Champion's release of January 29, 1912, entitled "Aviator and Autoist's Race for a Bride," furnishes some thrilling moments in its portrayal. William Crane, a reckless autoist, has many admirers, among whom in particular is one who is chiefest. Crane asks her out for a spin in his machine and the finish finds them at the Aviation Field, where a flying meet is in progress.

Conspicuous among the airmen is Lee Hammond, a daredevil aviator, who is a suitor for the hand of Crane's companion. Upon Lee's invitation she enters his machine and both whisk away into the air. Crane pursues them in his auto but his mechanism fails aud he has to alight.

Lee Hammond, seeing his rival's plight, also alights and presses his suit. At this moment Crane dashes up in a heat. The girl cleverly averts trouble by inviting both to a supreme test in a race between aeroplane and auto.

From the Aviation Field, with the girl as judge, William Crane in his auto, and Lee Hammond in his aeroplane, start off at top speed. The contestants exert their greatest efforts and the rate at which they madly race is startling. The flying machine at last, with a mighty spurt, darts forward, leaving Crane lagging way behind.

Encircling the field, Lee Hammond, the victor, alights at the side of the fair judge, assists her into the aeroplane, and again soars aloft with his rightful prize.

Miss Blanche Scott, the woman aviator, plays the role of the sought-for bride and flies with Lee Hammond.

MOTION PICTURE THEATERS IN PANAMA

Mr. N. R. Johnson, of Cristobal, Canal Zone, who recently paid a visit to New York, is doing a flourishing business and may open another theater shortly. He purchased a Motiograph moving picture machine from J. H. Hallberg, the "Economizer Man," with many other supplies. Mr. Hallberg also reports the sale of Powers No. 6 moving picture machine with Hallberg Economizer to Criterion Theater, Rutherford, N. J., and the same equipment to American Amusement Co., Minneapolis, Minn. Also an Edison moving picture machine to John Dyer, Prairie City, Ore.

New York, N. Y.—F. F. Proctor will build a new theater at Albany on the site of his Bijou Park in that city. It will cost $250.000.

POWERS SCOOPS $15,000,000 FIRE

The regular release of the Powers Motion Picture Company for Saturday, January 20th, will be the pictures of the great fire which destroyed the big Equitable Life Building a few days ago. This was the biggest fire that the New York Fire Department was ever called upon to battle with.

Captain Walsh lost his life, as did five others, and there were any number of daring rescues. The Powers Company received the news of the blaze an hour after the engines arrived (about 5 a.m.) and their camera man got there before daylight. Two shifts worked the job all day Tuesday, and got every bit of the spectacular events.

The extreme cold froze the water over the ruins into the most fanciful and grotesque icicles, and the reflections of the sun's rays added to the splendor.

About the scene the water froze into a foot of ice on the street, and the Powers camera caught the men chopping out the wheels of the fire-wagons to shift their positions. The exhausted men, thinking only of duty, utterly neglected their stomachs, but a number of stock brokers formed a relief corps and bought up all the coffee and sandwiches in the vicinity.

The steel vault from which President Gilpin was rescued, Fire Chief Kenlon directing his men, Police Commissioner Waldo, the fall of the roof—all were caught by the Powers cameras. It was elegant work, and the picture goes out as a regular release. The Powers Company had already advertised "Billy's Surrender" for that day, but the fire picture is released in its stead.

The Powers Company announces its release of the pictures of the Durbar at Delhi, on January 20th. It will be on the same reel with the pictures of the Equitable fire, which goes out in place of "Billy's Surrender," and as there will be posters for each of the subjects, this is one of the greatest feature reels ever released regularly. The Durbar views include excellent pictures of King George and Queen Mary on their throne at the ceremonies, their reception by the viceroy and then the great pageant of Indian princes, and an array of barbaric potentates that only the Durbar can show. Huge elephants in gorgeous trappings of gold bear precious burdens of royal passengers who come to pay their respects to the new Emperor and Empress of India. Turbaned Hindus mingle with white Europeans who come from all parts of the world to witness the dazzling display of Oriental splendor.

This is the first view that America will get of the glorious event, and to Mr. Powers belongs great credit for his skill in bringing it here first. It is big enough for a feature, but Mr. Powers makes a big hit in releasing it with the fire picture in the regular way. The exhibitors gain by it.

GEM PROVING IT

Joe Gem Engel is making a marathon tour of the country, convincing Exchange men that all the nice things that have been said about Gem have after all been only an underestimate of superlative Gem quality. In the evidence he is offering the Exchange men, he has drifted away from the convenient custom of new manufacturers who exhibit the first release only, and is showing the first four releases of the new brand. He has two comedies and two dramas which prove the infant manufacturer to be a mighty sturdy youngster. We have already reviewed these films, and repeat again, what in our judgment is an accurate and self-convincing fact: They are a tribute to the motion picture industry, and the ingenuity and genius of the producer and his company. "The Defender of the Name," "Readin', 'Ritin' and 'Rithmetic," "Under Her Wing," and "Through Twisting Lanes," are going to substantiate all the claims the Gem Company have made, and will be considered by the trade and the public as a harbinger of the future in picturedom, when perfection will be the keynote and the general standard.

We expect alert, aggressive Joe Engel to return with a standing order from all the Exchanges that have not already joined the prosperity brigade. A smile like the Joe Engel smile and film like the Gem brand can't be denied.

CHAMPION FILM COMPANY REINFORCE STOCK COMPANY WITH NEW AND SPLENDID TALENT

The Champion Film Company have recently secured the services of two very clever artists. Miss Evelyn Francis is a young woman of remarkable beauty and fine ability in ingenue work. Miss Francis has spent the greater part of her life on the stage—it is like home to her. Her first venture was with Walter Perkins in "Who Goes There?" Afterward she was a season in the Keith Stock Company of Philadelphia. She was in musical comedy with Geo. Cohan's "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway."

Champion has long been on the lookout for someone of Miss Francis' stamp and ability, and from the very first scene in which she appeared for the Champion Company her work had the true artistic ring to it, and she was at once secured as a permanent member of their stock company.

Mr. Irving Cummings who has accepted the position of leading man with the Champion is also a great acquisition to the company. He was formerly in theatricals with Lillian Russell, Beulah Poynter, Sherman Brown's Stock Company, in Milwaukee, and the Arvine Denton Stock, in Indianapolis. Mr. Cummings has a most attractive and pleasing personality and is bound to become one of the most popular moving picture actors.

REPUBLIC FILM COMPANY APPEAR FOR CHARITY

The members of the Republic Film Company were the luncheon guests Thursday, January 4th, of Dr. Garvin, superintendent of the State sanatarium for tuberculosis at Ray Brook, near Lake Saranac in the Adirondacks. The physicians of the institution, the nurses and patients were most interested in following the camera man and the company about as the great scenes were taken for "A New Lease on Life."

Every process of the cure was investigated, and during the course of Dr. Garvin's explanations he stated that he wished the patients were not so isolated from the entertainments of the city. Although the sanatarium does not admit advanced cases of tuberculosis, the several hundred patients there are having a daily battle for life, and naturally they do not care to have too much time to think about their condition. They have a few entertainments when talent is found in the neighborhood, but not enough of these are given to please the physicians who have the happiness of their patients in mind. The patients as a whole are extremely cheerful and jolly, and have a good deal of sport among themselves, but in time a regular walk each day at a certain hour, a sun bath on the porch at a regular hour, the morning luncheon of eggs and milk at eleven, the bed hour at nine, and so on, grow rather monotonous to men and women used to entertainment of some sort or another from time to time.

The Republic Company have offered their services for a series of entertainments to be given the patients while they are in the region with the picture work. The first of these, arranged by Mr. Bernstein (Get a Rep, Bernie) will be given the early part of next week and will consist of the following numbers:

Grace Cunard—Solo.
Marie Charleston—Irish ditties.
Mrs. Arnold—Solo.
Mr. McGlinn—Scenes from famous plays.
Mr. Wainright—Rope spinning.
Mrs. Cooper—Western songs.
Mr. Brady—Monologues.
Mr. Harvey—Gun manipulations.
Mr. Morrison—Scenes from famous plays.
William Cooper and his trained wolf dogs.
Sarah Helen Starr—Accompanist.

Marshalltown, Ia.—Thompson Bros. & Case have sold the Gem Theater to Hulbert, Benson & Hulbert.

New York, N. Y.—The Johnson Amusement Company will erect a new theater at 138th street and Lenox avenue, at a cost of $55,000.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

80 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

January 10th, 1912.

NOTICE

The validity of the Edison Re-issued Patent No. 12,192, covering motion picture film, has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for the information of those concerned, there appears with this notice a copy of the order and decree entered in that Court on December 23rd, 1911.

The manufacture, sale, rental or use of motion picture film containing the invention covered by said patent, without license from this Company, will be diligently prosecuted by suits for an injunction, accounting and damages, including all profits, gains and advantages that the infringer has received or that have accrued to him by reason of such infringement, in manufacturing, selling, renting or exhibiting such film.

CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE, Defendant.
} In Equity No. 28,605

This cause having been brought to final hearing upon pleadings and proofs, and upon Defendant's motions to strike out testimony taken on behalf of the Plaintiff and for leave to take further testimony on behalf of the Defendant, and having been argued by Melville Church, Esq., of counsel for the plaintiff, and by Harry N. Low, Esq., William Houston Kenyon, Esq., and William J. Wallace, Esq. of counsel for defendant, and having been duly considered by the Court, it is, by the Court, this 23rd day of December, 1911, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows:

I. That reissue letters patent No. 12192, granted to Thomas A. Edison, on the 12th day of January, 1904, for Kinetoscopic Film, referred to in the plaintiff's bill of complaint, are good and valid in law as to the 2nd claim thereof.

II. That Thomas A. Edison was the original, first, and true inventor of the improvements described in said reissue letters patent and particularly claimed in the said 2nd claim thereof.

III. That the plaintiff, Motion Picture Patents Company, has good title to said reissue letters patent.

IV. That the defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, has infringed upon said reissued letters patent No. 12192, as to the said second claim thereof.

V. That a perpetual injunction issue against the said defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, prohibiting it, its officers, directors, attorneys, agents, servants and workmen, from directly or indirectly making, using or selling Kinetoscopic or Motion Picture Films containing or embodying the invention set forth in said reissue letters patent No. 12192, and particularly covered by claim 2 thereof

VI. That the plaintiff do recover from the defendant the profits, gains and advantages which the defendant has received or made or that have accrued to it by reason of its said infringement of said reissue letters patent No. 12,192 since the date of said reissue letters patent, and also the damages which the plaintiff has sustained by reason of said infringement, to be assessed as provided by law.

VII. That this cause be and is hereby referred to the Auditor of this Court to take and state an account of said gains, profits and advantages and to assess such damages, and to report thereon with all convenient speed; and that the defendant herein, Chicago Film Exchange, its officers, directors, attorneys, clerks, servants and workmen be and are hereby directed to attend before said Auditor, from time to time, as required, and to produce before him such books, papers, vouchers and documents and to submit to such oral examination as the said Auditor may require.

VIII. That the plaintiff do recover of the defendant its costs in this suit to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court.

IX. That defendant's motion to strike out parts of rebuttal testimony of the plaintiff as not being proper evidence in rebuttal, and defendant's motion to be allowed to take further testimony strictly in surrebuttal, heretofore reserved for the final hearing, are hereby denied.

WENDELL P. STAFFORD, Justice.

Decree entered December 23, 1911.

AN EVENING STORY

Eclair Release, January 18

A young soldier comes home after a long time. To surprise his mother and sister, he does not advise of his coming. Seated around the huge fireplace are the game keeper and a number of his neighbors telling stories. Grandmother tells a dramatic one which leaves a strong impression on all, which lingers even after they leave.

Some one has just warned the game keeper that a thief has been seen about the place and he goes out to investigate, leaving the soldier's mother and sister at home, alone.

Happy at the thought of the surprise in store for his mother and sister, the young soldier comes to his home. He sees a light through the shutters. The idea of playing a joke comes to his mind. He knocks gently. The two women are frightened. Still thinking of the stories heard that evening, they believe a bandit is coming to harm them. The mother takes her husband's fowling piece and shoots through the window. Everything becomes silent again.

When the husband returns, he finds the two women quite excited. They tell him what has happened. At first he smiles and tells them they are foolish but then decides to investigate. A soldier is lying on the ground. He rushes forward and recognizes his son.

On the same reel:

LOVE FINDS A WAY

Eclair Release, January 23

Unfortunate circumstances compel mother and daughter to give up their home and take lodgings in the poorer quarter.

In order to keep them from absolute penury, Helen answers an advertisement for a maid, inserted by Mrs. Gray and secures a position.

Her beauty and refinement attracts Fred who falls desperately in love. Helen returns the affection and they succeed in keeping their secret from Fred's parents for a short time.

They are discovered, however, and Helen is discharged, while another advertisement proclaims the need of a new maid, this time it specifies that a "middle-aged woman" is wanted. Fred finds a way to arrange matters and finally persuades Helen to assist him in his novel plan.

Just how well they succeeded is too good to tell here.

There is a surprise for those who see this production.

ANGELS UNAWARE

Rex Release, January 18

We humans are the only animals who make fools of themselves. We make a sight of ourselves pursuing fleeting, ephemeral visions of happiness, when the substantial, unalloyed quality is within our reach, tempting our unseeing eyes to observe and possess it. We seek joy where there is misery, mirth where there is but murk and mockery, smiles where there are sighs and tears; we search for the green in the desert; for the mountain peaks on the plains; for honor in contamination; for peace on the battle ground; for contentment in conflict, and we find—heartache and dreary despair. Within ourselves is sanctity; within ourselves is sin, peace and persecution, nobility and nefariousness; it is for us alone to choose and select.

They are drifting, drifting apart. Cupid is just about to bury his dead, another young love slaughtered and sacrificed on the altar of misunderstanding and misjudgment. The wife is becoming tired of the hypocrisy of their relationship, and suggests to the husband that they separate and subsequently obtain a divorce; when he receives a letter from his parents informing him that they intend to pay a visit to his home. He pleads with his wife to stay until the old folks depart, and entreats her to give his parents the impression that they are still as happy together as they were when he first left his father's roof to mate the women he loved. She consents, and the next act of the little life drama is on.

One night during his parent's visit, while they are chatting and discussing little nothings, his father turns the topic of conversation to the romance of the younger people's younger days; out of the past he summons little pictures of a man and a maid knowing of nothing but each other's love and its happiness, little meaningless words significant of things no language can fully interpret—pictures and words forgotten in the oblivion of marital dissension. Husband and wife, in silent embarrassment, look into the mirror to conceal their chagrin, and there, as in a mirror of their souls, they see a vision. Fair skies and a rippling brook, green things and fragrant flowers and two looking into the eyes of each other, translating the mystic meaning of life and the years—a vivid vision of the happy days of their courting and the tender truth of their troth.

The old folks depart, and with them departs the shadow. Hollow happiness they had substituted for monotonous peace; the glint of a sunbeam they had bartered for a grain of dust—and they see the folly of it all and the mockery. He takes the woman in his arms, and their lips—and their lives—meet again.

LOVE AND LEMONS

American Release, January 29

Having purchased a lemon grove in California, Clara Merton arrives to take possession. She meets the employees of the grove, who are impressed with the new owner and show her every courtesy. The young foreman shows her about the grove explaining the business of marketing lemons as they go along. He explains how lemons are picked green and in order to keep them up to a standard size after shrinkage in the packing house only lemons that will not pass through a standard measuring ring are used. He shows her the care exercised by the employees to preserve the trees, always cutting, never pulling or plucking the lemons from the tree, the careful spraying of the trees to kill insects, and the young owner is very much interested in what she learns.

She visits the packing house to arrange for the sale of her lemons and the owner invites her to inspect his establishment. She is taken through the various departments of the lemon packing industry. She learns how lemons are washed before shipment, the box making department, and watches with amazed interest the wonderful speed of the girls in the wrapping department. Much interested she visits every department of the packing company, from the arrival of the loads of lemons until they are ready to be shipped East.

Time goes on and the foreman learns to love the pretty owner of the lemon grove and proposes marriage. But she loves her independence and refuses his offer and then discharges him from her employ.

He seeks work at the packing house and is employed by the general owner in the sorting department.

At the lemon grove the new foreman is persistently urging the pretty owner to become his wife. Finding that his plea is unavailing he resorts to tricking to compel her to accede to his wishes. He takes her measuring rings and cuts a section from each, reducing the size. Soon complaints come from the packing house that her lemons are too small, and at last the proprietor refuses to buy any more of her undersized fruit. The old foreman learns in the packing house of her predicament and asking for a day off visits her grove to investigate the cause. He finds the section cut from her rings by the new foreman and at once understands. He hurries to the pretty owner and shows her what he has discovered. The new foreman comes up and learning that his ruse is discovered decides to put distance between himself and the ranch before the old foreman can give him the trouncing he so richly deserves. And the little ranch owner finds that the protecting love of her old foreman is vastly superior to her previous independence.

THE REAL ESTATE FRAUD

American Release, February 5

Jack Stevens is dissatisfied with his condition in life for although a steady workman his earnings barely make expenses. He sees the advertisement of a Western land agent and wishes he had the money to invest in the land of promise told in such glowing terms in the paper. And at precisely the same moment he is reading the ad. his mother receives a letter telling her that her brother had left her $7,000 from his estate. She hurries to her son with the good news and they decided to invest in a Western fruit farm.

Out in the Western office of the real estate agent, an unscrupulous land owner negotiates with the equally unscrupulous agent for the sale of the worthless property. When the agent learns the location of the land he knows that it is worthless, for there will be no water to irrigate it for six years to come. But the promise of a fat fee causes him to undertake the sale.

Jack arrives at the office and meets Mabel Mittler, the pretty stenographer. He states his errand and she shows him some of the pamphlets illustrating the growing trees and negotiation tracts. Honest and openly frank he tells her his hopes, how he hopes to have a pretty little home for his mother he loves and shows the girl a photograph of his mother. She likes the big, manly boy and is very much interested in his conversation. They are chatting when the agent returns and to him Jack tells his errand. The girl listens in dawning comprehension and horror when she hears him paint in glowing terms the property she had heard him all but refuse to undertake to sell that very morning. The agent suggests they go to visit the tract and the girl is on the point of warning the boy, then changes her mind. Then she puts in a long afternoon of mental torture. What if the boy should buy the land? And bring his innocent old mother out to a barren home. And then find that it would be six years before water came to the tract, and six years more before he could hope for fruit-bearing trees? Could he weather the time of waiting she wondered? And so on in endless procession the ugly thoughts forced themselves upon her. A boy hopeful of giving his mother a home and then finding his all was sunk in a worthless property, when a word from her would save him years of sorrow and heart-breaking toil.

Her reverie is interrupted by the return of the bustling agent and his attitude tells her he has achieved his object, inveigled this unsophisticated boy into a promise to purchase this worthless property. As in a dream she hears her employer tell her to fill out the necessary papers that will filch from this boy his mother's inheritance. Supremely unconscious, he draws his check book from his pocket, when the telephone rings, she hears the agent tell her he will be right back and tells her to take the young man's dictation in a letter to his mother. Mechanically she writes the words surcharged with meaning:

Dearest Mother:

I am paying $7,000 on a fine piece of land and will have to give a mortgage on the little home for another thousand. It won't be long until I send for you.

Your loving Son.

As her fingers click rapidly over the keys she sees into the future, not only his inheritance but his home gone to this grasping pair of legitimate crooks. And then her mind is made up. She turns to the boy and in a voice full of pleading she implores him not to sign the letter or the check and tells him the ugly, unvarnished truth that the land is worthless and there will be no water on it for six years to come. Furiously angry he destroys the letter and the check and rushes from the room.

Down the street he meets the agent and the owner laughing heartily over the simpleton they have landed. He blurts out his opinion of their methods and carelessly implicates the girl. The agent hurries to his office and fiercely denounces the girl and orders her from his office. To get out and stay out. Down the street she wanders, out of work for doing an honest deed. The land owner accosts her but she refuses to have anything to do with him. He follows her again and attempts to insult her. But the boy has witnessed the affair on the street and follows, his fingers itching to assault the man who so nearly robber him. And when he sees the girl struggling to protect herself he flings him from the girl and with one well-directed blow knocks him down. And that was why Jack Stevens, several days later, sent a telegram to his mother.

Mother:

I didn't get the land but I got a wife. Jack.

permitted to enter her presence. The Baron retreated to his castle by the sea, and there plotted revenge on the fair lady who spurned him.

About this time the Prince started out on a tour of adventure with a few boon companions. He went in disguise, to be surer of catching his underlords unawares, and of finding how they were fulfilling their steward-ships. By accident he met the fair Countess at a wayside shrine, and not knowing who she was his heart went out to her.

The wicked Baron finally succeeded in carrying off the fair Countess to his lonely castle. At the time of her capture she was accompanied only by her little Page, whom the Baron also carried off, so he could not tell her people where to find her. The little Page was a very small chap indeed, and managed to slip through a tiny window in the Baron's castle, which had never been regarded as a possible means of exit.

Securing the Baron's horse the Countess' small defender rode off for aid, and encountered the Prince and his friends.

A timely band of monks happened to pass the Baron's castle shortly after he had taken the Countess prisoner. The holy men were invited to feast at the Baron's table, and afterward one of their number was commanded to wed the Countess to the Baron. Just when the Baron thought his plan sure to succeed he found himself face to face with the Prince and a few brave hearts, who rescued the lady and carried her safely off, to later become the consort of the Prince himself, and the tiny Page, let it be said, was duly knighted.

EAST LYNNE (Part One)

Thanhouser Release, January 26

Lady Isabel Vane, the daughter of an impoverished Earl, marries Archiband Carlyle, a rising young lawyer. Carlyle's boyhood friend is Richard Hare, and prior to his marriage the gossips had suspected that Carlyle would marry Barbara Hare, Richard's sister. Barbara is secretly in love with Carlyle, but he does not suspect it and his feelings toward her are purely brotherly.

Almost immediately after her return from her wedding trip, Lady Isabel hears of this supposed romance and is disposed to be jealous of Barbara. Circumstances seem to confirm the gossip, for the husband and Barbara are surprised in a secret conference soon after his return from the wedding trip. So Lady Isabel's life as a bride opens with the belief that her husband is not true to her.

Her husband does not explain, for she fails to tax him with his supposed treachery. The fact is, that Carlyle's friend, Richard, is a fugutive from justice. The father of the girl he loves is slain, and the evidence points strongly against Richard, although he is innocent. Barbara's conferences with Carlyle have been concerning her brother's case, as she is the only person he can trust to bring messages to Carlyle, his lawyer.

Some years later, Sir Francis Levison, a fashionable rogue, is a guest at Carlyle's home and determines to win Lady Isabel. Finding that she is jealous of Barbara Hare, he goads her to fury by bringing the wife to the place where they meet. Lady Isabel, not knowing that her husband has just been in conference with Richard Hare, misconstrues his actions and to revenge herself agrees to elope with Levison, leaving a note telling her innocent husband that he has driven her to it. Carlyle receives the message and is comforted by his baby son, who is all that keeps the husband from utter despair.

EAST LYNNE (Part Two)

Lady Isabel, the wife of Archibald Carlyle, deserted him and eloped with Sir Francis Levison, who had traduced her husband. She soon bitterly regretted her foolish action but not knowing what to do and being friendless, drifted along for a year before she summoned up resolution enough to decide that she would separate from Levison. This action she took immediately after learning that Levison had deceived her, and that her husband was an honorable man.

Accompanied by her infant child and the latter's nurse, Lady Isabel crossed to France. There the train on which she was traveling was wrecked and many passengers killed. The woman's child and nurse were among the victims, and through an error her name also appeared among those who had been killed.

Although she did not die, Lady Isabel was severely injured and lingered in a hospital for months. While convalescing she read in an old newspaper that she had been reported killed, and decided not to attempt to correct the error. At the hospital she was known as "Madame Vine," and under that name she decided to live a new life.

While companion for a woman she is unexpectedly offered another position as nurse for her own son, a lad who she learns with horror is in delicate health. Her mother love determines her to risk the chance of detection and carefully disguised she appears at her old home as a menial, but happy because she can again see her darling boy.

She has many heartaches, however. She sees the woman she once regarded as her rival, now the happy and honored wife of her former husband and hears her singing to him the songs that had once been sung by the Lady Isabel. Still she puts up with everything, working and praying for the recovery of her child, who is gradually sinking into a decline.

Her petitions are not granted, and the boy dies. Before he passes away, however, the frantic woman reveals herself to him, and is surprised by her former husband. She appeals to him for forgiveness, he grants it, making her last moments peaceful and happy —the strain and grief had been too much for her and she sinks dead at the feet of the husband she had so cruelly injured.

The man who had wrecked her home did not escape. Arrested for a murder he thought would never be traced to him, he was convicted and executed, while Barbara Hare's brother, wrongfully suspected and for years a fugitive with a price on his head, is cleared at last and his sister rejoices that the last cloud has been lifted from her life, and that she can be happy with the love of her husband and the brother for whom she had sacrificed so much.

THE BRUTE

We first make his acquaintance in the commencement of one of his horrible debauches. The sodden wretch is seated at the table, the whiskey bottle is empty and he decides to go forth and replenish it. The pleadings of his wife that he remain at home are not only in vain, but serve to arouse the slumbering demon within him. He turns on her fiercely, then rushes from the room, striking at her and the children in his mad departure. Anon he returns with his bottle full of hell's fluid and himself the very devil. Crazed with drink he smashes the dishes on the table, and when his poor wife and children strive to remonstrate, in a terrible fury, he lays about him on all sides, breaking the furniture and hurling the bric-a-brac at their heads, until his wife falls cut and bleeding, a victim to his horribly bestial passion.

His innocent babe had gone long since from the house and had not returned. The mother and sister now desired to seek the little one, who was undoubtedly lost. But the unnatural brute they called father and husband sat by the door barring their exit, and no entreaties of theirs could avail to soften the callousness of his whiskey-sodden soul. Then he became seized with a fit; at one moment gesticulating like a fiend and at another jabbering like an idiot, frothing at the mouth and uttering wild shrieks.

His son had managed to elude him, and slipping from the house he made his way to a saloon where there were some cowboys. Big Jim Colfax was in the midst of a funny story when the boy rushed in and cried out that his mother and sister were being abused by his father. In an instant the cowboys were off to the rescue, big Jim at their head. When they arrived they were just in time to save the daughter from the clutches of the brute. Then what a lashing Jim gave to him with his quirt! It did one's heart good to witness it. After that the boys went out with the mother and her children to search for the baby, and when they found the little one the body was lifeless from exposure and neglect.

In the meantime the brute, in one fearful paroxysm of delirium tremens, succumbed to the dread Reaper in a most horrible fashion. When they returned with the body of the child they found him stark and stiff and cold in death.

It preaches a sermon stronger than the pulpit utterance of the most gifted divines or than any orator could make it.

HER BROTHER'S PARTNER

Champion Release January 24

William Caldwell loves Eleanor Caines and Eleanor loves William. They are an ideal couple in appearance and worthy of each other in every way. Eleanor's love grows daily, and when the marriage knot is at last tied her life's happiness seems completed. But alas! The husband, subjected to adverse fate, and temptations likewise, falls in our estimation, though he still seems heroic to his faithful wife. Yes, to us he becomes contemptible and ignoble. But at last her eyes are rudely opened to a phase of the man's character she had never dreamed of.

Driven to an extremity, he finds himself brutal in his conduct toward his wife. Her opposition to his unreasonable demands causes within him a submerging of his love for her and he becomes violent. In a splendid piece of acting the two principals depict for us, in the scene of their parting, a most realistic conception of the intermingling of the passions of Love and Hate. The wife's opposition to her husband's unreasonable demands causes within him a submerging of his love for her, and he becomes violent. They then part.

William Caldwell goes West to retrieve, if not redeem himself in his own heart and soul. He did gain the mastery over his body, but the worm which dieth not gnaweth at his very vitals. His partner thought him the best, the truest and bravest of men, for his conduct now well merited that belief. And what of Eleanor? She was driven to the last ditch of despair. She strove hard to eradicate the image of her once glorious idol from her heart. She sank into the depths of poverty; then, hearing from a long-absent brother in the West, she drifted thence and to her fate.

She arrived at her brother's place during his absence, but his partner was there to receive her. But Great God! That partner was none other than William Caldwell. We can't attempt to describe this scene. We leave it to your imagination; or seeing it in the picture-play. The brother comes in on the scene unexpectedly. No time is left for either to calmly explain or for proper consideration of the course to pursue. But by a glance and a cautioning look they agree to let the brother and partner remain in ignorance of the tragedy in their lives.

This is more fortunate for them. Thus thrown into an unexpected propinquity the smouldering fire of the divine spark soon bursts forth into flame. Their old love is again renewed, but now freed from the carnality which first surrounded it. It becomes hallowed and life is again sweeter, brighter and better.

BUILDING THE GREATEST DAM IN THE WORLD

With the exception of the Panama Canal the engineering works in progress at Keokuk, Iowa, are the greatest in the world. The dam across the Mississippi is approaching completion and it has involved the building of the largest monolithic concrete structure in existence.

Such an undertaking as this necessitated some great mechanical and constructional devices. The picture includes views of the work as it is being carried out. For example, we see huge concrete mixers with a capacity of 1,500 cubic yards per day; and we see rock being crushed at the rate of 500 carloads. There is a power house a third of a mile long. An inclined railway carries material to the concrete mixers; a very large cantilever traveling crane places the concrete in the dam.

There is a view of a great new lock in course of construction. It was necessary to saw a channel in the bed-rock of the American continent and the work of doing it is shown. Excavators, traveling cranes, concrete dumpers, and other great pieces of machinery are shown at work.

This magnificent picture illustrates the highly educational and instructive possibilities of the moving picture cameras at their best. It will be appreciated throughout the world as depicting in detail one of those gigantic undertakings for which American engineers are famous.

ALL A MISTAKE

Imp Release, January 27

A fruitful source of disagreement between married couples is the work of the pen, and especially the unfinished work. "Dear" is a fatal word when it is used as a prefix to a letter left lying around for somebody to see, for whom it was not intended.

Percy Vane's young wife had gone out for the day and had left her house all locked up. Hubby arrives home unexpectedly early and not being able to enter by the front door of the house tries the fire-escape route. A policeman sees him; arrests him and marches him off to the station. Percy convinces the magistrate that he is not a burglar and is allowed to go free.

He makes his way indoors at last to discover that his wife is out and that she has left an unfinished letter on the table. That letter is addressed to a man. Rage and jealousy take possession of Percy's breast. He packs up his belongings preparatory to leaving home and is in the midst of it when his little wife returns. A quarrel ensues; she packs up her things, and the stupid young couple would have inevitably parted if it was not revealed that the letter the girl was writing was meant for a relative and not a lover. Percy apologizes for his haste and is forgiven.

This slight story affords scope for a series of briskly attached situations that are full of humor. The picture goes well from start to finish.

On the same reel:

A DAY ON A BUFFALO RANCH

Imp Release, January 27

The buffalo at one time was in danger of extinction, but thanks to Governmental and private enterprise the danger has been averted.

This picture was made on a North Dakota ranch where the buffalo is herded. In the first part of the film the capture of a splendid bull is shown. Expert knives work on his dead body which is separated into its chief constituent parts.

Some of the ranchers exhibit their prowess as buffalo horsemen; and the rounding up of a great herd affords opportunity for a fine piece of moving picture camera work.

The wild animal in captivity is always an attractive subject on the screen; the "captivity" of these ranch-bred buffalos is, however, of such a nature that by the aid of this picture we are virtually studying the animal in his unfettered state.

THE WORTH OF THE MAN

Imp Release, January 25

"Worth makes the man and want of it the fellow; the rest is naught but leather and prunella."

So wrote the poet. The proverb also has it that, "Handsome is as handsome does."

When Arthur Severn went up to his university the fact that he was a hunchback brought him into ridicule at the hands of his fellow students. The gentle commiserations of Elsie Woodward, the president's daughter, alleviated his sufferings to some extent, but the glaring fact remained that he was generally despised for his deformity. But he stuck to his work and became a successful surgeon with a hospital position.

Chance threw Elsie in his way as a patient. She was taken to the very hospital where he was at work. A difficult operation had to be performed on the girl and to Arthur Severn was assigned the duty. He had almost completed his task when the hospital took fire. His assistants sought safety in flight but Arthur coolly and bravely stuck to his work, defying the flames and smoke, and when he had finished the operation bore the unconscious girl to a place of safety. Her life had been saved in a double sense. But Arthur suffered for his heroism. He was burnt and disfigured.

The man met his reward, however, Elsie's father placed her hand in that of the young hero who had saved her life.

NORTHERN HEARTS

Republic Release, February 4

REP Two young trappers and miners, Sam Benson and Ralph Martin, fall in love with the same girl, Ruth Daniel. Ruth accepts Ralph, which causes a quarrel between the partners which Ruth eventually patches up, and they continue their partnership. After the quarrel has been patched up they leave on a hunting expedition with their dog teams. They become separated during a blizzard and Sam is killed by a party of bandits who infest the region. The story that Ralph tells of bandits having killed Sam is not believed by the miners and Ralph is accused of his death, witnesses swearing that they heard the quarrel between the two. Ruth, however, is a staunch believer in her lover's innocence, and at pistol point holds back a crowd of miners who have come to take Ralph, until he makes his escape. Ruth, slightly injured, is assisted to her home by an officer of the Canadian Mounted Police, who has been sent in search of the fugitive; he learns from her that the man he is hunting is her lover.

Ralph having escaped to the hills, starts in his search for the bandits in order to vindicate himself. He meets them and in a running battle across snow-covered mountains, he is driven back to the town and seeks shelter in the home of his sweetheart. A posse of citizens, hearing the firing, rush out, and upon discovering that a gang of bandits are in town give battle and drive them out, leaving their dead and wounded in the street. Among the wounded is one who confesses that his band killed Sam, thus vindicating Ralph and making two young people happy. The picture is taken amidst the snow-covered picturesque Adirondack Mountains.

SPARE THE ROD

John Morton is an upright citizen, a thoughtful husband, and in the vernacular of his own New England folk, "a good provider"; the iron blood of generations of hardy Puritan forefathers courses through his veins, and his ideas of parental discipline are more of early Colonial days than of the present, and in consequence his little son regards his father with a great deal more of awe and admiration than love.

The boy's mother is of a far different calibre than her husband, and his strictness toward the child for any small juvenile lapses has caused her tender heart no small amount of agony during the eight years since the boy was born. The mother's resentment of her husband's methods of reproof and punishment of the boy has never brought about an open quarrel, but she had gone so far as to plead with his mother to try and persuade John to spare the child and spoil the rod. The old lady, who had likewise suffered much from her husband in a similar way, had also endeavored to modify John's views of the necessary discipline to be used toward the child, but all persuasion had failed. The boy was ever kept in fear of that small bamboo rod, which, at the slightest provocation, was always used.

The first light snowfall of the season led to a fall from grace by small John, junior. A portly gentleman in a silk hat passed conveniently near, and the child was unable to restrain the age-old desire to hit a shining mark. His chubby little hands patted a snowball in shape, and "biff" went the silk hat, and, the damage done, the boy quickly hid behind the steps. The old gentleman turning quickly, however, discovered him, and while at first in a rage, the size of the small offender turned his frown to a chuckle, and merely shaking a warning finger at the boy, the old gentleman ruefully polished up his hat, and departed, smiling over reminiscences of his own boyhood. Unfortunately, however, Morton had been an observer of the scene from the library window, and, despite his wife's tearful plea not to be harsh with the boy, he summoned the youngster in, and, taking the inevitable rod, took the child into the next room, leaving the mother outside the door, gripping her heart to stop its wild beatings at every cry that came to her ears from the room of punishment. Unable to restrain herself any longer, and forgetful of her awe of her upright husband, she dashed into the room and took the child into her arms. Morton, his temper further aroused by opposition, insisted upon her giving him the child and let him proceed with his punishment, but, fully aroused, "the female of the species, more dangerous than the male," fought him off, and—hugging the child close to her—fled from the room, threatening to take her baby and leave her husband forever.

NOTICE!—Get your name and address on our mailing list QUICK. Big things coming!

For two years Morton waited vainly for his wife's return, and, little by little, his iron belief in himself and his principles weakened. He never took anyone into his confidence, never went to anyone for sympathy, but every night found him in his lonesome house, wandering from room to room, and finally returning to the old library, and there, sitting before the old fireplace, came visions of his wife and his boy, and always blotting out the vision, came that slender bamboo rod. Many times he had been on the point of writing to her, but always his pride had stopped him. He traced her movements and found that she had gone into a rural district and was teaching school. He had endeavored through his lawyers to provide for her financially, but the offers had always been refused. The little wife had fought her battle for her child and herself and won. Despite prejudice of the little rural community where she was teaching against an unknown woman with a child, she had finally won over public opinion, and the "Widow Morton," as the school teacher allowed herself to be called, became strong in the affections and respect of the community.

Nathan Hawkins, a prosperous young farmer, fell a victim to her gentle face and sweet manner, and, calling upon her in the old-fashioned parlor of Widow Scruggins, where the school teacher was boarding, manfully asked her to marry him. Amazed and frightened, she told him how impossible it was, and informed him what none of the village knew—that her husband was living.

The Widow Scruggins, whose ear had been applied to the keyhole during the proposal, immediately marched off and gathered the school board together, and with the grim satisfaction of her type in doing its duty, forced the worthy gentlemen of the board to inform the teacher that her services as a mentor for the children of the village were no longer desirable. Heartbroken, Mrs. Morton turned to face a harsher blow. The Widow Scruggins informed her that her respectable abode could not shelter a woman who was not living with her husband, and Mrs. Morton, with a heavy heart, proceeded to pack her few belongings and face the prospect of seeking another locality where she might begin anew with only her child to comfort her.

In the meantime, however, the hangers-on at the railroad station had been much perturbed over the arrival of a very well-dressed gentleman who inquired for the place of abode of their school teacher. It was John Morton. His pride broken, and humbly repentent of the past, he came to seek his wife's forgiveness and beg her to return to him.

On his way to the Widow Scruggins', he beheld two small boys engaged in a fistic battle, and in spite of himself became enthused over the valiant efforts of the smaller boy, who, though sadly handicapped by size and weight, was nevertheless holding his own. Separating the children, Morton found himself looking into the face of his son. Two years had not dimmed the child's remembrance of his father's stern admonition against fighting, and the boy looked at Morton with trembling lips. The father stooped down and held out his arms toward his son, and there was something in his father's eyes that caused the child to lose all fear and throw himself into the waiting arms.

Even as the Widow Scruggins was urging the school teacher to depart, little John arrived on the scene with his father, and the worthy Widow Scruggins was again horrified at a further exhibition of the disreputable character of the school teacher, for all that she could see through the keyhole was a very dignified gentleman opening a suitcase, and taking therefrom a small bamboo rod, viciously breaking it into pieces and throwing it upon her spotless carpet, and then, terrible to relate, the school teacher wildly threw her arms about the said dignified party and without a word of explanation to the outraged Widow Scruggins, the little party left that paragon of virtue speechless—an unusual state of affairs.

THAT EXPENSIVE RIDE

Harry Purdy is battling daily with the problem that confronts ninety-nine per cent of the world's people—making both ends meet. He estimates that he has three assets, his wife, little boy, and his daughter. He had never risen above a bookkeeper's salary, but by strict economy he and his wife have managed to make a cozy little home—to give their children a fair education, and by an extra effort are starting their daughter's musical education. As is the case with many men under such circumstances, he had never been able to lay by a dollar for the proverbial rainy day. Their honeymoon is the only outing that lingers in his wife's memory.

The repayment of an old loan for $100, made years before to a friend, fills Purdy with an overwhelming inclination to extravagance. Many times he and his wife have envied the gay and happy couples whirling merrily by in automobiles, and he decides that an auto trip to the country and a day off will be the proper means to celebrate. The family spend a glorious day in the country and, returning in the twilight, the hired chauffeur lets out an extra burst of speed. An old apple woman loaded down with her wares suddenly tries to dash across the street, and before the chauffeur can stop the car she is knocked over. Purdy has the car stopped, and with a policeman who has come upon the scene takes the old woman to her home. A doctor is summoned, and while he is unable to locate any serious external injuries, the old woman seems to suffer such agony that the doctor is convinced there is some serious internal injury, to say nothing of the nervous shock she has undergone.

Her husband, a lazy, besotted old scoundrel, takes all Purdy's available cash, and the doctor is told to care for the woman until she recovers. Purdy and the doctor have barely left the house when the old woman winks slyly at her husband, jumps to her feet and indicates that she has received no injuries whatsoever. They get their cunning old heads together and resolve to get the most out of the situation, and poor Purdy is later confronted by the fact that he has an old woman on his hands to provide for, who is absolutely unable to move, and who moans and complains in agony every time he or the physician approach.

Stricken with remorse, Purdy takes up his burden. He takes out of his home his own comfortable Morris chair and places it at the invalid's disposal, and makes arrangements to allow her a stipulated amount each week; an amount which means the foregoing of his family's part of the necessities of life. The months go on and the old woman remains a hopeless invalid.

The physician is unable to diagnose her trouble, and finally comes to the conclusion that she needs some mental stimulant. She is supposed to be resting helpless and immovable in her chair throughout the entire day, and he suggests that something be done to afford her amusement. Purdy has no more money to give, as the amount he is allowing her has cut his resources down to the point where his wife and children are doing without necessary clothing and barely getting sufficient food. ration comes to him—the piano. It is no longer used, as the music lessons have been discontinued. It is of the player piano type, and he places it in the old couple's squalid home and instructs the old man how to make use of it.

The months go on, and Purdy becomes desperate. He is unable to meet the ever-increasing demands of the old woman, to whom he considers every consideration due. Things have reached the breaking point, and as ever in the darkest hour, the light is ready to appear. The old woman's husband, insolent in prosperity, loses his sense of caution, and when they are alone forces his wife to resume her former continual waiting upon him. They are seated at a bountifully laden table, at the very moment when Purdy's wife is sadly shaking her head over the poor food she is setting before her husband. The old man sits back from his table well satisfied, and orders his wife to "rush the can." She demurs, stating that it is dangerous—she may be seen; but the old man forces her out of the door.

Purdy, arising from his insufficient dinner, makes his way to the old couple's home with their regular weekly allowance, and is surprised to find the old man alone. The old scoundrel is ready with an excuse, and quiets Purdy by telling him that the old woman is resting in her bed. Purdy gives him the money and starts to leave, when in the door, carrying a huge measure of beer, enters the old woman. Purdy immediately grasps the situation, and denounces them. He summons expressmen and a policeman and gives the old couple in charge, and has his furniture removed. He is just going out the door, when he perceives the can of beer, and realizing that his money has purchased it, makes good use of the same. He then goes home to his wife, whom he finds toiling over the weekly wash, and imparts the glad news to her that their burden has been lifted—that they will once more be able to live on the old scale—that there will be enough for the children to eat, sufficient clothes and that their little daughter shall continue her music lessons.

The big balanced rock, which projects nearly a hundred feet in the air, near the beautiful suburbs of Colorado Springs and which appears as if it would topple over with a little push or a gust of wind, has stood there from time immemorial.

This story, which is a delicate little legend of compelling charm, deals with the origin of this wonderful demonstration of nature. This is the story supposed to have happened hundreds of years ago.

Little Rosalie has a stepmother who is very cruel. One of those men who eat children for their breakfast thinks Rosalie will make a good meal, and so offers to buy her. Rosalie, not relishing the idea of a home in a cannibal's stomach, runs away.

She runs on and on until she finds herself in the Garden of the Gods. Here she falls asleep. Pollywaggs, a dwarf, happens along and sees her. In haste he goes off and brings his cohorts. They awaken the frightened Rosalie, but their kindness and reassuring manner instills her with trust. She tells them her story and they weep. They ceremoniously crown her their Queen and pay her great deference.

But her happiness is soon ended when along comes the cannibal and takes her off to his cave and locks her up. Pollywaggs discovers the cave. The whole dwarf nation sets out to rescue their queen. They enlist the aid of Prince Sunshine, a bold knight. The knight and the cannibal meet in combat and the cannibal is worsted. He runs off and by magic ascends an inascendable mountain of rock.

The cannibal soon comes to terms when the dwarfs begin to undermine and dig away the foundations of his refuge. The rock stands out with only a few feet of base. When the rock almost begins to topple, the cannibal throws down the key to his cave and the queen is rescued.

Prince Sunshine takes her in his arms and they are happy ever after, while the balanced rock stands a monument to her rescue and a cannibal's disappointment.

A MAN'S A MAN

Jacob Strauss, a peddler, is bullied by a disreputable man-about-town. Later his child is run down by this man's touring car. A mob, led by an honest and infuriated son of Erin, prepares to lynch the half-drunken owner of the auto, but he escapes and finds refuge in an apartment in a ramshackle tenement. The apartment is Strauss'.

The excited mob and the infuriated leader follow the man to Strauss' apartment. Strauss, who, like his ancestors, has inherited a dislike for blood and strife, protects his child's murderer from the violent mob.

A year later Strauss and the joy-rider meet at the cemetery near the child's grave. The joy-rider has learned a lesson and is now penitent. He seeks forgiveness. His humility touches the sentimental heart of the peddler and he is forgiven. The scene ends with both shaking hands across the grave of the unfortunate child.

PARSON SUE

A parson arrives in the midst of a bunch of wild cowboys. Expecting a male parson, the boys set out in full force to receive him, but on the road, when they suddenly run into the one-horse shay carrying a female parson, they keel over in surprise.

Right after her arrival the boys begin to lay plans to get in right—while the parson loses no time in starting a campaign for the defeat of Satan. She begins by posting a sign near the town horse-trough to the effect that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." Of course the boys see the sign and immediately there is a sudden disposition among them to make use of soap, water and brush.

One cowboy in particular is very much in love with the Parson. He shows his affection only too plainly, and so the boys decide to play a trick on him. Their practical joke unintentionally is not only the means of frustrating a plot against the parson, but it brings the parson and her lover together.

THE NURSE

There is an old saying which tells us that we cannot know people fully well until we have lived under the same roof with them.

If the wife in this story had known it, she might never have entertained the friend who came to visit her; for it is this same friend, the chum of girlhood days, who opens the first chapter of an intrigue which wrecks the happy home. But there is a Providence which presides over such matters and which in this case sends a representative to earth, so to speak. This envoy is a little daughter of the couple through whom fate pulls her strings in such a way that before the picture is finished her little arms are drawing her separated parents together into loving embrace.

The part of the little girl in this picture is played by Juliet Shelby, a wonderful child who has scored such a magnificent success with William & Dustin Farnum in the "Littlest Rebel."

A MAD DOG

Lux Release, January 19

Cleanliness is next to godliness, but oh! said Ponto, the pup, as he escaped from the fair hands of his mistress whilst she was giving him his bath, and rushed down the street with his jaws covered with the white soap lather. Seeing this vicious animal "foaming at the mouth," the good townsfolk take to their heels, remembering their numerous appointments at a distant part of the town. Many are the frolics that result, but they prove expensive to the fond owner when she finally recovers the lost Ponto. On the same reel

THE HARM THAT GOSSIPS DO

The work of a farm laborer is distasteful to the intellectual Jean Michal. One day, whilst laboring in the fields, he observes an aeroplane flying gracefully over his head. The sight of this beautiful object, drifting and gliding as the breezes blow, sets fire to the ambitions of the humble laborer. He immediately commences to build imaginary aeroplanes in his mind's eye. Seeing him idle, the farmer who employs him becomes enraged and discharges him with many angry threats. His words fall upon the ever-ready ear of the village gossip, who soon has a pretty tale floating round the village. When Jean decides to go into the world beyond and seek his fortune, his friends who have listened well to the gossip's malicious tale, turn their back upon him. Years afterwards the country yokel becomes a great aviator, and his return to his native village is seized upon as an opportunity for rejoicing. The aviator realizes how hollow all these mundane honors are, and prefers to return quietly to his home and shun the friendship all are so willing to offer him in the brightest days of his life.

WHEN MEN LOVE

REP A young gambler on his way across the Yukon trail stops at the Caribou road-house. He meets Bess Lloyd and immediately falls in love with her. His love for the girl causes him to postpone his journey.

One day he tells Bess of his love. She declares that she cannot marry him, as she is promised to another.

Pete Benson, Bess' fiancee, arrives from across the trail. Both men show a little coldness toward each other when Bess introduces them — both realize that they love the same girl.

The gambler decides to hit the trail, but he must see Bess before he goes. He calls on her and during their conversation Bess lets fall a remark that she is sorry that the gambler is going away. He misconstrues her meaning and so far forgets himself that he takes her in his arms and kisses her.

Pete has seen from a distance the gambler take the girl into his arms—he is at once aroused to jealousy. As the gambler leaves he comes to Bess and expresses his anger. The gambler leaves the road-house and takes the trail; he stops near Bess's cabin hoping for just a glance at the girl he loves. Pete comes to the cabin, misconstruing the gambler's action, and shows ferocious rage at the gambler daring to come near his promised wife on their wedding day; he follows the gambler and on the edge of a cliff they have a fight. Pete becomes heated and incidentally pushes the gambler over the cliff; Pete is terrified at what he has done, returns to his bunk-house and tries to drown his terror in liquor. The gambler is picked up by some trappers and taken to their hut.

Bess and the invited guests arrive at the road-house for the wedding. Pete's nerves are all unstrung and he has some difficulty to get himself in shape—he eventually arrives at the road-house and is warmly greeted and congratulated. In the meantime, the gambler is taken care of by the trappers; when his mind is clear he realizes what Pete has done to him. He goes to the road-house and through the window sees the wedding about to take place. Pete sees the gambler's face at the window, is terror-stricken, thinks he sees the vision of the man he killed, and collapses just as the wedding ceremony is about to take place. He is carried to another room and becomes temporarily insane; he flees madly to the seat of his crime.

The doctor informs the people of Pete's madness; they form a searching party led by the gambler, who has returned to the road-house. Pete in his madness looks over the cliff to see the dead body of his rival—he loses his balance and falls—the searchers find his dead body later and he is brought back to the road-house. Bess learns that the gambler was attacked by Pete and the real cause of Pete's madness. She appreciates the gambler's silence in the matter. When all is over, he is about to cross the trail and out of her life; she expresses her wish for him to stay and eventually marries him.

FOUR YALE MEN

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

The spirit with which the men become imbued during their college days is strong enough to carry them all through life, and though the members of a class may disperse to the four corners of the earth, any mention of their alma mater awakens the young feeling in the oldest men.

These four men agreed to meet at the frat house every fifteen years and compare notes of progress. The vicissitudes of life supply dramatic element for the story. From the enthusiastic young graduates, we see their meetings at intervals of fifteen years, until we view the old gray-haired men that Father Time has changed them into. One by one they drop out of the line; at the second meeting only three men are left to drink and toast their alma mater, but another and then another drops out until the lone survivor of the quartet keeps the agreement and appears at the appointed time only to gaze at the three vacant chairs.

Then he, too, terminates his membership in the way that is no man's own.

A SUMMER FLIRTATION

Great Northern Release, January 20

Robert and Willy leave town for a holiday by the briny, and at the hotel both fall in love with the same girl. Robert, however, is successful, although Willy believes the girl will fall a victim to his blandishments. The two friends are constantly running up against each other in their endeavors to please the girl. Robert always comes off best. Meanwhile, there is stopping at the hotel an old and scraggy maiden, who has fixed her eye upon poor tubby, Willy, and she, time after time, calls him off to do little jobs for her, during which Robert and Edith go off by themselves. The climax comes, however, when Willy writes a letter to Edith asking her to meet him, and if she is willing, to drop her handkerchief at tea. The girl reads this and then conveys it to the old girl. She believes it to be meant for her, and drops her piece of cambric two or three times right under Willy's nose. Edith also lets her handkerchief fall. Willy is at the appointed place waiting for his lady love, when up comes the old dear, who lavishes caresses upon him. He bolts, and manages to get clear away, only to come across Robert and Edith kissing in the shade of a boat. He throws a coil of rope at them in disgust and goes off. Later that evening, however, he gives an unwilling consent to Robert's engagement.

DESPERATE DESMOND ON THE TRAIL AGAIN

Desperate Desmond is mad clear through. Rosamond has written him to cease pestering her, she hates him —the cur—and loves only her Caude. Desmond thirsts for revenge; he must take a good drink of it and at once. Rounding up Gomgotz and his gang of wild men, he sets up a trap for the lovers and at the psychological moment springs it.

Claude is marched up to the mouth of a flaming volcano and unceremoniously thrown in. Rosamond, like a true heroine, still refuses to marry the villain. Down the hill straggle Desmond, the wild men and the fair captive.

The volcano is just a secret distillery, and the moonshiners volunteer to aid Claude. Barrel after barrel of the good old stuff is rolled out of the crater and then rolled down the hill after the descending party. Desmond, Gomgotz, Rosamond, et al, are bowled over without much ado. The villain is easily captured and Rosamond once more reposes in the arms of her hero. Meanwhile the wild men make a successful dash for liberty.

Fire and water for Desmond. He is placed in a barrel topped with a burning one and pushed out to sea. Without watching the fiend's finish, Claude and Rosamond leisurely ride away.

"Curses! I'll foil them, yet!" so hisses Desmond from the barrel's interior. He manages to burn two holes through the sides of his habitation, grabs two stray oars and rows safely ashore. Reinforced by Gomgotz's men, he starts in hot pursuit after the lovers. Claude's vigilant ear apprises him of impending trouble. With Rosamond by his side, he dashes away and crosses the railroad tracks just ahead of a train. Without stopping, the lovers ride to the Fort and summon the soldiers. Captured a second time, Desmond is sentenced to be shot. Twelve boys in blue level their rifles at him, take deliberate aim and —curse the luck! There is Claude embracing beautiful Rosamond.

H. H. JOHNSON, President

Precision Machine Co.,
New York City.

Gentlemen:-

The new mechanism which I received from you a few weeks ago has been tested out and I find that it is perfect in every detail.

I cannot praise this machine too much--it is so simple in operation, easy and simple to thread, quiet running, and the projected picture is discussed daily by the audience. They come to me with this question, "Why is it that your pictures don't hurt our eyes, and are so brilliant?" And they always finish the talk by saying, "Your pictures beat anything we ever saw before."

I wish to say this in regard to the Simplex machine--it is the best first aid to a disgusted audience who think pictures hurt their eyes. To compare it with other machines of today, there is none to compare it with; it stands out in a class by itself. Having used nearly all other makes of machines. I say this without prejudice toward any; I say it from the standpoint of a perfect picture on the curtain, and this is possible with the Simplex.

The new three-wing shutter is a great improvement over the one-wing which you first put out, and I cannot see any difference in the brilliancy of the picture.

In conclusion; I wish to say that the answer to a perfect picture is SIMPLEX PROJECTOR.

Is it possible to get the agency for your machine? I have had some inquiries about it and may be able to sell a few if I could get the agency. Let me know about it, and the discounts and other conditions regarding an agency.

Very truly yours,

H. H. Johnson

EDUCATIONAL AND RELIGIOUS FILMS

FROM correspondence on our desk we are very pleased to note the great advances being made by the public in requesting that educational pictures be shown for their benefit and to further the great strides being made by the educational authorities to procure films of subjects for use in the various lectures delivered by professors to their classes, and we are still more pleased to find the manufacturers waking up to the fact that an educational film is of great value to the exchanges and a good money equivalent in their own pockets. Companies are springing up all over the land for the purpose of making educational features exclusively, and the other day we were invited to see the cinematograph of a microscopic subject. All this tends to bear out what we have constantly told the manufacturers that when once the supply is there the demand will follow in very rapid succession. A prominent professor writes to know if manufacturers have produced or are likely to produce films of the working of machinery from the inception of the iron ingot to the actual machine at work and in operation, also if the careful manufacture of a watch from the raw material to the finished product is obtainable. We searched every manufacturer all over the world to get this information and failed. We charge nothing for this tip to the manufacturers. If they want a scenario of this subject we will write it and present it to them, or if they wish they can have our ideas and put them into scenario form themselves.

Another great advancement which we are pleased to note is the fact that religious papers are taking up the question of the educational possibilities of the films in a much broader sense than heretofore. They are seeking pictures of a religious nature whereby they may reach the masses and so fill their churches and meeting houses by up-to-date methods. We remember the saying of a well-known divine in England who was blamed for putting hymns to a music hall ditty and was very much criticized therefor, remarking to his critics, "If the devil has good music I want to get it for Christ, and if the devil can use these means to amend, why should not I use the same means to controvert the effects?" In the same way religious bodies are using moving pictures to attract people so that they may teach them their various teachings or tenets, and by so doing teach the people to think. It is a very hard matter to get men nowadays to think. They are too much in a hurry, and instead of doing their own thinking they want other people, other leaders, or teachers to think for them, and they wallow in the thoughts of other people's brains. It is too much trouble to cultivate an individual responsibility of their own. They very much prefer to be led like sheep following the bell-wether rather than strike out a line of independent thought of their own. We believe the moving picture introduced by these religious teachers into the church will be the means of making people think for themselves because the picture speaks to the eye and not to the ear, consequently they will be more amenable to the teaching of the silent instructor rather than imbibing the ideas of the spoken word. We congratulate all the up-to-date ministers of whatever denomination they may belong to in the great forward step that they have taken in this movement, and trust that the day is past when the churches and civic societies find fault with the moving picture.

We believe that a great forward advancement is now looming on the horizon for both the educational and religious film and we will congratulate and give full publicity to every manufacturer who is working along these lines. We believe that every manufacturer in the industry on whichever side he belongs has in his heart the full desire to make uplifting, ennobling, and powerful teachers of the moving picture. We know of several who are doing all that is possible in their power to uplift the industry onto the highest possible pinnacle of helpfulness to their fellowmen, and when the government and the church, and all religious assemblies ally themselves in the use of his great factor of instruction the country and the public will be all the better for seeing these pictures. It should be the aid of each manufacturer to strive to get the best possible out of himself and enthuse those under him to follow in line with him and carry out his ideas. The field is vast, the possibilities are grand, and there is no reason why it is not possible for everyone to take advantage of the desires of all true educationalists and make this year of 1912 a land mark or an epoch making year in the annals of cinematography.

WHAT OF 1912?

"RING out the old, ring in the new, ring out the false, ring in the true," remarks Tennyson, and he might as well have alluded to the Cinematographic industry as to any other walk in life.

Ring out the old! Yes, taboo the hoary-headed arguments, attacks and slurs against the worth of the moving picture.

Ring in the new! Which means to agitate the question of the uplifting of the animated picture industry. Ring out the false statements against the picture play; ring in the truth and let it be heard throughout the land.

In the new year just dawned, let every man, woman and child interested in any manner in the picture organize themselves in committees of one to convert the misguided and to work singly and collectively for the uplift of Nickelodeon.

As the years pass along, the moving picture industry is becoming more elevated and more respected. A few years ago the business was frowned upon by many, and the manufacturer of the moving picture and the moving picture theater manager were given but scant respect. This has all been changed. In religious, professional and educational circles there is a noticeable interest and respect awakened for the motion picture. The manufacturers have done much to accomplish this desired end, and the theatrical manager has added his no small mite to the general uplift of the business.

During the year 1911, many churches, schools and clinics utilized the moving picture for the advancement and uplift and betterment of humanity. During the year 1912 more impressive advancement is expected.

Thomas A. Edison gives one example in Harper's Weekly of how he intends to develop the educational moving pictures.

"Take a pump," says Mr. Edison. "Did you ever learn in your school book how a pump pumped and why it pumped? No; but as soon as you actually saw a pump at work you understood right away. Well, in the moving picture drama I'll have a fellow build a pump, make all the parts and put them together. The section of the tube facing the camera will be made of glass so the children can see all that is inside of it. They'll see the piston drive down the little valve or trap door, fly up as the plunger is forced under water, close down again as the plunger is drawn up, and the water raised up the tube. Steam engine the same way—they'll see the water boil and the steam go through the cylinder and drive the engine."

Principal Charles A. Kent, of the Chicago public schools, has been detailed to make a study of the subject of educational moving pictures for use in the neighborhood "social centers" of the Windy City, and will report his plans soon to the Board of Education. Other cities irrespective of size or population, are also delving into picturedom for educational ideas.

These instances are given to show the trend of events for 1912. We repeat that great strides are expected in moving picture circles. Their importance educationally and otherwise are finally being realized by the class of persons who were strong against the innovation two years ago.

With good clean comedy, convincing drama and plenty of educational subjects, with the adapting of classics and standard novels, the manufacturers can aid the favorable sentiment now so rapidly growing.

Pay the scenario writer good prices, give him credit for his work, utilize more of Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, etc., and the detracting statements of the bigoted against the animated picture will become more and more infrequent.

Hail to nineteen hundred and twelve!

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

CUT OUT THE CRIME PICTURES

By H. P. Tey

There is no subject in this country to-day which has more of popular interest than that of moving pictures. The wonderful progress which has been made in the business which has developed into a science and an art, has caused a nation wide interest in the invention. While the stage and other amusement fields are doing an immense amount of good and are entertaining a great many persons, there is not an amusement in the country which can equal the moving picture business in these respects. The entertainment is cheap. It can be enjoyed more frequently than the regular theater, and in it can be combined both pleasure and education. It is full of great possibilities. The time is coming when it will be recognized as the greatest factor in various degrees of life.

These facts being true it is desired to elevate the tone of the moving picture business, and to eliminate the objectionable features which mar it. The chief feature to which I refer is the exhibition of pictures which represent in complete detail the commission of a crime. In every city in the United States, during the past six months there have been pictures exhibited which deal with every form of murder, robbery, and other disgusting crimes. These pictures in many instances are very crude, and while they would hardly cause a grown man to go out and seize a revolver and slay his fellow men, they are objectionable because of the possible effect they might have on the minds of children. They are not in good taste. There is no entertainment and no art attached to them. They are continuations of the lurid melodrama of the days when the stage carpenter had to ring down the curtain after each act to mop the blood off the stage.

Film like "A Woman Scorned," "The Easterner's Peril," "Over the Cliff," "Sheltered from the World," and others of their type are the kind referred to. Whoever makes these films should look them up, and in future avoid turning out such unmitigated rot, such stupid blood and thunder, vicious pictures.

The Committee of Seven, for the Regulation of Public Amusements of this City, of which I happen to be secretary, is working out plans for reform in the moving picture industry, and expects to place its views before the whole State of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the committee is Mr. Charles E. Leippe, who is a leading citizen of Reading, being president of the Reading Knitting Mills, the Anchor Bending Works, and vice-president of the Berks County Trust Company, and the Schulykill Valley Bank. Mr. Leippe is a broad-minded business man who has done much good for Reading, and looks upon the picture question in a broad-minded manner. He does not believe in persecuting, but rather feels that the exhibitors of rotten pictures should be persecuted.

The Committee of Seven has been fortunate in having the support and efficient backing of Hon. Ira W. Stratton, the Mayor of the city, who took up the question of moving pictures even before the crusade inaugurated by the Evening Telegram which resulted in the formation of the committee of seven. Mr. Stratton has a strict censorship of the picture theaters in Reading, having designated certain police officials to take up the question, and examine each film shown. In all cases, the mayor has firmly stated that when an exhibitor persists in displaying pictures which have crime as their basis, the exhibitor will have his license revoked.

The attitude of Reading has had a marked effect upon the country at large. With the exception of Chicago, it is doubtful if any city has a censorship which amounts to anything, and many inquirers want to know how Mayor Stratton is doing his work. It is possible that the cities of the country will adopt a system of police censorship based on the Stratton system. The so-called National Board of Censorship is not taken seriously by people outside of New York who are interested in this subject. The fact that the Board is almost entirely paid by the moving picture interests, that it is run along slipshod lines, is hardly calculated to give the board much standing in the minds of thinking people. There is nothing intended to reflect upon the integrity of the members of the Board. It is simply an example of the egotism of New York which assumes to run the morals of the entire country, selecting what pictures it chooses.

The average person who lives in New York and gets the New York atmosphere imagines that the United States is bounded on the north by Yonkers, on the east by Flatbush, on the south by Coney Island, and on the west by the Hudson River. Take away Wall street, Klaw and Erlanger, and George M. Cohan, and people in the real United States would be wondering where New York was. To my mind, this self constituted guardianship of the United States by a handful of professional philanthropists is an exhibition of nerve. The National Board of Censorship is a board which does not censor, according to Reading standards, and the manufacturers should either announce that the board is a part of their general advertising scheme or else withdraw financial support from it, and let it get its revenue from outside sources. The matter is about as logical as if the Interstate Commerce Commission were financed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, or the Women's Christian Temperance Union were supported by the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company.

Reading has no fight on moving pictures. It has no quarrel with the manufacturer. It has no row with anyone. It simply says: You people have been sending pictures down here which show crime, and you've got to quit it. Otherwise your exhibitor will have his license revoked.

THE GRUB STAKE MORTGAGE

American Film Mfg. Co. Release, February 8

When Jack Morton gave his finishing touch to his college education, he promptly went out West and soon found work as a mining engineer. Lonesome evenings taught Jack the value of good companionship, and, therefore, he saw much of Mary Walker.

Mary's father worked on the big dam. He was not shrewd—otherwise, Jim Blake, prospecting without success, could never have swindled the old man as he did. Blake had worked his claim for three or four months when one day, thoroughly disgruntled, it occurred to him to "salt" the mine and raise some badly-needed finances on the strength of it. So he carefully filled the crannies in the rock with gold-dust, and having laid the trap, sought out Mary's father to tell him of the great discovery.

"I must have money to work that mine," explained Blake, "and if you will raise the necessary funds, and stake me, we'll go partners on the profits." The old man proved an easy victim, saw the one loaded vein, believed it real, and decided to stake the impostor.

He went to Raleigh, superintendent of the construction work, and told his tale. Raleigh, a man of ruthless, iron will, received a mortgage on the little hut in which the old man and his daughter lived. One week later Mary's father was suddenly killed in a mine blast, one of those accidents so common where the helpless souls are ever at the mercy of Dame Fortune.

It left Mary an orphan. The mortgage fell due, and, in desperation, Mary turned to the only friend she had—Jack Morton. He visited the worthless hole, his experienced eye soon saw the fraud, and torn between love and duty, decided to make a clean breast of the matter to Mary. Meantime, Mary had visited the superintendent, Raleigh. He, quite without heart, demanded the money or the home at once, but finally promised to send Jack to investigate, promising that if Jack's report was favorable, he would turn back the mortgage. This was the crisis that faced Jack on his return Manfully, he went again to the hole hoping to find some evidence of gold. At the hole, he found not gold but Blake, and in the tempestuous talk that followed, Blake taunted Jack that a word from Jack to Raleigh would give the home back to Mary. Jack indignantly refused. Mary was summarily ejected. Jack then produced his own meagre savings, satisfied Raleigh, and asked Mary to marry him and occupy the house that had been her girlhood home.

This is in every sense the exception in Western pictures. The photography is superb, the scenes staged amid a scenic grandeur that will remain long in the mind and the story is well acted, charged with action and carried to a logical conclusion.

MANAGER FLANIGAN, OF UNIQUE THEATER, VOICES SOME OPINIONS

Mr. Flanigan, manager of the Unique Theater, on East Fourteenth street, for moving pictures and vaudeville, who in times past has made desperate efforts to avoid being entrapped into an interview with a newspaper reporter, has at last succumbed to the persistent onset of one of our staff.

Mr. Flanigan has been manager of the Unique since its opening three and a half years ago; he has availed himself of the opportunities afforded him for observation of public sentiment in moving pictures, and we find Mr. Flanigan giving, perhaps, more than the usual amount of thought to what is best for public welfare in the motion picture theater.

Says Mr. Flanigan: "Business is always good here—all day long we have people streaming in. We have tried to make this the best moving picture house on the East Side. The people who frequent this theater feel safe from many of the disagreeable conditions met with in some other moving picture theaters. We maintain order at all times in our house. If anyone happens along who is objectionable in any way, or who is liable to cause any disturbance, we just refund their money and ask them to leave."

Mr. Flanigan was asked what he thought of the matron idea. Said he: "I don't think it could be made practicable. It would be a very difficult matter to set aside a portion of a theater for the use of children. The theater would often be at a great loss thereby, as there would often be times when there would be practically no children coming in, and adults would require to be turned away in consequence."

Mr. Flanigan thinks that the best protection is given children by prohibiting their entry unaccompanied by parents, unless over sixteen years of age. He also is of the opinion that the place for children to be shown moving pictures is in the schools. "A couple of afternoons a week," says Mr. Flanigan, "should be partially devoted to a moving picture entertainment for the children, showing them scenic, industrial, and other films which are for their education and good. They can learn more in five minutes from a moving picture than in two or three hours of poring over books. There has been a wonderful advancement in the quality of Independent films in the past year." Continued Mr. Flanigan: "The public want good films and they show it by the manner in which they applaud a good film when they see it."

He is of the opinion that a little vaudeville of the right kind, sandwiched in, is not a bad idea as it breaks the monotony of the continual run of pictures and rests the eye.

No. 7861. Cinematograph Films.—An American consular officer in a Mediterranean country report that a business man in his district desires to be placed in communication with American manufacturers of cinematograph films. He states there is a large local demand for moving picture films, which is at present largely supplied by Italian and French houses. The inquirer desires to represent American manufacturers in this line for the country in which he is located and states he is in a position to push the sale of the same. Correspondence in English, French, or Italian is invited, with prices, terms, and conditions. Desirable references can be furnished.

MADAME METHIVIER

She is a woman fortunate enough to be endowed with all the necessary beauty, personality, and talent, that assure her success as an actress. Whatever part she is to play she does well, without any apparent effort. The simplest actions are often the most difficult to perform upon the stage; nothing seems to be impossible for her. Whatever the situation or part may be, she goes through it as if it were part of her own life; she seems to be able to live the life of the character she is assuming. In every sense she is a finished actress, and her powers are just as well appreciated when seen upon the canvas as upon the stage.

After appearing several years with the foremost companies in Europe, taking leading parts with the best known players, she has established an enviable reputation for herself. Her latest triumphs have been achieved at the Odeon theater in Paris, where she is a general favorite.

It was a master stroke of the Eclipse Company when they induced her to join their forces. Her acting delights audiences all over the world, instead of just a few hundred fortunate enough to attend the Odeon.

Two recent Eclipse productions in which she appears are: "The Miracle," released December 20, 1911, and "The Gambler's Wife," to be released February 14, 1912.

In the former subject, "The Miracle," Madame Methivier with Madame Duce of the Sarah Bernhardt theater of Paris, help to make this film one of the features of the year. The story is one which appeals to everybody, and can possibly be produced more realistically upon the screen than upon the stage. It offers the players the greatest opportunity to display their ability, and we can safely say they do.

In the latter subject, "The Gambler's Wife," Madame Methivier as "the wife" shows her great dramatic powers to advantage. At first, as the wife of the artist, she appears as light hearted as any happy woman could be. And later, when her husband has fallen into the clutches of gambling, she shows herself to be a woman of remarkable strength of character. She doesn't lose courage for a minute, but does everything in her power to bring about his return to his studio and home.

The scene in which she pleads with him at the gambling house needs no spoken words; her facial expression and actions are sufficient to tell us just what the lips should be saying.

No doubt plays like these, performed by actors and actresses possessing the ability of Madame Methivier, are going to place the film business upon the highest level.

MISS MAY BUCKLEY

One of the most valuable acquisitions added to the acting company of the Lubin Picture Film Plant is Miss May Buckley, a leading lady of wide experience and reputation. Miss Buckley has been featured, almost starred, by many of the most powerful theatrical producers of the country. One of her early successes was the charming performance of Luey Tsing in the "First Born," first produced in San Francisco. As theatrical news travels long distances and very quickly, managers asked who was this mere child that had made a hit that was talked about for four thousand miles across the country. When little May was at liberty large salaries were offered and she was not put to any trouble to get engagements that were envied by clever players twice her age.

In the production of "The Manxman" Miss Buckley came very near dividing the honors with that eminent star, James O'Neill; the role was a very intense one and helped to make the young lady's fame and fortune; other notable engagements were with John Drew, Annie Russell and Raymond Hitchcock. The variety of plays demanding versatile ability, and in all cases earning the appreciation of the critics, the public and the stars she supported. It is now understood that photo plays not only require pantomimic action but finished and intense expression, and Miss Buckley is an artist that will make the Lubin films famous from end to end of the country.

Viewing the fact that this finished actress has been a valuable quantity to such managers as Charles Frohman, Henry W. Savage, David Belasco, Liebler & Company and George Edwardes, the Lubin Film Company certainly are selecting some talent.

Galveston, Tex.—The Majestic Moving Picture Theater was damaged by fire to the amount of $500.

Chicago, Ill.—Ed Rothe will erect a new one-story addition to the theater at 7815 S. Halsted street at a cost of $4,000.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The Marquis Amusement Co., capital $10,000, Wm. H. Coonts, Carl B. Ford and Francis B. Marvin.

New York, N. Y.—Work has just commenced on the new Palace Theater to be erected at 47th and Broadway by Martin Beck.

FILMING THE WHITE PLAGUE

On the alert to secure film subjects most interesting and valuable to the human race the up-to-date film manufacturers are pressing into service every phase and circumstance of modern institutions.

The world's largest sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis is located in the Adirondacks, and is known as the Ray Brook Sanitarium. "A New Lease On Life" is a most appropriate title for a moving picture woven around the experience of a man who by dissipation and failure to follow nature's laws, became the victim of that ravager of the white race, entered the Ray Brook Sanitarium, and by studiously following the rules laid down, he was given a "new lease on life."

The most interesting phase of a subject of this kind is that every one of us who has the intelligence to recognize true conditions in large centers of civilization, knows that he is walking shoulder to shoulder, and hip to hip with death. And that at any time through overexposure, over-work, or some other act of intemperance death is liable to get the hip-lock on him and crowd him off the thoroughfare. For this reason this subject, "A New Lease on Life," must appeal strongly to every intelligent spectator when it is thrown upon the screen, for it will show him every step, and every measure in the process of breaking loose the death grip of tuberculosis should he become a victim and discover it in time to take the treatment that the hero is shown as taking in "A New Lease on Life."

The Republic Film Company is to be congratulated on their enterprise and the service they are rendering humanity in showing these things to the public in the form of two 1,000-foot reels of romance.

Racine, Wis.—John C. Wagner has purchased property on Sixth street and will build a $6,000 vaudeville theater.

Gasper, Wyo.—W. R. Sample, proprietor of the Bell Theater, will erect a new opera house on Center street near the Bell Theater.

NOTES OF INTEREST

The H. A. Mackie Company, Inc., general supply company for moving picture machinery and supplies, will remove their place of business from 853 Broadway to 21 East Fourteenth street about February 1.

Mr. Joseph Marentett, of the Washington Film Exchange, has been in the city during the past week.

NEW COMPANY

Mr. F. F. Byron, of Boston, and Mr. C. W. Spanuth, of New York City, have formed a co-partnership under the name of the Feature Film Exchange, with offices located at 795 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

The offices are equipped up-to-date and a reception room is maintained for all the profession, where all leading theatrical and moving picture papers and magazines are on file for perusal.

The new factory, for the past four months under construction by the American Film Manufacturing Company, was given the finishing touches last week. The factory force was moved to the new quarters at Evanston and Devon avenues, where they will have generally increased facilities and more room. The new structure was erected at a cost of $50,000. The realty occupied adjoins the best residence section on the North Shore and was purchased from Edward Hines, the lumber magnate, whose holdings in that neighborhood are extensive. The American has neglected nothing that will make for more and better work. The universal popularity of its films demands those refining touches that can only be given where the working facilities leave nothing to be desired. The dark rooms and studio have been given especial care and possess some features quite new to motion picture work.

State of New York Assists Republic Film Company

An all-satisfying film, "A New Lease on Life," which embodies athletic, educational, scientific, sensational and romantic features, is soon to be issued by the Republic Film Company. This film ought to satisfy everybody. The scientific role is played by Dr. De Grosse, the eminent bacteriologist at Saranac Lake, one of the largest institutions for the cure of consumption in the world.

The hero of the story goes through an entire course for the cure of incipient tuberculosis, and the cure is shown in so simple a manner that it can be followed in your own home in the city or country. The wonderful object lesson that this will teach can be appreciated when mention is made of the fact that every second of the day a life is sacrificed to the Great White Plague which could be saved if people will only follow the practical demonstrations shown in this film.

An ice-skating race, won by Champion Baker, in which all records were broken for a quarter of a mile, as well as a game of hockey on ice, will meet the approval of lovers of sports. To those seeking sensationalism, a race between two sleighs, a fall of sixty feet down the side of white mountain and a fight between wolves and a pack of ferocious Alaskan dogs or huskies will undoubtedly prove satisfactory.

The beautiful romance carried on throughout the entire story will hold the attention of every one from beginning to end.

La Mesa, Cal., where is located the Western studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company, seems to be rapidly gaining popularity as a home for motion picture manufacturers, as several companies have recently announced their intention of locating either in La Mesa or the beautiful country adjoining. The American company has always contended that the average citizen was a California enthusiast whether he had been there or not. Hence the American has largely exploited the beautiful backgrounds seen in its pictures.

Detroit, Mich.—The Washington Theater Co. will erect a new theater at Clifford street and Washington boulevard.

San Diego, Cal.—Fulkerson and Edwards have plans for a new Mirror Theater to be six stories and cost $30,000.

THE TURMOIL

By Lindsay Bancroft

(Concluded.)

WIZARD:
What motley crowd is this before me waits
For speech and audience? Mummers they or waifs?

CARL:
These be the rest of us, O worthy wizard
In th' Independent ranks, from A to Izzard.

WIZARD:
Our interviewing, then, is no mean task,
Should we of each one his opinions ask;
Therefore, we will abandon our first plan
And greet ye all as one rebellious clan.

FIRST EV.:
Now that's the talk, get off the earth, ye scum,
Or keep your wagging tongues most strictly mum.

WIZARD:
Full several years agone, as ye all know,
'Twas I invented all things here below;
Including moving pictures: there's no doubt
Some trifling thing I didn't think about,
But th' patents cover it, my attorneys say
The courts have stopped that trick of disagreeing,
In me ye live and move and have your being;
If but my hand I raise, your builded fame
Shall to oblivion pass from whence it came.
(Here the Inds. all slowly collapse to the floor, and remain inert; all except a trim little girlish figure at extreme rear.)

FIRST EV.:
The bluff has worked, the old man is a wonder,
For sure his speech has made the crowd go under.
What bold young creature's this who stands erect
A comely gem, forsooth, and bright——

MARION (advancing):
Correct.
I'm but a new one in the maker's ranks
So for the invitation here accept my thanks.
I've heard of your "injunctions" and such rot,
And what you'd do to us when th' chance you got;
But, gentlemen, ye should be full of shame
To daub with mire the Wizard's own good name.
My sympathies are his; he really thinks
He DID invent the "star"; O what a jynx
Ye put upon his usefulness to man
By tying him to such an ungodly clan.
Know ye why these my comrades on the floor
Lie speechless and unmoved (d'ye hear them snore),
It is because the tale the Wizard told
Is ancient history. And within our fold
We've all been so o'ercrowded with success
We SLEEP at every chance. That's all, I guess.

FIRST EV.:
Wake them again, now for the deadly blow
When of our latest triumph they shall know.

WIZARD:
The world should know that we have now obtained
Reissue of our patent; all is gained.

BERT THE IMMACULATE:
Aw shucks, let th' Kenyons speak to this poor dolt,
And th' Wizard's squib o'erthrow with thunderbolt.

IZZY:
Let's beat it, fellows, these bum foes are dead
Let's get a Rep, and we'll be Miles ahead.
(Independents now arise again.)

LEW BINN, THE SHINING ONE:
One thing is plain, the plans we came to make
Are nothing worth; shake, Independents, shake.
Old timer as I am in this bum game,
I've made much better pictures since ye came;
Beneath the sign of Liberty's sweet bell
Ill feeling toward a rival cannot dwell.

ANOTHER EV.:
I too would urge the Wizard end the fuss
Of false injunctions.

MODERN HISTORIC RECORDS

When last summer The Tribune published a report of an interview with Mr. Alexander Konta, the founder of the Modern Historic Records Association, considerable doubt was expressed of the likelihood of an early realization of one of his statements, to the effect that ere long the stenographic reports of public meetings, the sessions of legislative bodies, trials at law, and the like, would be supplemented by phonographic and vitagraphic records.

If it is safe to prophesy only when you know, it is wise to make your prophecies come true when you can. This, so we are informed, is what the Modern Historic Records Association, whose honorary presidency has just been accepted by President Taft, purposes to do in the case of Mr. Konta's prediction. The society will ask permission of the managers of the national conventions of both parties to take both phonographic and vitagraphic records of their sessions. It is not likely that the request will be refused, so that probably it only remains to be seen how far the present stage of the mechanical development of these inventions will prove adequate to the association's demands. The assurance has been given that the records can be successfully taken, but at any rate the experiment will be an interesting one. Of its complete success sooner or later there can be no doubt whatsoever. In the world of invention supply has never yet failed to meet a real demand.

Apart from its serious purpose, the undertaking will be worth watching for the effect it may have upon the future behavior of public gatherings. It will enable leaders, followers and opponents to see and hear themselves as others see and hear them in moments of intense activity, in suspense, in victory or in defeat. Many a national convention has deserved to pass into history in a visible, audible record, with banners waving, bands blaring and members shouting themselves hoarse for the candidate of their choice or against him of the other faction. Certain it is that the Modern Historic Records Association allows no time to elapse before starting seriously upon a field of service to history whose scope appears to be practically illimitable.

This corporation proposes to meet satisfactorily and practically all the needs of the trade. The following are the purposes for which the company was formed: To buy, lease, operate and sell moving picture theaters; to sell state rights of special feature films of foreign and American manufacturers; to enable the prospective buyer to obtain any and all kinds of machinery pertaining to the exhibition or manufacture of the moving picture, the company beforehand having obtained the right to sell all same; to supply high-class moving picture entertainments for the parlor, school, or any social or educational organizations.

A special department has been inaugurated for the purpose of manufacturing strictly commercial, industrial, educational, scientific, and general advertising films, and where the filming of advertising matter will be handled with care.

Also there will be an emergency department, where operators or camera men with standard cameras at reasonable prices can be obtained.

Each of the above departments will be in capable hands—every branch of the motion picture business will be under the supervision of men who have had years of experience in the manufacturing, publicity, exhibiting and producing end of the business.

Mr. H. A. Spanuth is president and general manager of the General Film Publicity and Sales Company, Room 1,002, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York City.

Mr. Louis H. Cohn, the secretary and treasurer of the company, is a man largely interested in the moving picture business in all its various phases, and a man of great executive ability.

Mr. Walter C. Smith has charge of the scientific and educational department for handling and taking charge of the careful carrying out of any church, school, or parlor entertainments. Mr. Smith has had connections in this line for a great many years and is a most capable man in that end of the business.

The buying, selling and leasing of moving picture theaters is in the hands of Mr. Walter Webb, a well-known and successful real estate broker.

Already some arrangements are pending with the Board of Education regarding the supply of educational and recreative films.

There seems to be a real need for a bureau of this sort in the trade. Judging from such occurrences as the parlor entertainment given just recently by Miss Anna Morgan where many society people, who previous to this had never seen a moving picture, were delighted and enlightened, there is a good field opening up for that department of the business.

Every manufacturer of films or supplies, exchange men, jobbers, exhibitors, or anyone interested in, or connected with the motion picture business, should send his address to this company. We are inclined to believe that the trade in general will be benefited by a company, conducted by able men, along the above lines.

The General Film Publicity and Sales Company took their first picture on Wednesday, January 17, the subject of the picture being the reception of Cardinal Farley, views being taken at different points of his route from the pier to the cathedral. They have also some excellent views of the illumination at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Bedford, Ia.—Miss Nettie Brown, of Skidmore, has purchased the Fern Theater and will manage same.

Newburg, N. Y.—Plans have been prepared for the new Broadway Theater which is to be established in the Dewey Building.

New York, N. Y.—Martin Beck is to erect a new Palace Theater at 47th and Broadway.

Macksville, Kans.—Arch, Mann and Gerow, of Hutchinson, Kans., have prepared plans for a new opera house to be erected here.

Chicago, Ill.—The moving picture theater of Abraham Hoffman at 1356 W. Madison street was damaged by fire to the amount of $200.

TWIN REX AT LAST

Cheer Up, Christmas Isn't Over! Rex Gives Exhibitors Two a Week!

We hardly know how to start, knowing how you will start at the news. A twin Rex! Rex originally came into the motion picture field like a thunderbolt; the announcement of its second release came like an earthquake, and people are still shaking—with glee. Exhibitors have clamored, demanded, besought, prayed and hoped. But Rex calmly continued to produce its single masterpiece each week. Of course, there was a reason. Rex has a reason for everything it does, and generally it's a good one. Rex would not countenance the treason to the interests of the industry and the welfare of the exhibitor by producing quantity to the detriment of quality. Rex waited until it could produce two releases a week, and still maintain the lofty standard to which it has hitherto adhered.

Rex has just purchased the first twenty-six releases of the now famous Gem Motion Picture Company, and will release the much-discussed Marion Leonard Gem negatives as the second release, beginning Sunday, January 28. These films have had more wholesale commendation, more superlative praise and unequivocal endorsement than any other brand in the industry, and a phenomenal and unprecedented feature connected with them is the fact that long before the first release date their merit and unusual type and tone were popularly known and unanimously lauded.

The entire trade has been looking forward to the day when Marion Leonard, favorite of film favorites, would make her first public reappearance on the screen; the entire trade has long been looking forward to the advent of the second Rex release; so now that Rex has appropriated this notable product for their second release, the double Rex will be a double pleasure—as well as a double profit.

Without doubt, this is the most cheerful news of the week, and the most optimistic and sanguine, from the exhibitors' standpoint, in many weeks. Rex is synonymous with paramount quality and consistent merit. Exhibitors have learned to accept Rex as an advertisement for the house. It's a film that never takes a vacation—it is always perfect in technique and construction, beautiful photographically, invariably with a strong, unusual plot and elaborate in detail and execution. These remarks are but an echo of what we all know; in acquiring the Gem negatives for the second release we cannot but anticipate a new era in filmdom, of which Rex is the happy harbinger.

Of the Marion Leonard productions themselves, little more need be said than we already are familiar with. Detailed reviews have appeared in this and other trade journals. They are an epic of film perfection. The dramas reach down into the depths of us, penetrate under the surface of things, show the shallows of life and the deep, dark places of the world, and ourselves as others see us, with our little weaknesses and our weak strength. They teach the things man knows and forgets; they translate man's fractious rebellion against Fate, and Fate's inevitable and eternal victories; they preach the ways of the world and his wife. The comedies are sweet, charming, refined, and, like all perfect humor, they have a tinge of seriousness, a note of mystic yearning for things beyond our reach; they are like the sweet smile of one who has known sadness, like the innocent laugh of a babe, knowing only its own purity and the bliss of dreary things unknown. They are talking pictures.

The Rex Motion Picture Company, with its characteristic initiative and inventive ingenuity, are issuing in connection with the Marion Leonard releases a beautiful lithographic reproduction in seven colors of the famous star. Rex has always been supreme in the poster field, but this latest coup is far in advance of anything they have ever done before, and therefore a little further in advance of anything any one else has ever done before.

Exhibitors, rejoice! Be twice as happy as you were before. The Rex twins will be the original gold dust duo.

THE one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Charles Dickens will come on February 7, 1912. England, even more than the United States, is making preparations for the celebration of the centenary of the great novelist. A leading motion picture firm has been gathering material for a film showing many of the Dickens characters in the actual localities referred to by the author. In carrying out this plan, the concern has utilized the services of Thomas Bentley, a well-known impersonator of Dickens' characters, who visited Canterbury, the scene of much of the action in "David Copperfield," and was camerized as Mr. Micawber—high beaver hat, small clothes and all—while walking through the quaint streets of the charming cathedral town. The release of this film will be eagerly anticipated by the hundreds of thousands who love the characters in Dickens' novels. It is bound to become very popular.

Very likely a number of the producers will appropriately observe the Dickens centenary by releasing film stories taken from Dickens' novels. The time is ripe, there is a receptive public, and films of such character, when faithfully and carefully enacted and presented, invariably entice others than the regular patrons to the moving picture show. Many great film stories gleaned from Dickens' works have been released in the past. Thanhouser, Edison, Vitagraph and other concerns have given the public life portrayals of great incidents in the better known novels. However, there is room for more. Right now the more cultured of the great audience partial to cinematography are peculiarly receptive to Dickens. Such releases enhance the standard of the picture theater and, like Dickens' novels, can be enjoyed again and again.

While stories from "Our Mutual Friend," "David Copperfield," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Oliver Twist," "Dombey and Son," etc., have been films from time to time, most of the producers have strangely overlooked the possibilities for comedy that lurk in the great writer's earlier novel, namely "Pickwick Papers." So far as the writer knows, no story from this work of comedy and character delineation has been filmed in recent years. I have been scanning the pages of the News to see if some director has not finally utilized "Pickwick Papers" for a series of comic releases but up to date nothing has materialized. Perhaps we are anticipating and along in February, Thanhouser, Vitagraph, et al., will blossom forth with a series of Mr. Pickwicks, Winkles and Tupmans. However, we are willing to wager a good deal that there is not a film in the safe derived from this work of genuine humor.

When Dickens wrote "Pickwick Papers" in the form of a weekly continued story paper, he was in the early twenties. His ideas were fresh with youth and he turned to his task with juvenile enthusiasm and budding genius. To the real lover of Dickens, "Pickwick Papers" is a volume that shows signs of wear and tear. The book can be opened at any page and the reader is immediately plunged into adventures naturally humorous. Again we repeat, with the real comic film so sadly lacking, we cannot understand why the rotund Mr. Pickwick has not been invited to perform on the screen. He would prove to be an instantaneous hit.

Here is a tip for the ambitious writer of scenarios. Take up your copy of "Pickwick Papers" and read the adventures of the vivacious and elderly Mr. Pickwick, the unfortunate Mr. Winkle, and the poetic Mr. Snodgrass. Then there is the witty Mr. Samivel Weller, jolly Mr. Wardle and Mr. Alfred Jingle, of Nohall, Nowhere. The Pickwickians visit Dingley Dell. Mr. Tupman becomes the accepted lover of Miss Wardle, spinster sister of Old Man Wardle. Mr. Jingle plots and steals the affections of the spinstress. They elope. The chase and Jingle's triumph. Here's material for reel number one. Then Mr. Pickwick's unfortunate matrimonial experience. The world-famous breach of promise suit, Mr. Pickwick's incarceration in prison, where he meets and saves the life of Mr. Jingle. The election contest between the Blues and the Buffs—Oh, there's a gold mine of humor and drama in "Pickwick Papers!" The unfortunate experience of the Rev. Alfred Sniggins with the Bricklane Ebeneezer Temperance Society would, in itself, make a corking good comic film. Now go to it!

Dickens' "Sketches by Boz" is another undeveloped mine of good things for the enterprising film producer who wishes to branch out in his Dickens' productions and release something new. The stories are also among the first to be written by Dickens and overflow with his sprightliest fun and humor. The boarding house tales, the story of the picnic aboard ship, "Mr. Minns and His Cousin," all contain possibilities that if faithfully collected and honestly presented will furnish untold delight to appreciative audiences. We believe that the manufacturers will not overlook the centenary of Charles Dickens and that all of the leaders will give up ably prepared and enacted Dickens stories. However, many of the lovers of Dickens would like something new. The more popular works of Dickens have been filmed, so now delve a little into other Dickens stories, just as well known to the well read, and give us something else. Only the surface of Dickens has been touched. His great genius has given the scenario writer and the producer material for an untold fund of entertainment and instruction.

Philosophical Sayings

What has become of the old-fashioned man who thought moving picture shows were born of the devil.

The moving picture operator is of few days and full of trouble.

The moving picture manager said let there be light and there was light.

Spare the picture show and spoil the child.

Dr. Cook never was colder than an audience during a rainy film.

Pictures to the Rescue

When the frost is on the window
And the pump is frozen hard.
And the "Beautiful" is drifting
O'er meadow and front yard—
Don a pair of woolen mittens,
Just plow boldly through the snow.
Never, never mind the weather,
Drop into the picture show.

When the frost is on the window,
When the sleigh bells loudly chime,
And the mercury takes a tumble—
Jack Frost's working overtime!
Grab your uncle's heavy ulster,
Take the garment lined with fleece.
Never, never mind the weather,
Do not miss the first release.

When the frost is on the window,
And the ice forms in the pail,
When the frigid breezes blowing
Carry forth a storm of hail,
Snatch old granddad's ponderous arctics
Pull 'em over father's hose.
Never, never mind the weather,
Visit all the picture shows.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

By G. F. Blaisdell

SUCCESS has followed the experiment of Henry W. Savage in reducing the price of gallery and balcony seats in his two New York houses, the Lyric and Herald Square. Colonel Savage made a uniform price for his orchestra chairs at $2; the balcony seats he made $1 flat and the family circle 50 cents. Since the new scale went into effect the weekly receipts have greatly increased, and the demand for orchestra seats, on which there was no reduction, has increased also. This latter feature may be explained by the transfer of affections from the balcony to the orchestra by many who formerly had preferred the more elevated position—young men, you know, taking out their best girls, but who could not, for a minute, think of buying anything not less than the best but anything less than the most expensive.

This last week the Colonel gave his views as to the more important factors tending to deplete the "upstairs" portions of the expensive theaters.

"A hotel manager tries to keep all of his rooms filled, even if he has to charge less," said Colonel Savage. "An empty room at a hotel is a loss, and so is an unsold seat in a theater. How much better it is for me to have the balcony at the Lyric filled at $1 a seat than only half filled at $1.50. In that way I am keeping my plant working at full time, by offering a bargain that brings a profit not only to me, but to the theater patron.

"There are many things that have reduced the profits of the high-priced theatrical ventures. For the last five years the automobile has been a cause of lopping off about ten weeks from the average theatrical season. A man who owns an automobile has an amusement plant of his own which he is going to utilize rather than patronize my amusement plant —a theatrical attraction. The automobile owner and as many friends as his machine will hold take a ride into the country instead of going to see a play, and the theater manager loses that many patrons.

"Motion pictures and cheap vaudeville have reduced gallery patronage by about one-half in the same five years. The $20 or $25 a week clerk can spend 40 cents and provide himself and his wife with an evening's entertainment that ends early enough for them to get to sleep at 10 o'clock. Formerly the same clerk spent a dollar for the two in the orchestra of a melodrama theater or the gallery of a first-class house.

"These are two of the causes for the proportionate decrease in the patronage of the high-priced theaters. And with this decrease there has come a marked increase in the cost of production. There is an unwarranted competition between factions in the theatrical business that has prevented organization that would make the business more stable."

* * * *

"Ain't goin' to be no what."

"After motion pictures, what?" was a toast to which Percy Williams responded last week. There may be no "what" if motion picture shows increase in number, as all of the actors will have starved to death.—Brooklyn Times.

* * * *

The query in the foregoing was made by Mr. Williams. It was at the annual dinner of the Theater Managers Association in New York. Arthur Brisbane, the chief of the Hearst newspapers, who likes the looks of whole sentences of his own stuff printed in capitals, answered the vaudeville manager by saying there would be more and better pictures, concluding his cheerful and inspiriting after-dinner talk to the theatrical managers by saying that moving pictures constitute one of the greatest civilizing and educating devices ever invented and are greatly to be desired.

* * * *

A day or two after the dinner Mr. Williams made public his plans to combat the picture houses by building theaters in districts now looked upon as closed to all but the "movies." The vaudeville manager is thinking of erecting a stock theater near Amsterdam avenue and Ninety-third street, this city. Mr. Williams has had abundant experience in vaudeville and has a great and an efficient organization; it is safe to say if any man can combat the growing power of pictures he can.

But—if he fails: Who?

Why should there not be room for all?

The warden of the State Penitentiary at Canon City, Col., has been visiting Denver getting a picture outfit for his boys. He put in an entire afternoon going the rounds of the shows looking for ideas. He entered his "house" as a member of the regular circuit, so as to be assured of his supply. The warden smilingly declined the proffered services of an operator. "Don't need yours," he said. Canon City some time since put in a phonograph.

Times change. There were days when Dusty Rhodes and his widely-traveled side partner would walk down the hot sandy road by the prison—if they dared go near its walls—with never a glance at its forbidding exterior. The days may be coming when Dusty and his pal will amble right up to the gates, peer through the bars, and sigh for the lot of the man who eats three meals a day, sleeps under cover every night and sees moving pictures and hears Caruso sing every Saturday afternoon. Do you catch the husky voice of Dusty, as he furtively glances about him and grabs Weary by what was once another man's sleeve:

"Come on! Let's throw a brick through a bank window!"

Robert G. Fowler, who is making a more or less leisurely trip from San Francisco to New York in a Wright aeroplane, has had remarkable success in the taking of moving pictures. The operator sits at Fowler's side, with his camera secured on a stand. Great care has to be taken by the driver to maintain an even "keel" in flight, to enable the operator to get a steady picture. The optical sensation in viewing the pictures is said to be novel, the spectator naturally being placed in the position of the aviator.

William N. Selig, visiting in Minneapolis, was interviewed. "The day is near," said Mr. Selig, "when public schools of every large city will have moving picture equipment of their own, and geography and history will be taught on canvas instead of by the text-book. The movement in this Judge Ben B. Lindsey, the famous head of the Juvenile Court of Denver, in a recent letter said:

"I do not know of any one single thing at the present time that interests me more than teaching children through moving pictures. I am a strong believer in teaching children through the concrete, that is, through seeing the thing and doing the thing.

"It is simply impossible for me to say anything strong enough to express my enthusiasm on the subject. It is only the beginning of tremendous changes in our whole scheme of imparting knowledge to children. It is right in line with the wonderful things that Maria Montessori, the Italian genius, is doing. You positively cannot do a better thing than to educate the public to the possibilities of the moving picture as a factor in the education of children. I only wish I had the time to write more on this subject."

This is praise indeed. Mr. Exhibitor, when you are pestered by some local truly good, who can see nothing pure outside of her church sewing circle or his Sunday morning Bible class, and who just positively believes children should not go to the moving pictures, quote Ben Lindsey to him—or her. If your bore knows of Judge Lindsey and knows how he knows children, he will subside. If he doesn't know of Judge Lindsey, he's not worth wasting time or patience over.

Fire started in the building occupied by the General Film Company, in Philadelphia, on the morning of January 13th, and caused a total loss of $200,000. Films stored on the upper floors are said to have started the blaze. Six alarms were turned in. Among other losers were Sigmund Lubin, whose picture theater on the ground floor was destroyed.

A party of Copenhagen actors setting out from Lemvig to make a thrilling sea drama had all the thrills they could stand. The steamer under charter was sent in near shore to get a shipwreck scene. A storm came up, and the steamer fought for ten hours to get away from the rocks. Shortly after the party was rescued by a steam fisherman the chartered craft sank.

STAKING THE CLAIM

(Champion)

Here we have a story of a cowboy who possesses good and manly qualities, but which lie dormant, awaiting stimulation through some agency. He is, therefore, held up to scorn by his fellow cowpunchers. With the arrival of the ranchman's niece, however, his right nature asserts itself, and thus we see him in a heroic light, putting his lips to the snake-bitten hand of the ranchman, while the rest of the boys stand around, helpless and undetermined. He is immediately acclaimed with favor after this incident, and especially so in the eyes of the ranchman's niece, and there arises between them a mutual bond of love.

Later, the cowgirl proves herself equally brave by saving an old Indian's life and gold from the clutches of a hard-looking character and thereby earning the Indian's undying gratitude. This act reaps a handsome reward for the girl on the occasion of the Indian's death, before which, however, he presses upon her and her sweetheart a quantity of gold nuggets derived from a mine which he has owned. The characters in the story aptly portray the parts in a genuine manner and, all in all, bring it to a point of realism.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH CONCERNING FILM CRITICS

By Leonard Donaldson

A great deal could be written anent the ethics of film criticism. We all know, whether we be authors, playrights, actors or film producers, how much depends upon an independent criticism in the daily or trade press of our achievements. A few sentences from the pen of a biased critic may perhaps mean bitter disappointment and often utter failure to a new production. Criticism today in the motion picture world, in a very large measure, is overruled by the extent of a film producers' advertising in the trade papers. This is to be greatly regretted, as such criticism, if it may be so termed, is utterly useless and defeats its very object and purpose.

If we are film producers, or exhibitors for a matter of that, we know full well the invalidity of a criticism which is composed of polysyllabic adjectives in our favor. We know this type of praise does not ring true, and our patrons do also, if they happen to be regular readers of that journal in which our notices appear.

To vary Dick Phenyl's complaint in "Sweet Lavender," the film critic might well exclaim: "Praise, praise; but blame—oh, dear, no!" So long as they continue to say nice things of films and film producers they are clever and discerning; let them dare to offer an advance criticism and they may congratulate themselves if they escape with only a denial of their fitness to express an opinion at all. However, the critic can find comfort in the knowledge that he does not suffer alone. According to the author of the theatrical article in a leading English magazine, it is interesting and frequently amusing to observe the attitude of the managers towards the professional judges of their wares. Producers of plays, he has discovered, have phenomenally short memories; what the critic says today "looms big in the managers mind; what he said yesterday is completely forgotten."

The same condition of things exists in the silent drama; particularly is this so in respect of the criticism given by the trade and often the public journals. It is with no little compunction that I say that the NEWS has justly to be proud of the unpartiality and honesty of its criticism. In its independent attitude to its supporters and non-supporters, lies its strength and true worth. I ask pardon for what perhaps may be deemed by some of my readers to be a breach of journalistic etiquette in making these assertions, but I could not have chosen a better illustration with which to exemplify my meaning, or perhaps I should have said my ideal of a trade newspaper which offers really valuable criticism.

There is a tendency with many film critics, the less responsible ones, of course, to write for quotation. In films admittedly and obviously unworthy of critical praise, some one point which may deserve reservation from the general blame is fixed upon for a kind of laudation out of all proportion to its merits. This is done with a definite purpose. The name of the critic, or that of the journal for which he writes, figures conspicuously in this particular type of criticism. It is almost as if the film producer announced: "Gentlemen, the reviewer or journal that says the nicest things about my films will get some free advertising." There is consolation in the thought, however, that such praise will not send the public to see an indifferent photo-play.

Sympathetic and kindly criticism is of unusual service to the work that has merit, and the journalist may help the public in the direction of its appreciation. To provide this should be the aim of every film critic as this is the only way by which the man behind the pen may become of real and valuable worth to the industry upon which he directs his judgment.

THE MOTION PICTURE AND BOTANICAL STUDY

Upon the principles of color cinematography I have touched in a previous article. The advantage which the color film has over the monochrome, in the weather of botanical study, is obvious. In following closely the progress made by "Kinemacolor," especially in this direction, one has noticed, even in the past year, a vast and speedy improvement. The crude, hand-tinted film is now almost a thing of the past, having given place to a process practical in its application to almost every branch of scientific research. In the study of botany, Kinemacolor is performing a great and valuable service. It presents to the student the various species of flower growth in all their exquisite coloring.

A noteworthy botanical subject has been produced by Kinemacolor, illustrating the various stages of plant life; from the formation of the bud to the perfect bloom. It shows, in a manner truly remarkable, the movements of plants between activity and rest. Photographs of a germinating seed have been taken by the cinematograph at regular intervals during many days, until the seed leaves appear, and the perfectly modeled bloom is formed.

Phenomena of plant life, which in the ordinary course would take several weeks to record—such as the various stages in the growth of a flower-bud and development of the bloom—can be projected upon the screen by a single film, and the pictures show the continuous, uninterrupted flower growth, which takes place in a few minutes! The film is, to say the least, both weird and wonderful, and the process of development is magnified several thousand times. As showing distinctly every movement made by both leaves and flowers, one point is particularly noticeable, and that is the apparent sympathy which exists between them, which is distinguished by a violent shivering of the leaf when a bud bursts into flower.

The application of Kinemacolor to the study of botany marks yet another stage of technical attainment, indicates another field in which cinematography now supplements science.

By reproducing the gradual development of plant growth, the cinematograph is assisting us to attain a clear perception of the nature of the changes which take place, and we are better able to appreciate the nature of the phenomena because the sequence becomes more obvious.

It is in the application to nature study, in all its ramifications, that cinematography, supplemented by Kinemacolor, is performing perhaps the greatest of its functions.

I remember, I remember,
The town where I was born;
No picture show then pointed
A phonographic horn.
It never, never figured
As a place in sin immersed,
Picture shows were then unknown
As the limit and the worst!

I remember, I remember,
The burg where I saw light.
'Twas at the rural crossroads,
Nothing on at night.
Naught disturbed the ripple,
The monotonous ebb and flow.
The camera's non-invention
Restrained the picture show.

I remember, I remember,
The village of my birth.
No reformer e'er called us
"Off-scourings of earth."
No theater, no spotlight
Distracted spade or shoe,
'Twas hopelessly old-fashioned

THE NEW HOME FOR THE BISON FILM

By Our "Roving Commissioner"

ONE of the finest equipped moving picture plants that could be imagined according to modern ideas is to be found at 251 West Nineteenth street, where the New York Motion Picture Company have recently taken up their habitation. An underwriter who visited the plant shortly after its completion pronounced it the most perfect plant as regards its fireproof qualities that he has ever seen.

To Mr. C. A. Willat is due the credit for the perfection of this plant. Mr. Willat was for several years, and, in fact, from its organization, with the Imp Company, and has put into the plant of the New York Motion Picture Company the benefit of his past experience.

This plant is certainly a wonderful layout. Each room is made so absolutely fireproof that should a fire break out in one room the door can be closed and therefore the fire confined to that one room. Everything has been done to insure splendid quality in the work. The employees are working in comfort. The assemblers are provided with electric lights both above and below the bench, the one to give proper light for night work, and the others below from which the light shows through a flat glass insertion in the bench at each individual place, and above which the film can be laid in order to decern the different scenes instead of being obliged to hold the film upward against the upper light and having to look through it at arm's length. This tends to make work much easier for the assembler. The film polisher which is used here is an invention of Mr. Willat's and is a very simple and useful method of polishing the films. The film after having passed over an alcohol saturated sponge or cloth, passes over a bolt upon which is a series of small squares of fur felt which cleans the film, and from here it passes to another like belt which dries it. In the passing each portion of the film is struck twice by the felt. The second belt runs at a faster rate of speed than the first one. The fur felt is used, so says Mr. Willat, because it absorbs much more easily than the wool felt.

The drying room is such as would delight the heart of any film manufacturer. This room has five huge drying drums which have a holding capacity of 12,000 ft. each, or 60,000 ft. altogether. Each separate drum is run by a series-wound motor, so that by merely pressing a button on the side of the drum it can be set in motion without disturbing the others. The method of ventilating this room is also of interest. Instead of drawing off the foul air, fresh air which is passed through a filterer on its passage thither, is forced into the room. The filtering process makes it impossible for the small black specks so often seen on films, to accumulate on films dried in this up-to-date drying room. In the dark room are the unusual array of ruby lights, with the exception in this case that this dark room is larger than some and therefore contains more. In this plant are used the Bell & Howell perforating machine, and also the Bell & Howell printing machine with light changer. In the washing and tinting room the waste water is carried off by a waste pipe, therefore doing away with the usual wallowing in water of the workers in the wash room.

The projecting room of the New York Motion Picture Company is the finest that we have seen. It is entirely fireproof, and is large and roomy; pictures are projected here at their usual size on a screen that is set against a black background, enhancing the beauty of the picture. Here I was shown a real masterpiece in motion picture photography, "War on the Plains," which picture was taken with the aid of the 101 Ranch Company with all its paraphernalia of horses, range cattle, wagons, trains, etc. It is a story of the early days when the red man was a menace to the white man. The white man, his family and belongings had settled himself on the plains not far from the camp of the Indians. In the meantime a young stranger who had deserted his companion on the desert, drinking while he slept the last of the few precious drops of water left in his companion's canteen, and leaving him to die, had found his way to the settler's camp. He tells wondrous tales, which are not true, of his great bravery in encountering the Indians single handed, and winning the admiration of the daughter of the house, much to the chagrin of the young sweetheart who is also there. However the time comes when "murder must out." The Indians who grow envious of the property of the whites, at a moment when the whites are off guard, steal the cattle and later attack the camp, surrounding it for hours, with a steady firing of bullets. This is the time when the young stranger shows the white feather, and when he is asked to go with a message to the nearest station, he creeps away in terror, the young sweetheart of the maiden carrying the message instead. A scene unique in pictures is where the young stranger wandering alone and exhausted on the desert falls down an embankment of hot sun-baked sand, rolling directly on top of a rattlesnake. Also the scene entitled "Dawn," where the rosy tint from the rising sun touches with romance the smoke from the guns; and also the smoke from the Indian camp which has been set afire by the rescuing party, is very beautiful. This film is really very fine, the finest Bison yet.

The New York Motion Picture Co. are going to turn out only 2,000-ft. reels, starting from Feb. 23. Tuesday will be their release day. Nothing but big productions will be handled by them, and they will confine themselves principally to Western and military subjects. Their Stock Company is now operating at Los Angeles. When the 101 Ranch Company start out for their season on the road the Bison people will then go to the ranch of the former in Oklahoma, where they will continue to operate.

The offices of the New York Motion Picture Company are very nicely and conveniently arranged. In the whole outfit there are eight rooms, with three offices. And at this one floor occupied by them there are no less than twenty-two fire extinguishers, in addition to all the other precautions.

The other members of the company in addition to Mr. Willat, to whom we have so far given the honors. on account of his having achieved such splendid success in the planning, and in the carrying out of his plans with regard to the arrangement of the plant, are Mr. A. Kessell, president, Mr. Bauman, vice-president and treasurer. Mr. Streykmans in charge of the publicity department, and Mr. Gauseman in charge of the bookkeeping department, a very important part of the business in general.

It is expected that the Bison film will be better than it ever was before, or than it ever dreamed of being. And judging from what we have seen of the work under the auspices of the new plant Bison is going to leap to the top notch.

GAUMONT RELEASES

Three excellent Gaumont releases were shown us during the week at the company's factory at Flushing, Long Island. "The Waterman's Bride" is a beautiful and unusual hand-colored film treating of the courtship and marriage of a French waterman to a beautiful young peasant girl. Each scene is a beautiful picture in itself, and full of natural simplicity. The tragic ending of a beautiful love story comes when on the first eve of their honeymoon, like children let out to play, leaving the river boat at her moorings, they ramble beneath the stars. Suddenly the young bride pauses, looks wide-eyed into space, and drops dead on the green sward at her young husband's feet. The closing scene shows the waterman returning, sorrowfully hauling his boat along, but with the flower-covered bier of the young bride, where but the day before had been the merry scene of the departure of the happy pair.

SOLAX FEATURE FILM

The Solax Company have ready for the market another of their excellent feature films. "Mignon," arranged from the pretty little opera of the same name, reflects great credit on the company. It is beautifully gotten up and the action of the piece is creditably performed. The photography also is good. Accompanying this one-reel feature film, each exchange will be supplied with two copies of a book containing musical selections from the opera, appropriate to each scene of the picture.

Solax has made wonderful progress in the past six months, which should be gratifying to the Independent trade.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Lyric Theater, 83 Canal street, has incorporated with a capital of $7,000; Frank and Evelyn Rose and Barney Davis.

Marmarth, N. Dak.—A new moving picture theater is to be established here.

"RETURN OF CARDINAL FARLEY" AN IMP RECORD

His Eminence, Cardinal Farley, Archbishop of New York, landed at the Battery, New York City, at half-past twelve on Wednesday, January 17, 1912.

He entered St. Patrick's Cathedral two hours later. At six o'clock a five-hundred-foot moving picture of the Cardinal's triumphal progress from the Battery to St. Patrick's Cathedral was projected on the screen at the Imp factory at 101st street.

By Thursday morning the Independent exchanges were supplied with the picture.

This Imp record was established by characteristic Imp daring. The police granted the Imp force free right of way and good positions, so that good photographs of the "Rosedale," the landing at the battery pier, the parade, the band, prominent politicians and Catholic dignitaries were obtained on Battery Park. Then the car sped up to Fifteenth street, where close-up figures of the Cardinal and the Committee were obtained. Then a move was made to Twenty-third street, where the waiting crowd —hundreds of thousands—was photographed. Next the car shot up to the Cathedral front. Here the daring operator hoisted his camera on a flagpole, many feet high, from which he took panoramic views of the Cathedral and the crowd.

The chief value of this rapidly made picture lies in the very fine close-up views of the Cardinal which were obtained. It is a film that will possess enormous historical value. The reception given to the Cardinal in New York City symbolized a nation's tribute.

GAUMONT POSTERS

Insistent inquiry concerning special lithographed posters for the various Gaumont Independent releases leads this manufacturer to announce that especially designed lithographs of various sheet sizes have been prepared to accompany each of their production. They will range from one to three sheets in dimension, the one sheet selling at the nominal sum of 5 cents, the two sheets at 10 cents, the three sheets at 15 cents. Commendation has come from all quarters on the attractiveness of the Delhi Durbar posters. Equally as striking display posters have been prepared for the "Christian Martyrs," "Heaven's Messenger," "The Waterman's Bride," as well as the forthcoming feature, "The Smuggler," the release date of which is as yet unannounced.

GAUMONT ENTERPRISE

Credit must necessarily be extended to the Gaumont Company for the promptness and haste with which they delivered their copies of the "Delhi Durbar" to their bookers in Washington and Philadelphia. Owing to the fact that this eminent Parisian concern was not the only one that brought the Indian Coronation pictures to these shores, they decided to accelerate matters by sending these films to the exchanges in the Quaker and Capitol city by special messenger. Needless to state, the Gaumont "Delhi Durbar" was the first to reach all exchanges throughout the West—a demonstration of their enterprise.

CHICAGO LETTER

Had ever a person argued the right of calling Chicago the "Windy City," their argument would most certainly never have been brought forth if they would have been here through the last two weeks, during which time has been the longest continued period of cold and blizzard weather that Chicago has had for ever twenty years. News from the exhibitors and exchange men here shows that the present cold weather has greatly affected business, as all exchange men state that their business has fallen off greatly in the past fortnight, but better business is expected when this cold spell passes away.

George Kleine's first "Cines" release was shown at the offices of the Kleine Optical Company last week, and was highly complimented by the exhibitors who saw it, both for excellent photography and the plot of the picture. "Brutus" is the title of the picture, the plot which has been taken from Shakespeare's well known play, "Julius Cæsar." Exhibitors are enthusiastic over this release as it is without a doubt one of the best drawing attractions in first-class neighborhoods that can be shown. Every school child who has entered the eighth grade of grammar school, and almost every adult who has also been in or farther advanced in the educational line, have laboriously studied and analyzed their classic "Julius Cæsar" until the entire story has been well impressed upon their minds. For this reason alone, the showing of a picture such as "Brutus" is really the strongest possible uplift for any theater in its neighborhood that could be used, and for this same reason the picture should be a good drawing card. No matter how prejudiced anyone may be in regard to a five-cent theater, their opinion will surely be altered by this production, and they will most likely be a firm booster for the theater where they were so instructively entertained. In the following short synopsis of "Brutus" an idea of the picture can be gained.

Believing that Cæsar is becoming too powerful in the state, Brutus and others conspire to take his life.

The next day, when all are assembled in the senate chamber, the conspirators accomplish their fatal purpose.

Mark Anthony, a friend of Cæsar, swears to avenge the murder and at the funeral delivers an impassioned speech which arouses the Roman people to great fury.

Brutus is forced to flee from Rome, but soon collects his followers to oppose the forces of Anthony.

The two armies meet at the battle of Philippi, in which Brutus is defeated and is forced again to seek safety in flight.

When at the point of being overtaken, he hurls himself upon the sword of a friend and thus died, "the noblest Roman of them all."

It is with deepest regret that, in breaking the pleasant news of the speedy recovery of Mr. Berz, correspondent of the Laemmle Film Service, it is also necessary to impart the unpleasant news that Mr. Maurice Fleckles, manager of this exchange, has been very sick during the past week, having had a very severe attack of grippe. Mr. Fleckles, at present, is getting along nicely and it is the wish of all to again see him back at the office, hale and hearty as ever.

Mr. Gus Cook has recently opened a pretty new theater in St. Charles, Ill., called the Star. The seating capacity of this amusement house is 350 and an excellent program is given daily. Independent service is supplied by the H. & H. Film Exchange. Mr. Cook is an able manager, and we hope to see the Star come steadily to the front under his supervision.

MAJESTIC RELEASES

The past week brought forth from the Majestic studio a repetition with even a more commendable result of hard and careful work of the excellent product which has been forthcoming from time to time from this up-to-date manufactory of moving pictures. "Spare the Rod," for release on Sunday, January 21st, is a drama with a lesson for brutal fathers and a commendation for faithful mothers.

"That Expensive Ride," for release Friday, January 26th, is a comedy with a round of continuous laughter. "A Mother's Sacrifice," for release Sunday, January 28th, is another excellent drama full of human interest and pathos.

The above films can be recommended to the exhibitor as being among the best on the market from every point of criticism.

Majestic announces that February holds something of great interest to the exhibitor and moving picture patron, in Majestic releases.

A TRIP TO NEW ROCHELLE TO THE THANHOUSER PLANT

By Margaret I. MacDonald

I HAD long promised myself a trip to the Thanhouser plant, from whence so many beautiful and artistic moving picture productions have come—where has originated so much that is clever—so much that has counted in the advancement of the moving picture business as an art.

It was a cold, frosty day on which I hied me Thanhouserward. It was the day before the departure of the Thanhouser Stock Company for more southern climes. A portion of the company were working out of doors that day, in spite of the cold, and the remainder were busy as bees making ready for the morrow's migration. Mr. Bert Adler, the company's energetic publicity man, flitted about here and there and everywhere, evidently in demand at all points where work was in progress. Mr. Thanhouser, busy in his office, but not too busy to give a stranger a hearty handshake and word of welcome, attended to the different calls upon his time, with the composure of one who feels a perfect confidence in those in his employ.

The Thanhouser plant is apparently a happy sort of a place. Everybody seemed in good humor; even the automobile accident which happened that day, while I was there, (when in the bustle of shipping films and trying to catch the noon train with its cargo, the big Thanhouser touring car collided with another auto at a treacherous turn in the road) did not dim to any noticeable extent the halo of goodnaturedness which is said to hover constantly above the workshop of the Thanhouser film, although it did almost send Bert Adler back to the hospital.

Entering the Thanhouser plant from the street, you have the stairs to mount before reaching the offices and studio, factory and all else in connection with the producing end of the Thanhouser business. At the top of the stairs is the reception room and thoroughfare to and from all parts of the plant and studio. Here you are met by a good-natured young lady who operates the switchboard for the firm and also listens to the wants of the wayfarer as well as doing a pile of typewriting, as it appeared to me, for she was very much occupied with many duties. From here you are ushered to the private offices of the company, which are located very conveniently on one side of the large studio. The first that you come to is that of Mr. Thanhouser, then Mr. Adler's, then Mr. Nicholl's and then Mr. Henderson's. Bordering it, and with the studio as a central point of interest, are to be found all the different departments in connection with it—stage carpenters, scene painters, etc., are within call of any part of the studio or offices. The dressing rooms are nicely and comfortably located. All the different portions of the factory are splendidly fitted up to insure good work, and it is quite evident, even to the casual observer, that the Thanhouser company spare neither money nor time in order that the production of the plant may be second to none.

Those of the Thanhouser Stock Company who have taken up their abode in Florida for the winter are Miss Marguerite Snow, Miss Flo La Badie, Mr. William Russell, Mr. James Cruze, Miss Viola Alberta, Mr. Joseph Graybill, Mr. Loyd F. Lonergan and Mr. Calvin Dix, stage manager. The work in the South will be done under the direction of Mr. George O. Nicholls. The photographic portion of the work will be entrusted to Mr. A. H. Moses, Jr., who has done so much of the creditable photography shown in the Thanhouser productions. It is now almost a week and a half since this splendid company left New York on the Apache, of the Clyde line, for Jacksonville, Florida, where they commenced operations at once. The finest and most beautiful situations in Florida will be chosen by the Thanhouser company for the pictures, whose exterior scenes will be taken there.

In New Rochelle a strong company stays to make pictures, under the direction of Lucius Henderson. This company consists of Harry Benham, Mignon Anderson, Inda Palmer, The Thanhouser Kid, Justus D. Barnes and David H. Thompson. Jack Noble is stage manager and Carl Gregory, one of the youngest and best camera men in the business, turns the all-important crank.

The Thanhouser Company, which has one of the largest trades of any Independent film in America, have attracted attention to themselves by the splendid quality of their work. Their subjects have been well chosen and cleverly worked out; their comedy has been at all times clean and wholesome as well as amusing; their romances have been given beautiful and artistic settings, and their drama has been worked out in a masterly fashion, with that vivid realism which fairly makes the heart stand still.

One of the finest releases which the Thanhouser company has ever put out is the release of Tuesday past, January 16, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Nothing that has been recently released has impressed me any more strongly than this wonderful picture, and although it is now a past release I feel that I must speak of it. To the intelligent person this picture is a wonderful lesson. Those familiar with the story from which the picture was made will be thrice impressed by its reproduction on the screen, where a startling moral stares at one with such vivid intensity that you can almost hear a still, small voice asking, "Is this you?"

"East Lynee," for release on Friday, January 26, is also an excellent production. In fact, it is a wonderful production with scarcely a fault to be found. The pathos of the story is held to the bitter end—and it is a better end, as all who have read the story will remember—a story where life paths run criss-cross at wrong angles. "East Lynne" is a story filled with much sorrow and little joy, and of intense interest to the wayfarer on the rough and stony road.

My trip to the Thanhouser plant was a great pleasure to me. We must all try to make pleasure of our work, and many times I am enabled to do so through the courtesy of the Independent manufacturers whose manufactories I have occasion to visit.

Washington, D. C.

The moving picture operators of Washington are preparing for a dance to be given on January 30th. From the outlook now a "big time" is anticipated.

Tom Moore had a moving picture taken by the Feature Film Company in front of his Plaza Theater recently. His chief object was to secure views of the Powers, 1912 Model, projection machine, emphasizing its various improvements. This is said to be the first machine of this kind in Washington and it will be placed in the Plaza. Its double dissolving feature will have an excellent opportunity to be exhibited in the illustrated songs used in this house. After the display of the Powers, 1912 Model, a motion picture of the passing public was taken, which is being thrown upon the screens of the Moore chain of theaters. It is causing some amusement as people in the audience recognize themselves or their friends in the crowds before them.

The recent snow, ice and wind that have visited the city caused some falling off in box office receipts. Yet, for all that, patronage is good and the "regulars" are in line.

"Daniel Boone," by the Republic Company, has had an excellent reception in Washington.

The Feature Film Company secured a short reel of the funeral of "Fighting Bob" Evans, which occurred here recently. Owing to the high winds and bitter cold, results were not as good as desired. This film has been displayed at the Plaza and was thoroughly appreciated. Remembering that the Annapolis midshipmen are suffering from being frosted while on this funeral march, the securing of this film was no fun.

Managers of Independent houses welcome the return of Marion Leonard to the screen and they are anxiously awaiting the initial release of the Gem Company on January 21st. Miss Leonard has always been a favorite in Washington, several of the theaters always advertising her appearance. This they are preparing to do again. The posters recently distributed by the Gem Company of Miss Leonard have been favorably commented upon by everyone.

"True to their Trust," by the Eclipse, is one of the finest films that this company had offered for some time. So exquisite and impressive was its acting that the sadness brought tears to many of the spectators. There was a simplicity and homeliness in that lighthouse story.

The Plaza has a new house manager in the person of Grover C. Parsons, who comes from Lynchburg with the highest recommendations. Tom Moore is much pleased with this new acquisition to his force, and certainly Mr. Parsons is the right man in the right place.

The Alhambra has been having big runs of "The Two Orphans" and the "Black Arrow."

Manager Notes, of the Empress, startled the public recently by announcing six first runs as his day's program. This almost seems like getting to much for a nickle. The Empress is the only theater in the city which offers only films on the day of release.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS CALL FOR SANTA CATALINA FILM

The American Film Manufacturing Company is still hearing the echo of its remarkable release of December 14th, entitled "Santa Catalina," magic isle of the Pacific. This film created a considerable furore, not only in motion picture circles but among scientific men and students generally. Nearly one hundred feet of the picture was taken up with the only views ever made of the famous submarine gardens of the Pacific Ocean. Sea weeds of various varieties, many different kinds of fish, kelp and an octopus were shown.

The fact that these pictures are the only ones of their kind in existence has made them valuable acquisitions to the cause of science and education generally, and the American is now besieged with requests from public school principals and other educational bodies asking where the film can be obtained for lecture purposes in assemblies and schoolrooms. The American is to be congratulated on its find in producing this film as the principal dailies in America, through the associated press and kindred news bodies, gave much valuable publicity to the picture.

HOWARD M. MITCHELL

Howard M. Mitchell, who has prided himself as being one of the most wicked "heavy men," has lost some of his much-coveted reputation. His joy was to be complimented on his realistic performance of Bill Sykes, a role in which he claimed that he was more savage than the dog. Moriarty in "Sherlock Holmes" is another character for depicting great villainy, and when his admirers told him that he really was the incarnate Mephisto of crooks, Mitchell fairly gurgled with glee and freely bought the drinks. But alas, his occupation is gone. A few months ago he enlisted as a member of the Lubin Photo-play Stock Company of Philadelphia, with the understanding that in all moving pictures he would be cast for bad men. Last Tuesday he worked late in the studio, and walking towards Indiana avenue and the bridge to take a car, he came up with a rather elderly lady who was being detained and annoyed by a couple of young toughs. Mitchell immediately forgot that he was a bad man himself, and sailing into the rascals, layed them in the gutter and gallantly escorted the fair one to the street car. Very foolishly, he told the story of the episode at the studio, and in consequence is being cast for hero and juvenile parts.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Jan. 15.—The chief attraction here the past week was the visit of Miss Alberta Claire, "the girl from Wyoming," who, to advertise her native state and at the same time pick up a bunch of the easiest coin I ever saw gathered in, came to Hot Springs and told of her trip through the great American desert, of her experiences in the mountains and explain life in the wild and woolly West from the standpoint of a typical "cow girl."

Her manager—who, it later developed—was the brains and better half of the enterprise—arrived a day ahead of time, and when Sidney Nutt learned that he was in town and got a line on Alberta's stunt, he lost no time in assuring Mr. Ward, the aforesaid "hubby," brains and advance agent, that the real and only true place for his little wife to exude her enthusiasm and experience would be from the stage of the new Central Theater. Would he? He would, and he did. Then they visited the local newspaper offices, slammed in "ads" that required an extra force of printers and linotype men to set up, and ye local press boomed with the glories of the West and the daring of this remarkable little Miss Alberta. The reporters and editors also got busy, of which yours merrily was one, and when she arrived she was the best advertised project in Hot Springs. People were lined up along Central avenue awaiting her arrival, and as she galloped up the main thoroughfare of the busy resort she received quite an ovation. She went to the Arlington Hotel, where there was another jam waiting to salute her, and when the time came for the show to take place at the new Central, the crowd was packed in the big, long lobby like women at a five-and-ten-cent store bargain sale. The house seats over 600, and three shows were necessary that night to accommodate the crowd. The place was packed at every performance.

I managed to have quite a little chat with the little lady before she started for Little Rock, where, I understand, she also "cleaned up," and she told me that the picture houses were the real places to gather in the coin. She doesn't bother with the big theaters, you see, for her act is so much like moving pictures of the wild West that she gets immediate returns. She is the real goods, so far as the "cow girl" aspect of things are concerned. She dresses in the regalia of the West, while at her side is strapped a very business-looking Colt's .45, and she knows how to use it, too. The monologue that she delivers is an interesting recital. She speaks quite rapidly and it runs twelve minutes. For an encore she recited an original prairie poem that also made quite a hit. Sidney Nutt was fortunate, indeed, to book her, and the crowd was quick to grasp the opportunity of attending the city's leading playhouse.

During the week I had quite an unique visitor, a full-blooded Cheyenne Indian, White Buffalo, who, with his wife, son and a liberal supply of gaudy Cheyenne blankets and moccasins, came from the reservation to take a course of baths. The government has given White Buffalo 540 acres of Oklahoma land, on which, with the cash "Uncle Sam" also slipped him, enabled the Indian to erect a modern dwelling and go to farming. And he likes farming just about as well as the average Pittsburgh millionaire. He yearns for the tepee and the plains and said that ever since he left the old tepee and went to live within the four walls of his modern home he has been sick. I asked White Buffalo if he had ever seen a moving picture and he surprised me by stating that he had never looked on wonders of this kind, so I have him booked for a trip to the local houses this week.

"Indian he is pictures," he said. "Lots of Indians ride before machine what takes pictures. Wild West, they call them, but I never see. See pictures of them, all colors; show Indians always fight, after scalp. Indian d—— fool to fight. White soldiers too much."

I asked White Buffalo if he had ever gone on the warpath and he laughed a foxy laugh.

"Twice I put on paint and go after scalps. First time when young buck, after Custer he get killed. I fight, but soldiers soon catch and put me back on reservation. That time I fight with Sioux. I know Sitting Bull; great chief, when he live; also know Buffalo Bill and General Miles. Great chief of white soldiers. Second time I fight against Sioux when Cheyenne and Sioux fight one another."

White Buffalo's son, Charlie White Buffalo, is a very retiring young man, who speaks English perfectly, has received a government education and who is keeping an eye on the old man while here. The "pale face" youth hasn't anything on Charlie.

Harry Hale had as his guests the past week the local Boy Scouts, at which time, as a special moving picture feature, there was shown one of the Pathe "Weekly" reels. There were seventy-five scouts who attended the show, and they enjoyed it, too.

"The Fortune Hunter" delighted a large and select audience at the Auditorium this week, and was followed by Trixie Friganza in "The Sweetest Girl In Paris." Trixie may not be the sweetest bunch of feminity in the gay French metropolis, but she bubbled over with sweetness here.

The Photo Play this week featured the Thanhouser reel, "Cinderella," and it attracted big business. The reel was worthy of being featured and delighted old and young.

Witnessed a very impressive reel in which Anderson, of the Essanay Company, played a leading part as a rustler, but the name of the reel has escaped me and reference to the index fails to bring it back. It was a "thriller" though and intensely interesting. Pathe's "Actor Hearts" made a hit with professional and non-professional patronage at the new Central. "Brown of Harvard" was also well liked at the same house. The audience enjoyed the Essanay comedy, in spite of minor defects, "The Millionaire Barber," and one thing about the picture illustrated in humorous style, "The Great American Bluff"; also it impressed on one the danger of leaving incriminating photographs on one's dresser.

Business in all the theaters has picked up and is most gratifying. No wonder, for we are starting in now on one of the busy Winter seasons, and with a red-hot county and state election also getting a good start, the old town is "some pumpkins."

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. Ernest Burris, a well-known American citizen of Matalazana, Sinaloa County, Mexico, has opened a picture show in that town. Two Model B Edison machines have been installed and a Formastat is also used.

Mr. Burris will make a feature of American and Bison films and he has planned to change all the titles into the Spanish language. Eight reels a week will be used, the service being supplied by Miles Bros. exchange.

The Alhambra, corner of 17th and San Pedro streets, has changed hands. The new owner is Mr. J. W. Ross.

This is one of the oldest surburban houses in the city and has always been a paying one. Mr. Ross will continue to use Independent service from Miles Bros.

Many excellent pictures were given us this week by the Kinemacolor Company. Their program included, "Home and Haunts of Shakespere Along the River Avon," "A Visit to Cairo, Egypt," and "Along the River Nile." Two dramatic films were also shown, "The Lost Ring" and "The Clown's Sacrifice." Both of these were very good. In addition to their colored pictures, the Kinemacolor theater is using three reels of Independent service from Miles Bros. These are generally comedies and are used to close the show.

Mr. Bert L. Lustig's new house, the Rex, on Main, between Third and Fourth streets, opened Saturday, December 30th. Though Mr. Lustig uses Independent pictures in his other theater, the National, he was compelled to open the new house with Trust service being unable to secure just what he wanted on the Independent side.

This goes to show what a great demand exists for Independent films. Mr. D. S. Markowitz, of the California film exchange, has just returned from San Francisco, where he has been negotiating for more reels, and Mr. Earl Miles and Mr. James A. Sciaroni, of Miles Bros., will arrive in this city about January 11th. These gentlemen will look the situation over carefully and it is thought that they will arrange for more films for the local exchange.

Well, the General Film Company has lost two more houses. The Art, corner Fifth and Broadway, and the Olympic, on Main, between Fifth and Sixth streets, having changed to Independent. The latter is a musical comedy house and only uses one reel a week. The Art has been running Trust pictures for nearly one year but hereafter three reels of Independent service will be used, the program changing twice a week. Though this theater is rather small, it has the location, and as first-run pictures will be used, it will undoubtedly do the business. The Olympic will receive their service from Miles Bros. and the Art will be supplied by the Los Angeles film exchange.

The Sales Company gave us some good ones this week among which there were several real comedies. Majestic's "Will You Marry Me" was a scream and the acting in this was very clever. "His New Wife," by the Imp Company, was another side splitter and Rex's "The Parting of the Ways" is a dramatic production of merit. All of these pictures were shown at the Optic to good houses.

Talking about the Optic, Mr. Woodley has again made us sit up and take notice. This time it is a new aluminum curtain and two special ground half size lens. Mr. H. Munroe, the chief electrician of this house is a member of the Operators' Union, Local 150, and is a most capable man. With these new lenses, together with the fine curtain, Mr. Monroe is getting the best of results. Mr. Woodley promises many more improvements in the near future but it is pretty hard to find anything at the Optic that can be improved upon.

The "Socialist" theater, on Fifth street between Main and Los Angeles streets has closed. This house was used by the Socialist party for campaign purposes during the recent election. The building is being torn down.

The Selig Company had a beautiful float in the Tournament of Roses parade held on New Year's Day in Pasadena. On the float was a cage of wild animals from the Selig animal farm.

There is a rumor afloat that Miss Florence Turner will join the Vitagraph Company in Santa Monica in the near future. This will ease the minds of some of those anxious people who have been inquiring as to the whereabouts of this popular actress.

I noticed in a recent issue of one of the trade papers an article which advised an operator to journey to Los Angeles to get employment. I would like to state for the benefit of any brother who is contemplating a trip to the golden state, that as far as Los Angeles is concerned, there are more than a sufficient number of operators in the city at the present time. And talking about operators just a word about Local 150 of the Operators' Union.

This organization was chartered on July 16th, 1908, and during its existence it has had some stormy times due to two causes, the unorganized condition of Los Angeles and the roaming crank turners who come out here to get away from the cold months in the East. These men will go into a booth and grind 10 and 11 hours a day for about $12 a week which a card man can not do, the scale being $21 dollars for 8 hours a day.

With even these conditions prevailing, Local 150 has quite a nice little nest egg in the treasury, owes no one and has about 75 members who are all working and getting the scale To become a member of 150 each applicant has to pass a rigid examination which keeps the standard up to a good average. This organization not only protects its members but their employers as well. When a contract is signed with a theater the local pays for all damages done to films or machines by any member of the union.

Since Local 150 has been organized not one member has had a fire, which is certainly a fine record.

Now just a word to those card men and otherwise: Don't come to Los Angeles expecting to find a situation as there are three operators and would-bes for every job in the city. The conditions in the beach towns are the same and from what we hear some of the men there are not eating regularly. A tip to the wise is sufficient.

Mr. M. L. Butler of the Butler theater has taken a trip to Goldyke, Nev., where he has extensive mining interests. Mr. Butler will return early in February.

Mr. F. W. Randolph, general manager of the Annex Motion Picture Company has returned from New York where he has been in the Interests Company.

"CUPID AND THE RANCHMAN"

Nestor Release, Wednesday, January 24, 1912

Western comedy of the unusually good sort, with just enough sentiment carried along with rippling mirth.

Bob Stanley, a handsome young cowboy in love with Amy, the pretty daughter of John Daniels, widower and neighboring ranch owner, has a fine looking horse, a beautiful specimen of the noble species but with one bad fault—balky at times. Bob has tried in vain to sell the animal; those to whom he has offered it knowing of the bad trait. Daniels, however, was without this knowledge, and admiring the horse from every physical point of view, congratulates himself when he makes the purchase at what seems to him a ridiculously small price.

He starts on a journey next day with the new steed, and when, some distance away is overtaken by a heavy rainstorm. To his surprise and dismay "Nestorius," the horse, suddenly determines to go no farther, and do what he may, Daniels is powerless to swerve him from that determination. After exhausting all methods of persuasion, he gives up in anger and disgust, thoroughly soaked, and is compelled to return to the ranch on foot, where, on his arrival, he finds Bob comfortably and happily paying court to Amy. This is the "last straw," or the "red rag," and accordingly Bob is ordered off the place. Crestfallen, he leaves, wondering how he can fix it up. He has previously written to his sister Julia to come and pay him a visit without disclosing her identity to anyone, for the purpose of making ready his new bungalow, which he is secretly preparing as a surprise for Amy, whom he is soon to marry. Now everything looks black. But love, as usual, finds a way, and Julia, arriving unexpectedly, and Bob not at depot to meet her, makes inquiry at the general store as to the location of Bob's bungalow.

John Daniels is there and offers to drive her; they start, when Bob appears unseen by them, and trails along behind, noting with glee that John appears to be deeply interested. Julia is brought to the bungalow, and Daniels, leaving with longing looks and effusive good-byes, is invited to call, which he does several times, and finally dresses his best and slips off to propose. Amy and the cowboys espy him as he is leaving the ranch, and his discomfort is laughingly apparent. He arrives at the bungalow, proposes, but is told by Julia that he must ask her brother. Bob "happens" along with Amy, and withholds his consent until Daniels gives his to the union of Bob and Amy.

The picture in entirety is one of good, clean, wholesome comedy, cleverly worked out, admirably staged and splendidly interpreted by Harold Lockwood as Bob, Victoria Ford as Amy, Jack Conway as Daniels, and Eugenie Ford as Julia—a combination that could not fail to produce a pleasing picture.

POWERS STILL AT IT

P. A. Powers is certainly going on full sped now. In the last issue he announced a switch in release in order to give his customers the benefit of the Durbar and Equitable Fire on a split reel, and now he repeats the trick. Being a good Irishman may have been responsible for his getting the much sought privilege of putting a camera man aboard the boat of the Committee that welcomed Cardinal Farley to America. He made the trip back with the Cardinal aboard, and succeeded in photographing a number of the most prominent ecclesiastics, merchant princes and judiciary lights who composed the Reception Committee. Then the Powers man got a location at St. Patrick's Cathedral, and photographed the new Cardinal as he entered, with all the magnificent pomp and ceremonial regalia attendant.

This is to be the regular release for Saturday, January 27th in place of "The Nurse," which was scheduled for that day.

Mr. Powers is to be congratulated on his aggressiveness in securing these pictures, and the fact that he is able to schedule their release so quickly is a compliment to his staff.

SIMPLEX APPRECIATION

The Star Theater,
Princeton, Ind., Jan. 7, 1912.

Simplex Sales Agency,
23 East Fourteenth Street, New York.

Gentlemen:

I installed in my theater a Simplex machine on November 16th, and am so well pleased with it that I don't think I could be induced to buy any other machine. I also have a ——— machine, but there is no comparison. Have you a catalog or folder of all the parts and supplies for the machine so that I can order from you should anything happen? I bought my machine from Drollinger, of Evansville. He had it on hand, and it had been used a few times on trial. I broke down with my ———, and went to Evansville to get repairs and could not get them. I couldn't afford to close down, so I bought this machine at first sight, and after the other machine dealers in ——— and ——— found out I had this machine in my place, they kept the 'phone hot trying to run the Simplex down, so as to sell me one of the other two. But the Simplex looked good to me alongside those little machines, and I kept it. I am really glad I broke down that night, for if I hadn't I would still be plodding along with my ——. I had four thirteen-inch reels made, and I run both reels on it, running two reels without a stop. It won't be long before I will be in the market for another Simplex.

Yours respectfully,
CHAS. F. WOODS.

KINEMACOLOR CO. OF AMERICA

An announcement of much interest to the moving picture and theatrical interests is that of the Kinemacolor Company of America, in which it is announced that Mr. Henry J. Brock, president of the Kinemacolor Company of Canada, Ltd., has been appointed managing director of the Kinemacolor Company of America.

At the annual meeting, Tuesday, January 9th, the entire board of officers was re-elected, including Mr. Charles E. Ford as president. Owing to Mr. Ford's numerous banking interests in the West, he has found it necessary to resign his office and devote his entire time to their interests.

Mr. Brock is well known throughout the country as a moving picture and theatrical man, as he is one of the partners of the Mark-Brock Theatrical enterprises of Buffalo, N. Y., who own and operate numerous high-class moving picture and vaudeville theaters in the United States and Canada. Mr. Brock assumed the reins of management this week and is preparing several interesting announcements for the trade and general public.

In the short time that Mr. Brock has been at the head of the Kinemacolor Company of America, in the New York office, he has put into effect plans for the establishing of several different departments in connection with the business.

At the head of the booking branch of the business will be one of the best known theatrical booking men in this country, and under his direction will come the entire booking and routing of all the Kinemacolor road companies.

The commercial department will handle the commercial features, similar to the contract just finished for the National Cash Register Co.

The educational department will be thoroughly organized, as Kinemacolor makes a special feature of educational and travel pictures. Mr. Brock has in preparation many other plans which will be soon announced to the public. A. H. Sawyer remains as formerly.

At the Kinemacolor (Scala) Theater there has just been included in the evening program a brilliant Kinemacolor presentation of the dramatic sensation of the season—Sophocles' immortal tragedy, "Œdipus Rex." Admirably acted by Mr. Charles Urban's own company of players attached to his studios at Nice, the action of the masterpiece which so graphically expresses the Greek view of the force of destiny, has (in the obvious absence of the dialogue) been preserved while being reverently compressed; whilst the glorious old-world scenery to be found outside Nice and Cimiez has furnished classic backgrounds which closely approximate to the accepted views of Delphi and Thebes and Corinth. From the infancy of Œdipus, clouded by the grim prognostication of the soothsayer, down to the royal parricide's death on the scarp of the mountain, all the main incidents of this historic masterpiece are preserved and reproduced assiduously correct in detail and rich in photographic quality.

MOVING PICTURE TALES

Our first issue of this new venture is completely sold out, and we are now on the press for the second issue. We would like to hear from exhibitors from all parts of the country their expression of opinion regarding the venture, and also whether it would sell for 10 cents a copy. Our February issue will comprise thirty-two pages and cover, covering the TALES for the month. We are now prepared to take orders from exhibitors for the February issue at the increased price. This venture was undertaken to supply a long felt want amongst the patrons of the M. P. theaters for stories of the Independent films, and we are anxious to learn, from every reader intertested, whether this is accomplished or not. At any rate we will be glad to know their ideas and wishes.

Pittsfield, Mass.—The Pittsfield Theater Co., capital, $25,000; L. J. Minahan, Edw. Boldwood and Daniel England.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

80 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

January 10th, 1912.

NOTICE

The validity of the Edison Re-issued Patent No. 12,192, covering motion picture film, has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for the information of those concerned, there appears with this notice a copy of the order and decree entered in that Court on December 23rd, 1911.

The manufacture, sale, rental or use of motion picture film containing the invention covered by said patent, without license from this Company, will be diligently prosecuted by suits for an injunction, accounting and damages, including all profits, gains and advantages that the infringer has received or that have accrued to him by reason of such infringement, in manufacturing, selling, renting or exhibiting such film.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY

80 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

In The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY, Plaintiff,
vs.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE, Defendant.
In Equity No. 28,605

This cause having been brought to final hearing upon pleadings and proofs, and upon Defendant's motions to strike out testimony taken on behalf of the Plaintiff and for leave to take further testimony on behalf of the Defendant, and having been argued by Melville Church, Esq., of counsel for the plaintiff, and by Harry N. Low, Esq., William Houston Kenyon, Esq., and William J. Wallace, Esq. of counsel for defendant, and having been duly considered by the Court, it is, by the Court, this 23rd day of December, 1911, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows:

I. That reissue letters patent No. 12192, granted to Thomas A. Edison, on the 12th day of January, 1904, for Kinetoscopic Film, referred to in the plaintiff's bill of complaint, are good and valid in law as to the 2nd claim thereof.

II. That Thomas A. Edison was the original, first, and true inventor of the improvements described in said reissue letters patent and particularly claimed in the said 2nd claim thereof.

III. That the plaintiff, Motion Picture Patents Company, has good title to said reissue letters patent.

IV. That the defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, has infringed upon said reissued letters patent No. 12192, as to the said second claim thereof.

V. That a perpetual injunction issue against the said defendant, Chicago Film Exchange, prohibiting it, its officers, directors, attorneys, agents, servants and workmen, from directly or indirectly making, using or selling Kinetoscopic or Motion Picture Films containing or embodying the invention set forth in said reissue letters patent No. 12192, and particularly covered by claim 2 thereof

VI. That the plaintiff do recover from the defendant the profits, gains and advantages which the defendant has received or made or that have accrued to it by reason of its said infringement of said reissue letters patent No. 12,192 since the date of said reissue letters patent, and also the damages which the plaintiff has sustained by reason of said infringement, to be assessed as provided by law.

VII. That this cause be and is hereby referred to the Auditor of this Court to take and state an account of said gains, profits and advantages and to assess such damages, and to report thereon with all convenient speed; and that the defendant herein, Chicago Film Exchange, its officers, directors, attorneys, clerks, servants and workmen be and are hereby directed to attend before said Auditor, from time to time, as required, and to produce before him such books, papers, vouchers and documents and to submit to such oral examination as the said Auditor may require.

VIII. That the plaintiff do recover of the defendant its costs in this suit to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court.

IX. That defendant's motion to strike out parts of rebuttal testimony of the plaintiff as not being proper evidence in rebuttal, and defendant's motion to be allowed to take further testimony strictly in surrebuttal, heretofore reserved for the final hearing, are hereby denied.

WENDELL P. STAFFORD, Justice.

LATEST FROM LONDON

London office of the News, 8 Sherwood St., W.

January 5, 1912.

In connection with the films of the Durbar, which were shown all over England on Monday, an interesting question has arisen which seems likely to be settled in the courts. Inasmuch as the copyright law in America is, if anything, more stringent than here, the incident appears to have a direct interest for the American exhibitor. Briefly the facts are that Barker Motion Photography, Ltd., having succeeded in securing a very good picture of an incident of the Durbar which has given rise to a good deal of discussion here—the perfunctory manner in which the Gaekwar of Baroda made his submission to the King—disposed of the sole right of reproducing this incident as a newspaper illustration for a good round sum to the Daily Express. On the same day on which it appeared in the Express, however, a practically identical picture appeared in the Daily Sketch. I understood that Barkers thereupon received an intimation from the Express that payment would not be made for the reproduction and that the Express might further feel inclined to proceed for damages.

* * * *

Application to the Daily Sketch elicited the fact that their reproduction was made from a Barker film supplied by an exhibitor. As the situation stands at present, I believe the Daily Sketch will be sued for infringement of copyright but it is, of course, quite possible that the case may be settled out of court. The interesting point from the trade viewpoint is that an exhibitor is not entitled to make, or authorize to be made, reproductions from any film, though it may be his own property, without the authority of the owner of the copyright—usually, of course, the maker. That is a point which exhibitors would do well to note if they wish to avoid trouble.

* * * *

Now as to the Durbar films. The general verdict is, to be candid, that taken together the results are disappointing. In many cases the buyers' opinion has been, curtly, "rotten." By general consent Barker's picture is the best of the lot (I except Kinemacolor's record which is not yet to hand). Warwick's is also described as a good picture, but I have not yet had an opportunity of seeing it. But some of the others were so indifferent that many showmen have taken them off their screens and bought a new copy elsewhere. Even Barker's, though full of interest, is not of the quality we expect from that firm and none of the camera men appear to have had positions giving an opportunity for exceptional pictures. I am also told by one of the photographers that the winter season in India is marked by heavy night frosts. In the morning, when the Durbar was held, the bright sun causes a mist, which probably accounts for some of the foggy pictures we have received. Undoubtedly Barker's for one firm have, however, done exceptionally well with the event and have by this latest "scoop" added to their reputation for consistently good topical work. Their press cutting book will be enriched by some extremely complimentary notices, particularly with reference to the Gaekwar incident.

* * * *

We have "Flying A's" submarine picture over here at last and an inspection leaves one with the impression that it is a very remarkable piece of work, suggesting wonderful possibilities for doing picture work in yet another new direction. At the same time I doubt if it is going to be a great popular success with our public. Such a subject needs, for full appreciation, an understanding of the difficulties which had to be overcome, which are lacking in the average theater patron. Where a lecturer can be employed it should be a feature, and showmen would be well advised to seek such aid or that afforded by a special circular. But whether the commercial success of the film is equal to its technical merits or not we raise our hats to Mr. Hutchinson and his assistants for a piece of pioneer work which should help the great "uplift" movement not a little.

* * * *

Reliance films will be regularly shown or released here by the Western Import Co., Ltd., from now onwards. We always had an idea of Reliance as a brand containing the germs of a very big success, and hope that our expectations will be realized under the new producing arrangements.

* * * *

Since writing the above, several new stories in Durbar film are to hand, according to which it appears that one of the producer's premises were visited on Monday by a positive procession of showmen, with Durbar films under their arms and demanding "money back." Undoubtedly many showmen found it necessary to buy a second copy and Barker's and Warwick mainly benefited by this business.

* * * *

The British & Colonial Kin. Co. have given the agency for their films to Messrs. Marks & Co., who already handle Biograph, Lubin and Kalem. B. & C.'s product is steadily improving and "Lieut. Daring" is becoming a highly popular film personage.

BROWN MOVES IN TOWN

Imp Release, Saturday, February 3, 1912

When Brown moved to town a rather unpleasant adventure befell him. Before he got his packing boxes properly placed he tore his pants. It was a very bad tear, indeed. In his difficulty he appealed to a neighbor to help him out with another pair. The neighbor was unable to do so and intimated as much by sending him a photograph of herself. For the neighbor was a lady doctor. However, she was good-natured and sent poor Brown a kimono instead, which Brown gallantly wore in the sight of the doctor.

Here Brown's troubles might have ceased were it not that news had gotten abroad that there was an escaped lunatic to be run to earth. It was poor Brown's hard luck that he was taken for the looney and so he suffered many indignities before he was identified and rescued by the kind lady physician.

The lady doctor was so good-natured that she fell in love with Brown and Brown with her, and the picture ends by the conjunction of their two names outside their apartment, presumably in a flourishing part of New York.

This is typical of the bright and vivacious comedies that form part of the Saturday releases of the Imp Film Company.

OUR CHICAGO CORRESPONDENT SAYS—

The prettiest little theater that I have had the pleasure to visit lately is the California Theater at the corner of North California avenue and Augusta street. The theater has only been opened since last August and is doing a fine business. It is managed by Mr. William Edwards, formerly of St. Paul, Minn., and the success of the California is largely due to the ability of both Mr. Edwards and Mr. L. Geinsberg, the proprietor. The seating capacity of the house is 299, and an excellent program is always shown there. Three reels of Anti-Trust pictures, Sprokets pictures, one spot and one illustrated song make up the evening's program. The pleasure of the evening's show is also added to by an excellent orchestra of a piano player and drummer. Mr. Edwards is a very live and up-to-date exhibitor, and although at the present he is not a member of the Exhibitors League of America, Illinois State No. 2, he is seriously thinking of joining the same.

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

THE LITTLE SOLDIER
Solax Release, January 24

Little Arthur's mother buys him a picture book showing soldiers in all their resplendent colors. That settled it.

Arthur decides that an existence without a uniform is like a meal without dessert. His father gets him a uniform. The "little soldier" dreams of battles and conquering armies.

One night his dreams are disturbed. An unscrupulous maid connives with her sweetheart, a burglar. They both plan to rob the house. Arthur's mother hears some noise downstairs. She goes down to investigate and finds the burglar at work. This is the "big scene." Arthur, in bed, hears his mother's screams. He takes his tin sword, and in his pajamas, rushes down and challenges the burglar. The thief thinks it's a great joke.

In the meantime Arthur's father arrives and puts the thief out of business, but a stray bullet hits the "little soldier." He is wounded, but not fatally.

FROZEN ON LOVE'S TRAIL
Solax Release, January 28

A white girl, living with her father at the barracks near an Indian reservation, is very kind to a half-breed Indian. He falls in love with her, but she does not encourage him. However, she one day is about to accept a trinket from him when one of the soldiers, who is also in love with her, intimates something that does not sound nice to a good girl's ears. She throws the trinket at his face and runs off mortified.

Many weeks later, the girl rides off alone on a little hunting trip among the snow-topped mountains. Her horse goes lame, stumbles and throws her. She is stunned and lies prostrate in the snow. Along comes the good half-breed with a sled drawn by a pack of dogs. The dogs drawing the sled, against a background of beautiful snow-covered mountains, shows a vista of indescribable scenic beauty.

The half-breed comes across the girl. He puts her on his sled and wraps her frozen form in his own furs. He is almost naked. He runs on for miles, urging his dog-pack. The chill cold is too much for him. His frozen sinews become stiffened. At last his legs give way and he tumbles, frozen, into the snow, while the dogs carry the sled to safety. A rescuing party later finds the Indian frozen on love's trail.

Solax Release, January 26

A hardy old frontiersman, sitting in front of his cabin roasting a leg of lamb, dozes off and dreams of his struggles on the prairies. He lives over again the time when his father's pioneer wagon was attacked by Indians, of the time when nearly all of his relations were massacred, and of his escape and rescue.

His whole career looms up before him and passes on in review. His boyhood on the plains, the struggles of an early manhood, his tender love affair, his marriage, his growing family and their gradual demise and finally the mists of this nightmare begin to fade away and then we see the hardy old frontiersman "get a hustle on" and prepare a meal for his lonely self and big, faithful dog.

AS IT WAS IN THE BEGINNING
Thanhouser Release, January 30

A society girl, admired and courted by many men, is still indifferent to one and all. She enjoys their company, is pleased with their attention, but has not met "the" man, the one she would be willing to accept as a life partner.

At a dance one evening there is introduced to her a man who could be best described by the one word, "masterful." He shows that he is attracted by the girl, but unlike her other suitors, he does not flatter her, or bow down before her. And his personality strangely affects her.

With her thoughts all of the stranger, she sits alone, musing. It seems to her that she is carried backward many centuries to a time, when by her supposed magic arts, she reigned over a tribe of cave men, who worshipped her as a goddess. But in her rude court one day there appeared a stranger, who mocked at her pretensions and derided her powers. The others would have attacked him but she felt herself impelled to stay their hands, and the stranger walked off, still jeering at her.

The stranger, not content with mocking at her, stirred up her heretofore loyal subjects to rebellion. They stormed her cave, but her magic was still potent and she drove them off, unarmed though she was. But the stranger remained, laughed at her and finally took her prisoner, dragging her back to the village of the men who had once held her as a queen.

There the cave men consulted as to her fate, and enraged because they had so long believed in her magic power, decided to put her to death. The stranger, however, balked their plans. He regarded the girl with rude favor, told the others that she belonged to him and ordered them out of his way. When they tried to bar his progress he fought his way through them and to safety in the wilderness outside with her in his arms.

There they made their home, and the one-time goddess was content to fetch and carry for "her man," rough, brutal and masterful though he was. For he was hers, and he protected her.

She comes back to a realization of the present with a start. The stranger stands before her, and asks for the next dance. In a daze, she rises and takes his arm and walks with him toward the ballroom. And all the way the one thought is running through her head:

"I wonder if he is 'the' man?"

For the stranger at the dance looked exactly like the man who in the prehistoric past subjugated the goddess and fought the timid cave men who first worshipped her and then wanted to put her to death.

ON PROBATION
Thanhouser Release, February 2

If you were a lonely, rich old man, and there was a child you dearly loved, to whose care would you entrust it?

This is a question that many have tried to solve. Some have succeeded, others failed. The pity of it is that there is no chance to correct such an error, once it is made. Death prevents an appeal.

A certain old widower had a little granddaughter, and he earnestly desired that she should grow up to be a happy, healthy, wealthy woman. His only other near relatives were his sister and his son. His sister was married and with a boy of her own, while his son was not naturally vicious but was lazy and shiftless.

It was destined that one of them should be the guardian of the tiny girl, and it seemed an easy matter to settle. The son loved the girl, it was true, but his habits were against him. The sister, despite the natural love she had for her own family, lavished affection upon her little niece. So the old man made his will just before starting on his yacht to look after some business affairs.

The captain of the vessel broke the news to the family that the millionaire had been washed overboard and drowned at sea. His will was opened and read. It made the sister the executrix of the estate, which was to be held in trust for five years. At the end of that time, the son, "if he had committed no dishonest act," was to receive one-half, the sister the other. Should the boy misconduct himself, everything went to the sister, who was also to bring up the little girl as her own. Until the estate was finally divided, the sister was to provide a home for the boy and the girl.

Had the old man's spirit been able to revisit the world, it would have been shocked at what went on after his death was announced. For the sister discarded her sweet, hypocritical ways and made a drudge of the little girl. The child's toys were taken way, she was banished from her beautifully furnished nursery, and sent to an attic room, where night after night she sobbed herself to sleep. Her only friend was the son, who developed manly traits in time of trouble. The two were badly treated, but there seemed no escape for them.

Not content with half the fortune, the grasping sister plotted to get all of it. One dishonest act on the boy's part would win the fortune for her. He declined to commit it, so she artfully contrived, by a chain of evidence, to make it out that he was a thief.

The plot was successful, and when a policeman put his hand on the young man's shoulders she realized that great wealth was hers. The next second she found that she had lost all.

For this particular, lonely, rich old man had found a way to correct a vital error. He had reasoned out how it could be done, and there were no flaws in his plans.

The sister he had trusted failed him, but she was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of her treachery. The son, who had developed into a man under the stress of misfortune, came into a fortune in time, and the little girl did grow up to be a happy woman.

THE GRUBSTAKE MORTGAGE

American Release, February 8

Jack Burton, a young mining engineer in the employ of the Face Quartz Mining Company, is in love with the foreman's daughter.

She loves another suitor, Jim Blake, a young proprietor, but she does not encourage his attentions. Failing to find any promising prospects, and in need of money, Jim salts a prospect hole he has been digging and invites the old foreman to investigate it. Not looking for trickery from his daughter's friend, the old man finds it rich in gold-bearing quartz and readily agrees to mortgage his little home to grubstake the proprietor, share and share alike. He asks his employer for the money, and as his home is clear he readily takes a mortgage on it and gives the foreman the money.

Jim takes the money, and instead of working the claims appropriates it for his own use as was his original intention. And then came the accident so common in the mines, so full of grief and agony to the wives and children of the miners. The old foreman is caught in a blast and killed. The young engineer hurries ahead to prepare his sweetheart for the dreadful news and comforts her as her father's body is carried to the home. Cut off from his support, the little girl has only the little home with its heavy mortgage and the grubstake agreement on the salted claim between herself and starvation. And then comes a curt note from the superintendent of the Face Quartz Mining Company, informing her that the mortgage on her little home is past due. With the fear of being left homeless urging her on, she goes to the mine and offers her share in the claim for an extension of the mortgage. The superintendent offers to investigate the claim, and if found valuable to cancel the mortgage on the home.

He sends the young engineer to investigate the prospect and Jack, who had heard the interview between the superintendent and his sweetheart, sincerely hoped to find gold in the claim. But it was useless. His experienced eye told him plainly the story of the robbery. The old gag of sprinkling dust in the quartz, that so easily fools the uninitiated and unsuspecting. He climbs out of the hole to meet the prospector who had salted it. He accosts the young engineer and offers a bribe to report the mine a valuable one and points out to him that if he tells the truth he will make the girl he loves homeless. He spurns the bribe and hurries to his sweetheart's home and tell her his discovery, that the claim is worthless and that the truth will render her homeless. A word from him and he could save her home, but that word would be a lie.

And she tells him to return to his employers and report the truth regardless of what will happen. With a heavy heart he returns to his employer and tells him plainly that the mine is salted and valueless. Quick to act in all things, the superintendent summons the sheriff and evicts the orphan girl from her home, enraged to think that she had tried to swindle him.

In the meantime Jack had hurried to the bank and drawn out his balance. He arrived at his sweetheart's home to late to prevent the eviction, for she has already gone. His savings are just enough to pay the mortgage, which he takes up, and then hurries to seek her. She wanders to the prospect hole, her only possession in the world, and sinks wearily down and cries. Jim Blake finds her and, gloating over her loss, tells her that it is Jack Burton's fault that she is homeless, and urges her to marry him. She refuses and he attempts to force a kiss upon her. Jack comes up and, enraged to hear the false lies and abuse given his sweetheart, he flings Jim from the girl. In a fierce fight that follows, Jim loses his balance and falls to his death in the bottom of the mouthless prospect hole. Jack leads his sweetheart back to her home, and when she tells him it is hers no longer, he takes the canceled mortgage from his pocket and slowly tears it up. And then they turn to face a new future—together.

WHERE BROADWAY MEETS THE MOUNTAINS

American Release, February 12

John Newcomb, a young playwright, retires to the mountain country, secures lodgings at the Wayside Hotel and settles down to finish his latest play.

Here, in the solitude of the vast mountain stretches, he finds inspiration to complete the play that was destined to bring him fame and fortune. It proves to be of such charm and human interest that the producers and their stars are sent out to rehearse their parts and obtain a glimpse of the country in which the plot was laid. Thus could local color be obtained.

But prior to the arrival of the company, while strolling amid the dreamy scenery of the little valley, the playwright meets Mary Cutter, daughter of a mountaineer, who delivers milk each morning at the Wayside Hotel. Young and unsophisticated, she sees and worships the handsome, polished city man, who, finding time hanging heavily upon his hands, pending the arrival of the company, goes much about with her and, quite unknown to himself, falls in love with her.

Finally, the company arrives. Frank Willsden, the leading man, is delighted with the charming young woman who is to play opposite, and amid the picturesque hills of Southern California the pair plight their troth.

Meantime, the young playwright sees little of Mary Cutter, and she, possessed of the hot, ungovernable passions of the mountain-bred girl, finds much time to spend in and about the walks of the hotel, where she can watch the playwright and his leading lady rehearse their scenes. Believing that he loves the city girl, she hurries to her father with a tale of outraged feelings. He, with quick temper, organizes a band of cowboys and hurries to the hotel. There, by mistake, he meets Frank Willsden, the leading man, with his sweetheart. In error, the mountaineer and his friends take him to Mary who easily sets them right. But the playwright, dazzled by the beauty of the leading lady, believes himself in love with her, and in a moment of jealousy accuses her lover, Frank Willsden, of having made love to Mary Cutter and his story seems to be proven by the arrival of the mountaineers with Mary and Frank. Then the revelation comes to the playwright, and for the first time he realizes that he has loved Mary without knowing it.

THE KID AND THE SLEUTH

Imp Release, January 29

Red Gallagher, a freckled A. D. T. messenger boy, is addicted to reading literature of the yellow-back variety and the lurid tales have a wonderful effect on his imagination. He neglects his duties to pursue them and imagines himself a hero on sundry occasions, only to come out of it and realize the stern realities of life. Shirking his work, he seats himself on a barrel in an alley, pulls out a detective story and reads. He yawns, drops the book, sleeps and dreams.

In his fancy, he is the hero of the detective tale which is shown on the screen. It is a farcial absurdity, depicting the well-known characters in the five-cent story books. There is a bemustached villain with an able accomplice in a handsome termagant of a woman. They are persecuting a young, innocent maiden in an effort to induce her to "sign the papers." She is subjected to all kinds of tortures and is suffering intensely when Red is called in to deliver a message. He scents the conspiracy and puts the gentleman detective wise.

The sleuth decides to assist and the pair start out to rescue the young and innocent maiden. The plotting pair discover they are about to be shadowed and they spirit the girl away.

There is a novel chase, with the messenger kid and the detective in hot pursuit. The boy has his trusty revolver and he fires it at intervals, hampering the flight of the demons in human form, although several laps in the rear. The chase ends at a saw-mill, where the tender flesh of the helpless girl is about to be mangled by a huge saw, a most diabolical torture. Red arrives in the nick of time to pull the quivering body off the log—a hero at last. His joy is short lived, for the detective places the beauty in a motor car and carries her off, rewarding Red with a few coins as a surcease for his sorrow.

The boy awakens—to find it all a dream—picks up his book and starts away to deliver a belated message, disappointed and humbled.

THE POWER OF CONSCIENCE

Imp Release, February 1

Eric Masters and his wife are leading the life of society people on a very limited income.

Their friend Vernon Godfrey, who is quite wealthy, is interested in Mrs. Masters, and holds a note of Eric's, which he is willing to renew provided the wife will go away with him. She very nearly consents to do this when he threatens to ruin her husband, but in the end love for her husband triumphs and she remains true to him.

At a fashionable ball, one of the guests, Mrs. Leslie, loses a valuable jewel, which is found by Eric. This means a way out of all his difficulties, as the jewel is worth $10,000. He is tempted to retain it, give his wife all she desires and repay his friend.

But after deliberation he returns the jewel, prefering to be honest, and with his repentant wife to lead a happier and more economical life in future.

O'BRIEN'S BUSY DAY

Imp Release, February 3

O'Brien's busy day was not full of business in the conventional or remunerative. He certainly worked hard on that memorable day.

Leaving for the office, he got roughhoused more than once before he landed at his desk. Sending out for refreshments, he was deprived of them by a predatory hobo. Going home at night for peace and a quiet smoke, he found all the rooms in his house occupied by his daughters and their lovers. Even on the very roof of the building the solace of tobacco is denied him; he is ejected from that position. Finally O'Brien makes for the Contractor's Club, only to find that place closed for repairs.

This picture is somewhat in the nature of a monologue or one-part play, the burden of the work falling upon W. R. Daly, the Imp Company's splendid all-around actor. On the same reel, "Brown Moves in Town."

When Brown moved to town an early misfortune befell him in his new home. He accidentally tore his pants by means of a nail that protruded from a packing box. His wardrobe being limited, he sought to borrow another pair of pants from a doctor who lived on the same floor.

The doctor was a lady, and sent Brown a photograph of herself, thus delicately hinting that she could not literally comply with Brown's request. However, she lent Brown a kimona, which Brown gallantly wore in public out of gratitude toward his fair benefactress.

Now it happened that news of an escaped lunatic had got bruited abroad, and Brown in his borrowed kimona was assumed to be the fugitive. His arrest and discomfiture, therefore, logically followed, and he was only removed from his predicament by the intervention of the kindly young lady doctor.

Brown was also a doctor, and from being partners in love they also became partners in business and the pleasing adventures ended with their joint names being placed outside their dwelling place.

HOW JACK DALTON GOT EVEN WITH BUD

Champion Release, January 31

Jack Dalton is a most admirable character, the sort of man we would like to claim as a friend, and when the youth, Willie Burton, meets with an accident and Jack comes to his aid and takes him to his home, and there meets Clara Burton, the boy's beautiful sister, we feel that things are as they ought to be, in the coming together of these two. We watch with pleasure the progress of the pretty love scenes, in which nauseating mushiness has no part. The coming of Bud Ahearn into the lives of these two is a stumbling block to their happiness.

Ahearn tries to force himself on Clara in spite of her womanly protests, and we feel that we could slaughter him when he brutally assails the young girl in an attempt to have her accept his wild, passionate embraces. But, thank heaven, we are relieved to see how signally he is defeated in his fell purpose. And the one whom kind Providence sends to protect the weak is none other than good and brave Jack Dalton. This is how it came about.

Bud has pals, and altogether they are a bad lot. They decide to get Jack into their clutches. Unfortunately for him, he plays into the hands of the outlaws. While Willie and he are racing their steeds to try their mettle, Jack is swooped down on by Bud's confederates. Willie has seen the capture from a distance, and like the maddened wind he dashes off for assistance.

Jack himself has no idea of submitting so calmly to the machinations of his would-be rival, and maybe it didn't do one's heart good to see how his keen wit and indomitable pluck and bravery wins for him his release, unaided, from the clutches of the now thoroughly disconcerted scoundrel.

Meantime, the happy-go-lucky cowpunchers have been informed of Jack's predicament, and with a whoop and a yell they are off for the rescue. That Bud meets with his Waterloo in a truly Western fashion goes without saying. Jack now stands higher still, if that were possible, in the eyes of the fair Clara, but her heart is already overflowing for him with true and deep-abiding love. Thus comes to him a crowning triumph, and happiness for them both in the passing of Bud.

A MATINEE MIX-UP

Nestor Release, January 22

Mrs. Carson borrows a novel from a girl friend, not realizing that she thus assists in demonstrating the truth of that old adage, "He who borrows, borrows trouble." Miss Ware, who loans the book, has just received a note from her sweetheart, Jack Raymond, making an appointment with her to attend the matinee that afternoon, and she has slipped the note into the book.

Mrs. Carson takes the novel with her, and has just composed herself to read when her friend, Mrs. Gadd, comes in with matinee tickets and invites her to the theater. Mrs. Carson hastens to get ready and, in laying down the book, drops the note out of it, unnoticed. She and her friend attend the performance and, upon leaving the theater, meet Jack and his sweetheart, Miss Ware. The latter suggests that Mrs. Carson accompany her and Jack in his car, and Mrs. Carson accepts.

In the meantime, Carson comes home and finds the note on the floor. Inasmuch as it is addressed only to "Darling," he concludes that it was meant for his wife, and leaves the house on vengeance bent. While waiting for a street car at the corner, he sees Mrs. Carson and Jack together in the auto, Jack having left his sweetheart at her home, intending to take Mrs. Carson to her own apartments and then return to take dinner with the Wares.

The sight of his apparently guilty wife riding with Jack is too much for Carson, and he seeks his lawyer, who chances to be no other than Mr. Ware, the father of Jack's sweetheart.

The father's wrath knows no bounds when he learns that his future son-in-law is named as the co-respondent in a divorce suit. He hastens home and announces that the engagement is off, and that Jack is a reprobate and several other things. However, the father's wrath leads to explanations, and the old lawyer calls Carson on the telephone to tell him of his mistake. Mrs. Carson, whose husband has just arrived, answers the phone, and he, thinking that she is talking to her lover, tears the instrument from her, breaking the connection. It is necessary for Ware and the lovers to go to Carson's house in order to explain, and they arrive just as he is bidding his wife a tragic farewell. All ends happily, except for poor Carson, who is made to promise all sorts of things by his injured spouse.

"EUROPE SAYS IMP IS THE MASTER!"

(Light effect in "The Power of Conscience")

Discriminating European exhibitors and "hirers" (Exchanges) declare they never saw such masterly light effects as are featured now and then in "Imp" films. English, German, Russian and other trade papers have commented upon it at frequent intervals. You will see some of these light effects in our release of THURSDAY, Feb. 1st., entitled,

"THE POWER OF CONSCIENCE"

A modern high class society drama with King Baggott in the leading role. Will you get it? Copyright 1912, Imp Films Co. Released Thursday, January 25. Insist on getting it.

"KID AND THE SLEUTH"

This is a terribly funny take-off on the ten-thousand-buckets-of-blood-blood-blood mellerdrammers of your boyhood days. Released Monday, Jan. 22. Beg for it. Copyright 1912 Imp Films Co.

AND HERE'S THE "SATURDAY SPLIT"

Two real comedies entitled "O'Brien's Busy Day" and "Brown Moves To Town." Saturday, February 3rd. Copyright 1912 Imp Films Co.

MAN'S BEST FRIEND
Eclair Release, January 30

Old Silas Judson, stricken blind by fever and compelled, through poverty to beg in the streets is cared for by a fatherless granddaughter who looks after their cheerless home while the old man goes into the street each day accompanied by his Pomeranian, a dog of unusual intelligence.

"Gyp" is subsequently stolen and falls into the hands of the daughter of a wealthy merchant. He is later sent to The Home for Friendless Animals when the merchant's daughter explains about the purchase. On the way, "Gyp" escapes and his animal instinct carries him back to his blind master who has feebly started for home alone.

But, in crossing a busy street, the old man is struck by a passing car and seriously injured. The dog, realizing his master's condition, runs to the house and barks frantically at the door, whereupon the granddaughter follows him back to the scene of the accident.

In the meantime, the wealthy merchant, riding by in his auto, comes upon the old man and, entreated by his daughter, takes him to their home where he recovers sufficiently to be taken to his own little cottage after a short time.

The blind man's injury proved fatal, however, and they buried him in a corner of the public burying ground where little "Gyp" mourned his loss with the now friendless girl.

Fortunately the merchant's daughter learns of their pitiable condition and the two little waifs are given a good home, but "Gyp" and the little girl may be seen making regular visits to the grave of their dead friend where they place flowers and mourn in sacred silence.

WILLY PLAYS TRUANT
Eclair Release, February 1

Young Willy is a terrible boy. His nurse can hardly get him to dress. It is harder still to get him to school. Here, his exuberance causes disorder in class. He fights with his classmates, turns over desks and benches and runs away, along the road, where he continues his mischievous actions. To escape them, Willy hides in a large laundry basket. The laundress, not knowing, carries it away and empties the contents into a tub in which she pours water. Willy finds the joke less amusing and gets out of the tub quickly, pulling an obstinate bed sheet behind him. He returns to his own home and hides under the table in shame.

But he left a trail behind which was discovered by his father who gives him a whipping. On the same reel,

EDUCATION OF THE BLIND

This picture initiates us into the life and education of the blind in all its details.

We show how they learn to read, write and count according to their methods. Also their curious lessons in music, and finally a series of tableaux which instruct in the various trades, thanks to which the afflicted ones are enabled to gain their livelihood.

A FRIEND TO CHILDREN

Great Northern Release, January 27

In this picture we are introduced to an eccentric character who is a staunch friend to children. We see him bubbling over with the milk of human kindness. Passing by a residence in which an Amazon is engaged in beating the dust from the drawing-room furniture, he assumes that corporal punishment is being meted out to some little innocent, and mounting the stairs, he bounds into the room, finds the woman with the beater in her hand, and a child uttering plaintive wails. A struggle ensues between Smith and the infant's mater familis in which, of course, our friend comes off second best. Going into the street, he next befriends a man who has imbibed not wisely but too well, and who is repeatedly "all over him." A melee ensues, and eventually Smith finds himself hauled off to the police station, where he is fined $5 before he is a free man again. A woman who is doing her washing with her infant by her side next attracts his attention, and his well-meant interference brings down upon his head not only loud anathemas, but a bucket of soap-suds. It is not long before he is again in custody and finds that his charity will cost him more, for $10 is this time the penalty. Outside a circus in which a boxing contest is in progress, the sound of blows falls upon Smith's ears, and his further investigations once more have disastrous results. By this time he has become an object of pity. With his leg and arm in splints and bandages, a beautifully-colored eye, and the other optic hidden beneath a patch, we see him at home. Yet even now his kindness is not exhausted, for seeing a howling mob of youngsters outside his window, he prepares a treat for them. The commissariat is exhausted, and when his friends turn upon him, he comes to the conclusion that ungratefulness is the world's compensation for charity. On the same reel,

THE MAN WITH THE PUPPETS

The proprietor of a puppet show arrives with his properties and proceeds to rehearse the performance. Whilst he plays the violin the puppets gyrate gracefully and pirouette. But suddenly they take flight. The man pursues them, and when he comes up to them finds only their clothes. These he puts into his taxi, but as fast as he throws the clothes in at one door, the owners again inhabit them and walk out at the other. Distracted, he returns home and is seized with a grand idea. Opening the window he plays the violin, when the puppets all come back and jump into their basket again. He slams down the lid and thus is again in possession of his own.

MAKING PAPER FROM WOOD

Lux Release, January 26

There are few of us who realize the tremendous powers and organizations at work to produce even the commonest materials which go to render our modern lives so easy. Our newspapers, for instance, which we so casually peruse and as lightly cast aside, mean little to us beyond the penny's worth of news they roughly represent. But in this remarkable film we are initiated into the strange and intricate processes which have to be undergone before even the mere paper of our daily news sheets is ready for our use. It is impossible to describe in detail the many and varied stages of manufacture which are here all faithfully depicted; it is sufficient to say that all who have seen this film will find it a subject of the most absorbing interest. On the same reel, "Oh You Kid"—comedy subject.

HEAVEN'S MESSENGER

Gaumont American Release, Jan 3

An idyllic picture drama, delicately poised on the summit of heart interest, couched amongst rural picturesqueness of an old-fashioned stream-propelled mill. The miller's daughter, quite against his approval, expresses her determination to marry the swain of her choice. The mother's leniency and the daughter's entreaties all prove vain, and the daughter is driven from the parental roof. With her scanty pack on her back, she resorts to the house of her lover, Julian, where she finds sympathy and open hospitality. The two marry and live at the husband's home. The wife's mother steals secret visits to the house where her daughter lives so happily, and when a child is born, tries to devise schemes to effect a reconciliation with the inexorable miller. She proposes placing the child in its cradle and floating it down the stream to the mill. Like the Moses of the Bible, the infant is set afloat and drifts to the dam which supplies the even flow of water that runs the mill. The stern father discovers the child, brings it to his home, all touched with sympathy. The art of the mother reveals the identity of the child, with all grand motherly tact, and the heart of the man is touched. He mitigates, and forgives his daughter with the willingness that assures her the happy relations that she so sorely sought.

THE WATERMAN'S BRIDE

Gaumont American Release, Feb. 10

A touching little canal picture depicting the joy followed by despair of desolate loneliness on the part of a waterman. While plodding his weary road in harness, drawing the heavy canal boat along the waterway, the waterman meets his love. They marry and enjoy the ceremonies that a wedding on a boat roof can only make possible.

The pair feast 'neath the starry sky until the bride persuades her happy husband on the night of their wedding day for a walk on the moonlit shore. Midst the happiness of their embraces and kisses she suddenly takes ill and dies. The bereaved husband has her clad in her wedding gown as a shroud, and in answer to duty wearly plods his lonesome way, dragging the cumbersome boat down the canal. On the same reel, "The Red Mountains of The Esterel," a reel showing 282 of the choicest scenes of the stern and rock-bound coast of The'oulee, France, the balsam-clad, white-cap-sprayed Bay of Agay, and the rocky, desolate projection of Dramont Point.

SANE ASYLUM

Rex Release, January 28

For youth is youth, and age is age, and never the twain shall meet. Never, until woman, with her eternal suggestion of Springtime, throws back the curtains of time and disclosed to dim eyes, bright again, lost youth and its gaiety and hopes, buried in the vista of the years. Woman is the one competent antagonist of Father Time; his one invincible subject; the one fractious child who will not perform his bidding or obey his mandates. And Time is just the least bit afraid of her. When woman enters the scene on the stage of life, the audience of humans, in whose set she happens, prepares for the climax of the play.

Doctor Duncan, preparing to go abroad, offers his house to his nephew Phil, lately graduated as a medico, and caring more about boon companions, Milady Nicotine and the society of the fair, than scientific research, with the proviso that if Phil applies himself to his work and acquires good habits and patients, he can retain the house as his home and office. Phil accepts, takes possession of the house, and sets about with pains to prepare to cure them. But the patients don't come, and his patience is exhausted.

Just when life is beginning to pall with its weary monotony, he meets Dolly Dimples, by profession an actorine and by the nature of things a peach, and the world becomes not so worse again. She's a vision; he isn't exactly a sight—so, well, it doesn't require a prophet to foresee what's going to happen.

A few days later Dolly's company is stranded, and it comes to that stage when despair is just about to take the center of it, when Dolly thinks of her new friend. She sends a little message clicking over the wires, with a human heart-throb that the mundane wires could not transcribe, and an invitation comes back for the whole company to make his house their headquarters.

They arrive. Jubilee is the word.

They have a house-warming that's a little more than warm, when uncle suddenly decides to return home and sends a wire that he is on the way.

Re-enter despair, also gloom, and a respectable amount of misery. It looks like a domestic change, when a happy thought occurs to Phil. He will make patients of them—on the moment they all contract divers and sundry ills.

The uncle enters the home to find it a sanatorium, and is astonished and delighted at his enterprising nephew's rapid progress in his profession. That night the uncle sleeps on an improvised bed, while the happy sufferers are extended every comfort.

The little soubrette of the company is not so sick, however, that she cannot captivate the old doctor, and when he announces his engagement to the bewitching invalid, what other precedent does Phil need?

Dolly thinks that outside of the fact that he is a doctor, his uncle is only human.

A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE

Majestic Release, January 26

A year after the death of her husband, Elizabeth Morton is called upon by Herbert Harman, the executor of her late husband's "Betty," sixteen years old, to Rouen, France, as it was the expressed desire of her husband in his will that his daughter should be educated in the convent of the "Sacred Heart."

The parting between mother and daughter is a painful one, but Mrs. Morton's grief is soothed by Harman's assurance that it will be better for the girl to go abroad, not only to fulfill her father's wishes, but also because the change will go far towards softening the girl's poignant grief over her father's loss.

To Harman, who is an old friend of the family, Betty is a mere child, and once she has left the country he seldom thinks of her, beyond sending a few childish presents from time to time. He is necessarily thrown in contact with Mrs. Morton, acting in his capacity as executor of her husband's estate, and the widow—left alone in the world—unconsciously clings to him for support and comfort, and after Betty has been a year abroad, moved more by passion for the widow's loneliness than love, actuated more by the desire to protect (which is ever present in strong men), he proposes to Mrs. Morton. She—in turn—respects and admires Harman to such a degree that the prospect of looking forward to having him always with her appeals strongly to her gentle, affectionate nature. She requests him to wait a year until Betty returns from school, and if their feelings are then the same she will consent to marry him.

In the meantime, Betty has blossomed into a beautiful bud of womanhood among the cold, gray walls of the convent in Rouen, and the three years prescribed by her father's will having passed she returns to her home and mother.

Her mother has prepard a surprise for her in the shape of her first long dress. It is an evening gown, and Betty goes into girlish raptures over its beauty. Even while the girl is shyly admiring her own reflection in the hall mirror, her mother is telling Harman of the girl's arrival from France, and upon his reminder of her year-old promise she allows him to place the engagement ring upon her finger, and tells him that for the first time since her husband's death she will put on a light dress, and discard her mourning.

While making the change in her attire, she sends Betty to entertain Harman, but somehow feels that she cannot yet tell her daughter of her engagement. Perhaps it is the look of the girl's father in her eyes that prevents her.

Betty bursts upon Harman a vision of beautiful young girlhood, and the lawyer is astonished. He is almost unable to realize that this is the child that he sent away to France but three years before. Betty finds him the most charming of men, and talks to him, plays for him, sings for him, and in every way tries to captivate this tall, rather mature man, who seems so fascinatingly masculine to her girlish mind.

As the days go on, Harman realizes only too clearly that on the very day he engaged himself to the mother he lost his heart to the daughter. The girl is never told of the engagement, and innocently enough reveals to her mother the growing affection she feels for the goodlooking lawyer. Her mother is astonished, but something always keeps her from telling the girl the truth, and instead, with eyes quickened by childish beauty, watches and weighs Harman's attitude toward the girl, and realizes but too soon the truth. The moment of decision comes to her, when her daughter kneels beside her and tells her mother that she not only admires Harman, but feels that she has grown to love him. The mother knows well Harman's fineness of character, and that he will fulfill to the letter his engagement promise.

The mother looks a sad and lonely future grimly in the face, and buoyed up by her mother love sacrifices her own desire, and frees Harman from their engagement. He understands that she has surmised the true state of affairs, and even then would not speak the love that is in his heart for the girl, but that her mother bids him to do so.

She heroically places her daughter's hand in his, and leaves them building their "air castles" together, and then wearily pauses in front of her mirror—the very mirror before which her daughter a few moments before has coquetted so daintily, and reads there the truth that the love of man is no longer for her, but that she must cherish deep in her heart only her mother-love.

BILLY'S SURRENDER

Power's Release, Tuesday, Jan. 30

This film was scheduled for an earlier date, but the Powers Special Split Reel has crowded it out so that the release date was postponed.

The story is a gripping tale of the regeneration of men who the police say have no hearts; but this is one time where the patience and earnestness of a girl won out and the best the game could give her in return was a grand collection of pistols, bludgeons, knives, blackjacks and other such persuaders.

THE EXPLORER

Powers Release, Saturday, February 3

Little old Cupid is the champion globe-trotter of the world. Although his subjects may travel thousands of miles away from one another, he is King of every domain and the universe is his chariot.

One of those little incidents which happen in everyday life makes two people believe that they are lost to one another and the girl gives the young explorer up for lost, but he attains fame, and at an embassy ball he comes face to face with her. The explanation makes the path clear to both, but he is too late to claim his love from the Grim Reaper, for while the music is playing and the dancers swaying, he looks into her eyes for the last time.

Or THE CHILD OF FATE

ADAPTED FROM THOMAS' FAMOUS OPERA
RELEASED FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2nd

The photo-opera sensation. A revelation in exquisite scenic values. An all-star cast. A wonderful production staged regardless of expense. Shows a real house on fire.

These superlative adjectives are used advisedly. We are not "booming through our hats." Audiences will be more enthusiastic than we are after they have seen this feature production exhibited.

We will supply the Exhibitors, through their Exchanges, with special music, one-sheets and three-sheets. We will send direct, on application, special lobby-displays and handbills.

The Fixer Fixed

THE COMEDY RELEASE OF WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31st

Any man who is mean enough to try to "double-cross" anybody, always gets the dirty end of it. The "Fixer" in this comedy tries to fix things for himself, with his cousin's money. He gets "in dutch," and the pretty damsel marries a real man, and the fixer is fixed good and proper. A picture in which Billy Quirk is seen to advantage. On the same reel is shown

The Wonderful Oswego Falls

A thrilling scenic picture well worth featuring. The pictures reveal vistas of unimaginable scenic beauty.

RELEASED SUNDAY, JANUARY 28th

A half-breed Indian sacrifices his life for a white girl who has been kind to him. He is frozen to death in the snowy mountains, while his team of dogs and sled carry the one he idealized to safety.

The story has all the qualities of one of those novels which keep you up to the small hours of the night. The natural beauty of the scenery amidst which this story has been staged cannot be too strongly adjectived.

We are proud of the programme beginning SUNDAY, JAN. 28th.

(VERY FUNNY)

This Fowler release is a very sensational feature and shows something that has never been attempted before in the history of filmdom. It's distinctly a startling novelty when you can see the country from the same angle as an aviator can, and all for the price of five or ten cents. It's a luxury to see such marvels at the price of a nickel, but stop and think of the cost to us—aye, the enormous cost to successfully carry out such an unusual venture.

THE CENSORING OF MOVING PICTURES

WE have before us the complete reports of the Chicago Bureau of Moving Pictures under the Department of Police. The annual report states the total number of moving picture films approved for the year 1911 was 3,255, giving an average length of 800 feet each, making a grand total of 2,604,000 feet of film approved. The total number of the rejected films during the year was 84, with a total length of 67,200 feet that were not satisfactory according to the standard of the Bureau to be exhibited in Chicago. The total number of feet eliminated from films which were afterward approved was 3,150, giving a grand total of 70,350 feet of film rejected.

This board also approves slides to be exhibited in the moving picture theater and they approved 286, rejecting 25. The report states that postal cards were also censored, but as we do not touch this subject we can say that by the total number of arrests made for violation of the moving picture ordinance were six out of a total of 400 five- and ten-cent theaters which exhibit moving pictures. All these theaters are frequently visited by the officers with a view of preventing the exhibition of films that the board has condemned.

The report states that 16,211 feet of film were condemned as undesirable over the total of 1910. Why is this, Mr. Manufacturer? We were under the impression that a great uplift movement was going on. Is this accounted for by the fact that more manufacturers are in existence in 1911 than 1910? Perhaps this may be so, but as we have not the official figures for 1910 we are not able to say. One clause of the report merits special attention. It reads as follows: It is difficult to prevent the exhibition of bad films to the public with an ordinance providing a penalty for the manufacturers, their agents or traders. The confiscation of bad films would be very effective where the manufacturer is shown the jurisdiction of a city ordinance when a fine is imposed. However, in accordance with your orders I have requested that you amend to the moving picture audiences by preparing and introducing in the city a Council imposing a penalty on producers of moving picture films, their agents, or traders, for circulating films or any portion thereof which have been rejected by this board and also providing that a fee of 50 cents be charged for each permit issued by this board for the exhibition of moving picture films, which will net the city approximately $15,000. The reports for the term ending January 6 give a total of films inspected 72, number of permits issued 790, and films rejected 6, giving a full total of feet rejected as 6,218. The January 13 report shows the total number of films inspected 84, number of permits issued 981, films rejected 4. The full total of feet of film rejected is 4,525 and the report shows that 126 theaters were visited, commended, or reproved as they deserved.

These lists are on exhibit in our office for the use of manufacturers who are interested in the question. We feel it is hardly proper either to the licensed manufacturers or the members of the sales company to publish these reports in full, much as we would like to do so, but the above figures will give our readers some idea of the actual work and power of the Chicago board. We would join issue with some of the censoring adopted by this board, for instance, from the film "Julius Caesar," there were eliminated the scene of the killing of Caesar; from "Brutus" the stabbing of Brutus was taken out. Now, as these are historical plays and are exhibited or characterized in every theater in the land and thousands of school children are instructed in these teachings and also seeing the exhibition of these plays, we cannot for the life of us understand why it is immoral in a moving picture film, and not in a legally organized theater for the legitimate drama. We would wish for the New York Board of Censorship the same power that the Chicago board has, but until it is under the supervision of the City Council with power to act, and a proper ordinance is passed, we fear that very little improvement will be made in some of the films now on the market and preparing to be placed on the market.

Many cities in the land are taking example from Chicago and if the police sergeants are selected with as much care in other centers as they are in Chicago we feel sure that great good will result to the moving picture industry at large. It must not be understood that we do not value the work of the National Board of Censors, but some of the pictures we have seen lately running in some of the theaters—we very much question the wisdom of their passing, but owing to the great work they have done with small material at their end, we think they have accomplished wonderfully good results. We feel, to some extent, if we could get the complete report of the New York board and compare it with Chicago, we would find great improvement in the latter city. From an exhibitor's standpoint it would be a splendid thing to publish these reports in full in the News, but we question very much if it would aid the manufacturers by their publicity.

THE FIRE RISK

THE article which appeared in our issue of January 6 has caused so much comment that we feel we have done the trade good service by bringing this matter to their attention. The publication of that article has brought us quite a number of requests for us to go to some of the prominent theaters in the city and give a lecture on the fire risks of cinematography, assuring the people of their safety, and also explaining our idea as mentioned in our article of the 6th. We are perfectly willing to help in this campaign as far as our limited capabilities permit, and are prepared to give a few minutes' talk at several selected theaters in the city. At the same time we feel sure that the various managers of these theaters could just as easily explain to their patrons the conditions as we could, and would much prefer that they do so; however, the principal reason for our reverting back to this subject is the great fire that occurred in the General Film Company's office at Philadelphia. We are sorry, more than sorry, for the General Film Company in these calamities, one in New York, one in Philadelphia, and three or four smaller ones that we have made note of make us wonder when conditions will alter. The Independents are just as bad in their work after witnessing the fire at the Western Film Company's office, and two or three minor fires that have occurred in some of the manufactories. This, in our opinion, merits the getting together of all sections of the industry to discuss the advisability of a non-inflammable film and put out all the energies possible to secure this.

We have—all of us—a right to demand an honest living, and we believe that in the cinematograph industry everyone employed is striving to gain this livelihood, and in matters of the safety in the use of celluloid that all should strive their utmost to make this an accomplished fact. We are now investigating one of the finest celluloid films that has been our province to examine, and full particulars will be given in an early issue. Our tendencies, our principles have naturally been for the freedom of the cinematograph industry, and this information we have no desire to hand to any one party, that they may control either the output or the income of this. We want to be open for every manufacturer to be able to secure the complete use without the imposition of excessive royalties on patents. If, as is the condition, which we learned on a recent visit to Philadelphia, the authorities there are going to take out every theater exhibiting moving pictures from the business district, a great calamity will result, not only to the Nickelodeon proprietors, but also to the business section at large. It is well known that the moving picture show patrons have brought most of their shopping business into the business sections, where moving picture theaters have held sway, and we know that if a conference of every manufacturer could be held methods, principles, and conditions could be devised and saner advice tendered to what is now likely to be an imposition of still harsher measures and stronger embargoes placed on the moving picture. The machine manufacturers are endeavoring to eliminate the fire risk, and machines are now made which completely cover anything of a fire risk, making it impossible for a film to burn up in the machine. The trouble is not so much now in the projecting machines or in the theaters, but in the storage and in the offices. and if, as is stated, it is the inflammable cement that causes this trouble why not get a non-inflammable one which is not made with fire properties?

Surely in this great day of chemical advancement experts can be found who will help solve this difficulty, and if the manufacturers will put themselves in touch with us, we, with the permission of the inventor, will place them in complete accord with the manufacturer of non-inflammable cement and the non-inflammable base for the picture.

THE STAG PARTY

IT is with exceeding great reluctance and regret that we touch upon the subject of the recent raid on the Harlem Casino in New York City, where films unfit for exhibition were seized with a large number of lantern slides of like nature. We are more than surprised to find that manufacturers and those who possess these immoral films should allow them to be exhibited, even at a gathering of men who have no sense of self-respect left in witnessing such exhibitions. We learn that prominent politicians, prominent Harlemites of extremely respectable character were present among the thousands of men at the Casino. We feel it is incumbent upon us to ask those who possess these pictures, for the sake of the good of the industry, to immediately destroy them and purge the industry of its festering sores.

Another point we would like to touch upon and to ask a question: How is it that some of these films pass through the custom house? Who is responsible for this? Several times in conversation with custom authorities we have suggested, for the benefit of the custom office itself, that a machine for projecting pictures should be obtained and the services of an operator secured, and that the custom officials should examine every film from its outside to the center, and we feel sure that a great deal of unpleasantness would speedily disappear. The outer portion of the film has been perhaps a beautiful subject, and that portion has been unwound for examination, but the inner portion has never been touched. Can we wonder that it is necessary for censorship boards to arise and look over films before they are exhibited to the public? Is it any wonder when such blarney press reports go out broadcast all over the world that men who have the morals of the public in charge should protest against the moving picture, not having seen the latest, but jumping to the conclusion that all are tarred with the same brush and consequently they condemn all? The greatest censure should be passed upon the man who provided this club with the films and slides and he ought to be put in a place where it is impossible for him ever to allow such an exhibition again. There ought to be some means whereby every film manufacturer and exchange in the country should be examined for these pictures, private drawers, safes, and inner receptacles of a secret nature should be broken up until the true culprit is found, who for the sake of a few miserable dollars wrecks or injures a great and growing industry.

R. GUTHRIE KELLY KILLED

As we go to press we have received word that Mr. R. Guthrie Kelly, the Scenario Editor of the Nestor Film Co. at their studio, Hollywood, California, was killed in an auto accident last Wednesday during the heavy fog in Los Angeles, near the County Club House, on the road to Santa Monica.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—It is rumored that a new theater will be erected at Fifth and Liberty streets.

Vicksburg, Miss.—Extensive improvements will be made to the Bijou Dream Theater.

Missoula, Mont.—The Montana Amusement Company of Butte will erect a new moving picture theater on Park street at a cost of $60,000.

WHOLE FLEET OF BATTLESHIPS USED IN PICTURE

In the search for novel effects in pictures that is ever being conducted by the film producers, Thanhouser Company came upon a fleet of warships the other week and pressed them into instant service. The completed picture has been called "The Signal Code," and is announced for release on Friday, February 9. As the title denotes, it deals with that most carefully guarded book in the world, the naval signal code. So important and so vital is the little volume that it is kept weighted with lead, to the end that should capture impend, it may be dropped overboard and quickly sunk. And it is issued only to high officers in the navy. Still, one of these very code books is stolen by a pretty girl, spy for a foreign power, and it is of this startling theft that the picture treats.

DELHI DURBAR TO BE SHOWN IN KINEMACOLOR SOON

The natural color motion pictures of the Coronation of King George and Queen Mary of England last summer at Westminster Abbey have only four weeks more to run at the Kinemacolor Theater on Fortieth street, where they have been exhibited over four hundred times. They will then be superseded by the reproduction in motion and color of the Delhi Durbar, on which the eyes of the whole world have been centered during the last two months.

The Durbar just finished was the most spectacular series of events in recent years,. and of the greatest political significance. Several hundred sovereign native princes paid honor to their supreme ruler from over the seas. The actual ceremony of assumption of his title by the King-Emperor was held in a vast arena with a hundred thousand observers, while stretched around on the plains for many miles was a city of tents accommodating a million visitors to Delhi, now just made the capital of all India. The court held there by George V. was the most gorgeous within the memory of living men, the aggregation of potentates and military far exceeding in richness of color and brilliancy of assemblage even the Coronation in England.

King George, who is personally interested in the process, invited Charles Urban, its inventor, to accompany the royal party on the yacht "Medina" when they embarked from Portsmouth on November 11. Views were taken on shipboard of the various sports indulged in by the royal suite, and the visit of their Majesties to the Rock of Gibraltar was also recorded in the pictures. The King exchanged state visits with the Khedive of Egypt at Port Said, and at Eden was greeted by a most enthusiastic reception. It was here that the first enchanting Indian scenery enters the film narrative, and continues through the rest of the subjects, portrayed with fascination hard to describe. At Bombay there were more ceremonies and presentations, and an exposition arranged for them at the most interesting art objects and jewels of the city. The famous Elephanta Caves, with their exquisite stalacite formations, were explored and something else of interest consumed every moment of time until the date of the state entry into Delhi with hundreds of elephants and camels in procession, after which the Durbar proper took place and the King-Emperor placed on his own head the magnificent crown made especially for the occasion.

After his many regal duties had received due attention, the King-Emperor went to Nepal for tiger and lion hunting, being a guest at several courts of the leading native princes, there seeing marvelous entertainments which had been lavishly prepared for his coming long in advance. A Kinemacolor operator also accompanied the Queen-Empress in her journeys through Agra, Bundi and the Katah, where Christmas was spent and the royal party reunited. To Calcutta they went to another reception, nearly as gorgeous as the one in Delhi, after which they again embarked to proceed homeward. Every event of the trip has been recorded in Kinemacolor, and will very soon be presented in town.

INITIATIVE OF EDUCATIONAL FILMS TO ACCOMPANY TEXT BOOKS MADE AT THE EDEN MUSEE

By Margaret I. MacDonald

ONE of the most significant steps in the history of education in New York City was taken on Friday night, January 18th, when Rich. G. Hollaman, president of the Eden Musee, exhibited for the benefit of the Board of Education of New York City, and other interested ones, a number of films on the following subjects and suitable as text books aids: Natural history, zoölogy, chemistry, geography, botany and science.

Mr. Hollaman opened the exhibition, which was attended by the following representatives of the Board of Education and clergy: School Commissioner Haupt; Edward W. Stitt,

RICH. G. HOLLAMAN

District Superintendent of Schools; Commissioner General Wingate; Commissioner Stern; School Principal William J. Morrison; Commissioner F. H. McGowan; former Commissioners, Hon. George Livingston and Dr. W. J. Stewart; J. Aspinwall Hodge and W. H. Story, of the People's Institute; Rev. N. B. Thompson; Mr. James Alexander; Bartholomew W. Greene; Supreme Court Judge Kelby, and other public-minded citizens interested in this uplifting movement, with the following remarks:

"There is no subject of greater interest before the public all over the country to-day than the wonderful possibilities of the moving picture in the education and uplifting of the people.

"The gigantic development of this fascinating art during the past two years has been most remarkable. No longer is it confined to the entertainment of the masses. Scientists, educators, governments, the clergy, all are interested and adapting the cinematograph to aid them in developing their different lines of thought.

"The moving picture was first shown to the public as an amusement in the Eden Musee fifteen years ago. To-day there are 180,000 men and women employed in the industry, and several million dollars earning dividends through the results obtained by the aid of this wonderful invention.

"Educators throughout the country are now advocating moving pictures being used in the public schools. I have been collecting data for the past six months and am in correspondence with hundreds of school principals, college officials, mayors of cities, ministers of the Gospel, government officials and uplifters generally, all looking for light as to the proper material for educational purposes. Some States and city governments have already made appropriations for this purpose, and others will follow.

"Some weeks ago certain public-spirited citizens, at their own expense, gave exhibitions in the Brooklyn schools. The success was instantaneous. Children and their parents crowded to the auditorium and hundreds were turned away nightly. This highly successful attempt to uplift the people was brought to a sudden stop by the authorities claiming the machines projecting the pictures were dangerous. If this is the true objection, it no longer holds good, as the machine we are using to-night is absolutely fireproof."

This exhibition of films of educational subjects was a marvel to many who attended the entertainment. Preceding the exhibition of the educational films several hundred feet of purely recreative film was shown, and also a rest was given the brain and eye of the auditor midway through the exhibition by the insertion of several hundred feet more of interesting recreative subjects.

The first of the natural history series shown was the evolution of the moth and the butterfly, showing several different species in their different stages of evolution. The different kind of grubs and their manner of feeding, and the kind of food upon which they feed previous to the emerging of the beautiful butterfly from the homely grub state.

Following this came "A Day in the Life of a Snow Drop," a beautiful study in botany, showing the opening of the bud in the morning and its closing in the evening. Many interesting studies were given in this series: "The Opening of a Chestnut Burr," "The Ripening of a Willow Pod," "The Opening of the Nasturtium Bud." The growth and development of different blossoms were shown and explained in a like manner.

The series in chemistry was intensely interesting and instructive. The actual working out of the effect of hydrochloric acid on washing soda, the effect of hydrochloric acid on magnesium, the action of mercury on aluminum, the electrolosis of water, etc.

Science was represented by an X-ray exhibition entitled "From Egg to Chick." This was one of the most interesting exhibitions ever shown to the public, in that the possibility of being able to view the development of animal life from its embryo state to its period of advent into the world is of recent discovery. The possibility of such a thing was never even dreamed of until within very recent years.

The life and habits of different birds, and the daily working of the honey bee were specially pleasing.

Zoölogy was largely represented by elephants working in the timber yards of India, seals in their daily life, chimpanzees at play. Several animal scenes were shown which were taken in Carl Hagenbeck's Wild Animal Park in Hamburg.

The geographical portion of the entertainment was represented by scenes of life in Europe, Asia and Africa.

Mr. Hollaman is to be congratulated upon his enterprise, which is the most important step which has yet been taken with regard to impressing upon the minds of New York educators the importance of installing the moving picture in the schools as an aid to the text book. The result of early teaching by means of the eye of all subjects possible of demonstration through moving pictures will be something more wonderful than can even be imagined by we who have received the elements of our early education by means of poring over the pages of the text book. And to the year of 1912 will doubtless belong the distinction of bringing about the most important innovation in methods of education ever known to man. And one of the most marked advancements in the history of the human race is destined to be laid at the door of the moving picture.

At the close of the entertainment a committee consisting of Commissioners Haput, Wingate, Stitt and members Hodge and Story of the People's Institute were invited on the stage and thoroughly examined the Simplex projector and pronounced it the ideal machine for educational purposes.

By Leonard Donaldson

THE PICTURE PLAYWRIGHT

A DEVELOPMENT of modern journalism which has sprung into life with the advent of the picture play, and one which offers unique facilities to the literary aspirant, is scenario writing. In the last few issues of the News we have read much upon this subject from the clever pen of Mr. William Lord Wright. He has shown us the potentialities and the charms of this new art. He has explained the minor workings of picture play authorship; he has shown us what to do, and what to look out for if we are desirous of becoming a successful picture playwright.

Chancing the risk of being dubbed a plagiarist, I venture to set forth—only, of course, within the limits of my knowledge of this subject, one or two points of interest which may be accepted as a welcome supplement to the writings of my able fellow contributor.

Placing myself in the ranks of the picture playwright, or perhaps I should have said of the aspiring picture playwright, I admit that my attention has been drawn to this class of work essentially by its simplicity; of course, there I should explain that I know nought of the principles of the motion picture art. These wordless dramas—what pleasure must they afford their originators! There is no need to spend a lot of my time deciding upon the best opening paragraph, or to pass sleepless nights wondering whether the remark made by Miss Vere de Vere in the sixth chapter was in accord with my sketch of her character given in the introduction. So much, I think, can be left to the discretion of a circumspect "art director," or a discriminating actor. Who, then, would not be a picture playwright?

No, dear aspirant. Your road appears to be a smooth one, but there are many pitfalls on the way; many turnings that may, and certainly will, if you do not pick your route, lead you to the terminus of Disappointment!

That there is a need for good suitable plots, we cannot (after studying the work of Mr. William Lord Wright) dispute. There are thousands of stories to be told—typical stories of American life, in its little known phases, that would be of intense interest to we Britishers. It is not a succession of scenes that is wanted, but a plot that will give life and interest to a beautiful, and perhaps historical, setting. Historical stories are undoubtedly best when written round some episode with only two or three actors. The cinematograph is developing two new arts. One for the actors, who have to put the essentials of a three hours' dialogue into, perhaps, eighteen minutes of action, and one for the scenario writers, who must discover new rules and principles for developing the plot and revealing character without the aid of words. A rule of the greatest import to the picture-wright is that he should bear in mind the great interest there is in suspense. Bear in mind also that the story will have far greater force if you don't reveal the "denouement" halfway through the film.

The aspirant should further understand the working of the projector. One may wonder whether the Shakespeare of the film world is to be found serving his probation to the craft in some New York theater!

Stirring scenes lose their power unless they tell a story; and unless there is a strong thread connecting them. The human interest must predominate, and the story must move.

If the scenario-writer has more limitations and restrictions than the "legitimate" (I like not the term) playwright, he finds consolation in the fact that, while perhaps he is compelled to condense his action, he has also a much wider scope in the setting of his story. The theatrical stage manager has to arrange his stage very carefully; he is cramped for room and perhaps limited to a few scenes, and many things that he would like to show can, for technical reasons, never be produced upon any stage.

However, with regard to the silent stage I might aptly quote the words of the immortal playwright of Avon: "All the world's a stage and men and women simply players."

HANGING THEMSELVES

By a Backwoods Observer

The statement has been made that in a single week in the present theatrical season, over seventy traveling companies were forced to disband on account of poor business. Nearly all the managers lay the blame on the moving picture theaters, but there is another reason which had much to do with this state of affairs. Too many companies started on the road with nothing but the reputation of the original company and fine lithos to recommend them; so-called stars were raised almost in a night from "supe" parts, and managers who could see no farther than the ends of their noses disregarded a fundamental law of business—that full value must be given for the money received—and forced the public to pay exorbitant prices for inferior productions.

In view of all this there should be no surprise felt at the preference shown by the average person for the moving picture as a form of entertainment. The moving picture theaters furnish the public with an evening's entertainment at a price which enables a man to take his entire family with him without spending any more than he would ordinarily pay for his own admission to a regular theater.

The film manufacturer should beware of over-production, the cause which is mainly responsible for the present slump in theatricals. There is need for this warning, as any close observer will testify.

In the place in which I live there are two picture theaters. Both use licensed service of four reels to a change, three changes per week, and take their service from the same exchange, thus avoiding repeaters. Since the licensed manufacturers have been issuing thirty-six reels per week there has been a marked falling off in the general quality of the pictures shown in these two houses. This tendency has not been confined to any one company, but has been noticed in films made by all the manufacturers. Occasionally a film is shown which might properly be called a masterpiece, but their effect is greatly minimized by the large number of senseless, poorly constructed and inaccurate films shown. To the observer it looks as though attention was lavished upon a few productions, while others were rushed through in order to fill up the weekly program.

I have even seen film after film which was marred by inconsistencies in plot, by acting which could be done better by many an amateur, and by a lack of careful attention to details which were immediately noted by observant ones in the audience.

In one film which I saw recently a couple eloped on a hand-car. They were chased by the girl's father, a railroad engineer, in a locomotive, and yet, with no train behind him to impede his progress, he was unable to catch up with the elopers. In fact, according to the film, they gained on him. To further add to the inconsistency, the engine was blocked by a small landslide, and the angry father pursued the elopers on foot, getting closer to them by that method than when in the engine. Is there any wonder that the majority of the audience laughed, and that a railroad man sitting next to me gave a snort of disgust and felt the theater?

In another film by a different company, an officer of the Confederate Army assists in the defense of a Southern home against a band of guerillas. A detachment of Union soldiers appears on the scene and rescues them. The Confederate officer was arrested and found to have information about the Union forces concealed about him. In spite of the fact that he was wearing the uniform of his own army, the film produced had him tried by a court-martial, and sentenced to be executed as a spy. No officer or private, bearing dispatches of any kind, can be executed as a spy, if, when captured, he is wearing the uniform of his own army, although of course he can be arrested and held as a prisoner of war.

In a film produced by a company which formerly had a reputation for absolutely accurate portrayals, we are told by a sub-title that the hero has a broken arm, yet that did not prevent him from using it to handle his revolver in a subsequent scene. Judging from the expression on the actor's face, it did not hurt him half as much to handle a heavy revolver with a broken arm as it did to have the heroine bathe and bind up the wound a few minutes later. In this film, too, the story was far from being what it should be, in fact, it would be almost impossible to find any plot, even if a microscope was used.

In just one evening's performance of four reels, which I saw recently, two of the reels were very poor, the third was fair, and the fourth was a rattling good comedy. In the first film shown, a man coming direct from a jail resolves to enter the army, in spite of the rules absolutely prohibiting the recruiting of criminals. Also, when he desired to enlist, he entered a doorway, at one side of which was a large poster bearing the words "Men Wanted for the U. S. Navy and Marine Corps," yet he came out a full-fledged recruit in army uniform.

The next film was an Indian story, and one of the worst kind. A party of settlers is shown in one scene, firing from the house, yet in the next scene, the exterior of the stockade, the smoke from the rifles is plainly shown as coming through holes cut in the stockade. Then the Indians fire the house, and one of the settlers goes for help. After a long, perilous journey to his destination, and an equal time on the return trip, he finds the house in exactly the same condition as when he left, although the smoke has been pouring out of the house all the time. A first-class Indian or Western picture, if carefully prepared, correct in details, and above all, with a logical and consistent story, is relished by the major portion of the average audience, but how many of them are released now?

In another film, a scene is supposed to represent a part of an island peopled only by savages, yet the place where the savages made their attack was plainly no stranger to the pruning knife of a landscape gardner, and worst of all, a neat and very modern walk, apparently of cement, stood forth prominently in the background. The list of incidents such as these which could be given would more than fill the pages of several issues of this paper.

Of course, a great many people in the average audience are not critical, but there are many who are, and usually the people who criticise are the very ones who can hurt the patronage the most. Moving pictures are attracting more people who are accustomed to reason out the things that they see, and to such the picture which is hastily produced and inaccurate in details is not an inducement to call again.

A business man whom I know, formerly attended a picture show every night. Now he goes once, and occasionally twice, a week. When asked why he did not go oftener, his reply was: "I don't feel like sitting through three reels of poor pictures just to see one good one."

Take heed, Mr. Manufacturer, and profit by the mistakes of the theatrical manager. The public is rapidly learning to discriminate between the good and the bad in pictures, and if you do not see the writing on the wall, and produce not more pictures but better pictures, you will find the old saying, "Give a man enough rope, and he will hang himself," is just as true to-day as it was in the past. You have produced good pictures, all of you. You are producing good pictures occasionally, now. Why not make them all a little bit better?

HALLBERG DIRECT CURRENT ECONOMIZERS IN DEMAND

The past few weeks have shown a greatly increased sale of Hallberg Economizers for all circuits, and Direct Current Economizers are being turned out to the capacity of the factory. In all sections of the country where motion picture machines are being used on 110, 220-volt and 500-volt power circuits, the tremendous saving of 50, 70 and 90, respectively, on electric bills affected by the Hallberg D. C. Economizer, makes this device an adjunct of first importance in such cases.

THE MORE REFINED ELEMENT ENTERING VAUDEVILLE

By Margaret I. MacDonald

MY friends, will you forgive me if I forget the film just for once and wander off among the mazes of the musical world, where my energies were for several years directed? Is it wrong or unseemly that once in a while we wish to relax, to leave for a brief moment the things that of necessity in the struggle for daily bread claim more than their share of time and energy and thought.

There is in the dispensing of the Divine Giver once in a while a grain of sweet with the bitter. When we have labored amid the difficulties and disappointments of each successive day with that automatic smile that never wears off, leaving shadows where the weary muscles have sought to keep intact the masque of good nature grinning back at life's burdens; when we are struggling to lift the load that momentarily grows heavier with our exhausting strength and the last roseate tint wears off the edges of the now-and-then little glint of sunshine, is there anything that can more fully arouse the last lingering spark of divinity in one's makeup than the sound of a sweet, fresh human voice in song?

When, but a short time ago, it was my privilege to meet with Mrs. Woods, better known in the musical world as Miss Maud Fitz-Stubbs, and her two charming daughters, there came just such a moment to me. These young ladies have traveled all over Australia, New Zealand, the British Isles and Europe in concert, rendering in costume a Maori song and dance as well as harmonizing many beautiful ballads.

The Misses Doris and Aileen Woods, are, as will be seen from the accompanying cut, of almost identical similarity as regards feature, form and expression. The likeness is remarkable. They sing as one. Their harmonizing is natural and unstudied, and is one of the features of their singing. Their voices are pure and sweet, and their conception and interpretation of the songs they sing is most intelligent and artistic.

Miss Maud Fitz-Stubbs, the mother of this unique pair, is a brilliant pianist, and is known as the Australian Strauss. This gifted woman has doubtless impressed, prenatally, on the twins a portion of her own musical genius.

It is understood that these young ladies will, ere long, condescend to appear on the American vaudeville stage. Having had an almost phenomenal success abroad, the American public may look forward to a great deal of pleasure to be derived from the duet singing of these two young Australians. Their work is so refreshingly different from the ranting vulgarism of so many of those posing as musicians, who are entertaining the public from the vaudeville stage to-day. May it be soon that all but the most refined entertainment be offered the public even in vaudeville, which was for years marred by its vulgarism, but which, thank God, is becoming now more of a refined entertainment in the lighter vein.

It is in our moving picture houses that we need an overhauling so far as vaudeville is concerned. Not long ago I was obliged to sit in the front row in a moving picture theater and listen to a young vaudevillian whose every word was reeking with vulgar suggestion.

May the day soon come when we will have only what is most charming and refined in our moving picture theaters, where women may sit without hiding their faces and listen to pretty, refined music, and witness dancing that is beautiful without being vulgar, or comedy that is clean as well as funny. Remember, vaudevillians, the time is at hand when the public will demand fun without filth, even though a few vulgar individuals may still applaud your vulgarisms.

We hope that the advent of the Woods sisters, or "The New Zealand Twins," as they are known on the continent, will be quickly followed by others of a like caliber.

Waycross, Ga.—A moving picture theater owned by Alex. James was destroyed by fire at a loss of $3,500.

Minonk, Ill.—Harry Johnson and Alvin Anderson, proprietor of the Variety Store, have purchased the largest moving picture show in Rockford, Ill.

Charles City, Ia.—The Lyric Theater was destroyed by fire. Loss, $1,500.

Morrison, Ia.—R. J. Maloney, who operates the Lyric Theater here, will open a moving picture theater in Clinton.

NOTES BY THE WAY

By De Facto

THERE ARE OTHERS

Many enter the moving picture game as exhibitors with the idea that it is one of the softest business snaps to be found, but as a rule their experience is comprehended in the remark of a party who opened up a little theater in a Florida town and after a few weeks' operation declared with emphasis: "Well, I sure have worked harder in the past six weeks than I did in the six years I was in the liquor business."

A GOOD WAY TO DO IT

Jacksonville, Fla., authorities have the right idea as to how to handle exhibitors with an itching desire to put on pictures that are harmful to morals and injurious to the general cause of motion picturedom. It was announced by a Trust exhibitor there that he would put on the notorious "Jesse James" pictures that are being peddled about the country. He "billed" the town extensively, spent a lot of money in general advertising, and made a great hurrah about the "wonderful" show that he was going to have, but when the day arrived he just ran the reels once when the police department quietly notified him to cut them out. And so he was out all the time, thought, labor and money expended, lost a day's receipts and got in bad with the city authorities. And it serves him right.

MOVING PICTURES MOVE MEN

Who says that moving pictures are only for children and that they have no heart interest for those of older growth? A recent Reliance release, entitled "A Happy Thanksgiving," was being shown when a patron came out of the theater and remarked to the manager that he hated to come out into the street as his eyes were rather red, wherupon the manager replied: "Oh, you needn't mind that; a couple of real estate men came out crying a little while ago." It was said, of course, in a semi-jocular way, but the incident illustrates more forcibly than a thousand words the depths to which a good picture can move men of the world.

SOCIETY WOMEN AND WESTERN PICTURES

If St. Augustine, Fla., may be taken as a criterion, then it is not true that the demand for Western pictures is on the decline, and this demand comes not from the small boy who is inflamed with the doing of "Death Notch, the Destroyer, or the Redman's Menace"; "Dare-Devil Darrel, or Back From the Grave for Revenge," and such like literature, but from a higher class, for when recently visiting the Jefferson Theater, which beautiful playhouse, with its twelve hundred seating capacity, is now devoted mainly to moving pictures, your correspondent heard a number of ladies, who had come in their automobiles and opera cloaks, inquire earnestly of the manager when he expected to put on some more Western pictures. Let not those tourists and St. Augustine ladies take umbrage at this as in anywise reflecting upon their good taste, but rather let it stand to their credit as indicating that they know and appreciate good Independent Western pictures when they see them.

IF "OVERNIGHT" WERE IN MOVING PICTURES

Well, there would be the biggest kind of a stir, and the self-constituted guardian of public morals would fill the newspapers with letters signed by "Pro Bono Publico," "Save the Home," "Morality," et. als., all setting forth the evils of the pictures. And yet, the play itself has had a run of nearly a year in New York and is now showing to crowded houses in the South without a thought or murmur of protest, even though a lady's "nightie" is held up before the audience and one of the actors runs upon the stage in his pajamas. As a stage play "Overnight" is a fine, bright, clean, delightful comedy, but as a picture play with all the scenes it would surely evoke a storm of protest. Why is this thus?

THE LIMIT

Many, great and various are the vicissitudes of the motion picture exhibitor, but after you have collected, collaborated and published all the troubles, trials and tribulations of all the exhibitors under the sun, whether in the frozen North or the sunny South, in the radiant East or the far West, or among the isles of the sea, nothing will be found to equal or compare with the unique experience of a Dade City, Fla., exhibitor, who surely considered himself "up against it" when he wired his exchange: "Please send me quick another set of posters, as those that you did send me were all eaten up by the goats while I was at the post office."

THE MOTION PICTURE AND THE STAGE

By Robert Grau

THE Independent movement in the film industry seems to have reached its zenith at this time though it cannot be truthfully stated that in view of all the progress in the industry itself and the opportunity offered to the manufacturer and producer, that the output presented for public consumption is in all instances what it should be. Nor is there that affiliation or comradeship existing among the various companies such as obtains in the amusement calling with large bodies of showmen brought together for their own protection and for the betterment of their operative conditions.

The greatest problem that showmen have to cope with is one that the moving picture industry has long since solved —that of creating a public patronage. Therefore, the aim should be to constantly raise the artistic level of the productions on the screen, and to do this in this stage of the progress it is absolutely necessary to strengthen the distinctly theatrical phase of the picture play since "actualities" are not frequent enough to avail in a field so prolific with competition as at present.

This seems to be quite well understood with the Independents, since the newcomers and some of the older manufacturers have located their headquarters in the heart of the theatrical rialto. This is so true that the "Exchange" building at 145 West Forty-fifth street is now referred to by professionals as the "lure of the Camera Man."

The great success attending the efforts of the Thanhouser Company is explained greatly through the manner in which this company has embraced the theatrical phase of the moving picture, undoubtedly due to Mr. Thanhouser's vast experience as a manager of stock companies in the West before his advent into the newer field. However this may be there is not to-day in the entire group of manufacturers on either side, a better or more artistic producing exhibit than that which is shown on the screen with the Thanhouser trademark. Nor can it be said that the discernment in the selection of material (already successful in the stage calling) displayed by this company is of a character difficult of emulation. It is extremely doubtful that Mr. Thanhouser cares for scenarios. Evidently he sees a plethora of material in "fifteen-cent books" and in such royalty plays as are not too costly. It is certain at any rate that the policy adopted in the New Rochelle institution is one wholly constructive.

There are hundreds of plays and playlets, some old, others old enough to be new, that lend themselves peculiarly to the photographic spectacle, and these constitute and represent an asset to the producer of picture plays, an asset, too, of such uncommon worth, that the day may not be far off when these same available vehicles may be the only source of this particular kind that the producer can turn to, for in the last week or two there has been much agitation and considerable discussion in the offices of prominent theatrical managers over the encroachment on their realm of the moving picture, and at least two of the larger firms issued an embargo that will prevent the utilization of this firm's discarded plays for portrayal on the screen.

Moreover, the organ of one of the two largest business institutions in the amusement field has devoted much space recently on the same subject. The substance of these writings has been a vigorous protest against the appearance of prominent players and the production of plays controlled by theatrical managers in moving picture theaters. The writer of these articles is regarded as one of the most authoritative and influential figures identified with theatrical literature, and his viewpoint is that the amusement or theatrical profession are themselves providing the film industry with their most potent plays, players and producers, thus creating a condition which must naturally operate against the larger interests in due course.

This agitation had to come. The wonder is that it was so long coming, nevertheless the present writer does not think that the great movement now on as between the players and the interests in control of the film industry, is one that can be checked, and instead of retrogression the movement will assume proportions not dreamed of perhaps at this time. The theatrical manager has his hands full, solving the problem of where he is to get his audiences from, and already we see the spectacle of three theaters in the heart of the amusement zone reducing their scale of admission prices, and still the public is indifferent, the prices may be reduced still further and yet not avail the men who now seem less inclined to assume risks than at any time in the last twenty-five years.

A prominent vaudeville manager attracted much attention recently by making an announcement to the effect that he intended to erect a number of neighborhood theaters in the greater city and devote them to stock companies, at the same time expressing the opinion that the stock company is destined to replace the picture play in the esteem of the public, even going so far as to state that the end of the motion picture craze is near at hand.

This manager—who by the way was none other than Percy Williams—probably did not himself believe that which he meant to express. Undoubtedly the wish was father to the thought, but Mr. Williams is too shrewd a manager to assume that there is the least suggestion of a decline in the vogue of the silent drama. If Mr. Williams meant to suggest that the moving picture public can be attracted to see plays by stock companies, he is by all manner of means correct in his views, for I have had ample evidence of this in my personal observations. In the city where I happen to have the honor to reside (Mt. Vernon, N. Y.) I have witnessed an evolution of this kind nothing short of amazing. Four years ago an audience could not have been attracted for any kind of an entertainment, then came Proctor's "Bijou Dream," which inside of two months had accumulated a weekly attendance of 20,000, then came two other theaters solely devoted to motion pictures, all playing to capacity. About a year ago two intrepid young men had the temerity to come to Mt. Vernon and tempt fate with a stock company. What do you suppose did happen? Instead of meeting with failure the enterprise was an enormous success despite that the scale of prices ranged from 25 cents to $1.00 and that the theater (The Crescent) had bankrupted every previous lessee for twenty years.

On the day this article is written this same stock company is dedicating a new and beautiful theater expressly erected for them, and costing over $50,000, all made in Mt. Vernon with stock. And the strangest part of the whole revelation is the certainty that the audiences are greatly made up of moving picture patrons who had a desire to see plays by real actors. A desire created through persistent attendance in the theater of science and artifice, but let no man assume that this public is any less interested in the silent drama; on the contrary this is simply evidence of the powers and permanency of the picture play.

MR. HOCHSTETTER RESIGNS FROM ORTHO FILM COMPANY

Mr. Fred W. Hochstetter begs to notify his friends that he has resigned the presidency of the Ortho Film Company and has severed his connections as an employee of the said company.

Mr. Hochstetter has some exceptional business plans for the future which will be of much benefit to film exchanges as well as exhibitors and the trade in general, full particulars of which will be announced in next week's issue.

AN OPERATOR'S WAIL

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 18.

Editor Moving Picture News,
New York.

My Dear Mr. Saunders:—While looking over your valuable paper I have noticed articles by "Canuck, of the Catskills," and they have been very interesting. In this part of the country conditions are different. Our service is fine. But anybody can run a machine—from a man of one hundred years down to a child of six. No license is needed. In our sister city they have a strong union, which helps some, but here we can not get a union.

The whole idea of the managers here is to get an operator (or a man who calls himself one) as cheap as possible, so it is the exchanges who are to be pitied.

Now, "Canuck, in the Catskills," let's hear what you have to say to this. Boosting for better picture conditions, and for the great Independent cause, I remain,

Yours very truly,

ST. PAUL.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

Get Busy to Defend their Reputation and Will Hold Entertainment and Ball on Monday Evening, January 29

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, incorporated in 1911 under the laws of the State of New York for the purpose of drawing the attention of the outside world to their usefulness and standing in the community in defense of the many slurs thrown upon the name of the motion picture exhibitor, will give on Monday night, January 29th, at Palm Garden, Fifty-eighth street and Lexington avenue, an entertainment of high class music and moving pictures, succeeded by a ball.

It is said that this entertainment will be different in style from anything of its kind ever given in this country. In an interview with the chairman of the entertainment committee, Mr. Oscar I. Lamberger, he said, "All of the people who appear in the pictures will be there in person and will make their bow to the audience. Many of them will entertain with short sketches between the pictures or will appear in some capacity of refined entertainment. It must be distinctly understood, however, that this entertainment will not take the form of a vaudeville show, but will be merely an effort made on the part of the picture actors and actresses to personally entertain their many admirers."

Prominent city officials, representatives of civic bodies such as the People's Institute, Woman's Municipal League, The Philosophic Society of Brooklyn, and a score of others have promised to be there.

This it appears to us is a good move on the part of the Exhibitors' Association, and one worthy of patronage. To use a quotation from themselves, "Considering that our rating in commercial agencies is null and void, considering that our business has been the butt and football of 'Authorities (?)' and the many municipal departments, the demonstration that shall take place this month is one that you must earnestly labor for."

Tickets are selling at $1.00, at their offices 12 East Fifteenth street, New York City.

MR. HENRY J. BROCK, NEW MANAGER OF KINEMACOLOR

An interesting interview has been obtained by us with Mr. Henry J. Brock, the newly installed manager of the Kinemacolor Co. of America.

Mr. Brock, who is also president of the Kinemacolor Company of Canada, Ltd., evolved to his present connection with Kinemacolor from the Mark Brock Theatrical Enterprise, of Buffalo, which controls some of the finest moving picture theaters in the country.

Says Mr. Brock: "The moving picture business is at present going through a process of elimination. We have striven to provide a high class entertainment for the people, and have found that our highest priced houses paid the best. There we show only the best pictures, and provide a high-class musical entertainment as well. The better class of people are attending the moving picture show now, and they demand better accommodations and better entertainment than has been given heretofore, and are, therefore, willing to pay higher prices. In my opinion the nickel picture show will soon be a thing of the past. This fact has been made evident to us in the opening of a high-class motion picture theater in a certain city about eighteen months ago; in a very short time the other four or five small shows in the same block had been closed up. The better class of patrons demand better theaters, and the other class will be just as well satisfied, for everybody loves pictures."

Mr. Brook is enthusiastic with regard to Kinemacolor, and is convinced that the colored picture has more meaning than the black and white. Inside of three months the Kinemacolor Company will be releasing regularly, in all probability, four releases per week. The company is a wheel within a wheel, and all departments will be handled by its own staff of workers. These releases will be topical, scientific, scenic and educational. Drama and comedy will not be handled by them until their own stock company is formed, which will not be for a few months' time. Kinemacolor is employing companies to exhibit their pictures in the different theaters in the East, taking in a circuit which does not run south of St. Louis or west of Chicago. The programs in these theaters will be a combination of the Kinemacolor and the black and white, Kinemacolors being shown alternately with the black and white, a lecturer being employed to explain the different scenes.

With Mr. Brock, who is a man of valuable experience and former enterprise, at the helm, Kinemacolor is doubtless destined to unlimited success and usefulness.

FOR HER FATHER'S SAKE

This is a splendidly conceived and cleverly acted drama with Miss Evelyn Francis in the role of a daughter who is willing to sacrifice her happiness to save her father from the financial clutches of a designing business associate, who would gain her in marriage by holding this advantage over her father's head. The girl's true sweetheart is dismissed from their home without learning the real state of affairs. As deeply disappointed over his throw-down the young man plunges into the mazes of business with heart and soul, and, as a big horse dealer in the Far West he amasses a fortune. The unfortunate girl becomes more tortured as her wedding day nears, and she sends a last farewell letter to her sweetheart. And when he receives it, only then does he learn the cause of his dismissal. It is the wedding day, and the unfortunate girl is about to be united to the man she abhors when in strides the youth of the West, who upsets the carefully laid plans of his rival.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Lubin Moving Picture Theater was destroyed by fire at a loss of $200,000.

Louisville, Ky.—The Clifton Amusement Company, capital $2,500; R. H. Lucas, E. L. Pay and Thomas Lucas.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Arch. H. A. Reeves will prepare plans for a new theater building to be erected in Monrovia for the Consolidated Amusement Company at a cost of $25,000.

Roseville, Ill.—Byers & Nelson will establish a moving picture theater here.

Keokuk, Ia.—Messrs. F. L. Secoy and L. F. Chenoweth, of Muscatine. will conduct a 5 cent moving picture theater i nthe building at 1101 Main street.

THE HELPING HAND

Imp Release, February 5

In "The Helping Hand," the Imp drama of that name to be released on Monday, February 5, is a situation of such extreme novelty and freshness that it is probably sufficient of itself to make the fortune of the picture. The old man, who has been rewarded for an act of honesty, finds himself in the park, seated under a tree. The money that has been given him and is to save him and his wife from destitution is in a wallet by his side. Thugs set upon him; he is in despair at the probable loss of the money. At that moment a park employee who is at work in the tree drops his shears, picks up the wallet and lifts it to a place of safety. The thugs, finding the old man has no money on him, sheer off. Then when the old man is left alone, the helping hand from above restores the wallet to him, and so by this remarkable agency—the helping hand of the picture—the old couple are saved from the catastrophe which threatened them.

PATHE FRERES

We learn on good authority that following in the footsteps of our friend Carl Goldenberg, another good man from the American society of Pathe Freres, is leaving their employ in New York. We refer to the energetic and faithful vice-president, Mr. Roussel, who has had charge of the complete work in Jersey City, and it is due to his admirable administration that the pictures and products are so perfect. The seceding of Mr. Roussel leaves Mr. J. A. Berst in full control of the whole of the Pathe Freres Company in this country.

Mr. Roussel leaves for France in a fortnight or three weeks time to take charge of the Pathe Freres factory that caters for the amateur cinematographer and accessories, no doubt, under his able management he will be able to make the amateur outfit accessories, including projecting machines, as popular as the various hand cameras are today. We wish him success in his new enterprise and express a regret at losing so able and congenial a gentleman.

MAJESTIC STILL ON TOP

Majestic is bringing out some remarkably good comedies. The work of this company is showing a large amount of attention paid to detail. Throughout the whole series of comedies exhibited to a number of the press during the past week, not one slow moment appeared in any of them; and during the time occupied in viewing these reels all were convulsed with laughter. In days like the present when good comedy is such a scarce article, it is a real treat to sit for a half hour or so viewing such excellent films as the following Majestics:

"An Old Lady of Twenty" and "Lucky Man" comprise a split reel which is for release on Friday, February 2d. The story treats of an amusing deception practiced upon a young artist by a pretty young actress, who impersonating two different individuals, an old lady and her pretty young daughter, works the game so well that eventually the young man falling in love with the young lady, requests her hand from the old lady, her mother, whom he also admires. At this supreme moment, the young lady tears off the wig of gray hair, and is transformed into the young woman—the woman of his choice. The story has, of course, the usual happy ending. It is well worked out, and the comedy is excellent, showing many extremely amusing incidents. The latter story, "Lucky Man," is the story of a young woman's dream that she has been transformed into a man. It shows her throwing all the fire of her young blood into the joys of manhood. This is full of funny situations, and a laugh all through. One unique point with regard to this film is the fact that she is seen lying in bed asleep all the while that the dream portion of the picture is on, forming thereby a novel innovation in motion picture photography.

"A Game for Two," for release Sunday, February 4th, is one of the funny films that we have recently seen. To use a slang phrase, "it is a scream." Miss Trunelle appears to advantage in this picture. It is the story of a young author with a pretty little wife who has no time for books—she is full of frivolity, very quick witted, and has a determination of purpose not to be outdone which shows up in the result of her resolution to separate her husband and his female collaborator in his literary work, when at the close of the story her husband is discovered locked in the kitchen of the apartment of the young man whom he has allowed to escort his wife to the theater, the young man out in the cold on the fire-escape, and the objectionable female, who from a fright has run next door in night clothes and curl papers, is locked in the clothes closet, while the young wife is reposing peacefully at home. The scene in the morning when the valet unlocks the doors and windows, releasing the captives from their respective places, is very funny. This is one of the best comedies on the market to-day.

"Arresting Father." for release Sunday, February 11th, is equally pleasing and would bear greater mention but for lack of space.

Majestic is about to form another stock company for work here. They commenced work at their Coney Island studio on Wednesday of the past week.

TWIN REX APPROACHES

After months of impatient waiting, weeks of anticipation and days when we counted their hours for the realization of the long-desired, the eventful day is at last at hand. To-morrow, Sunday, January 28th, the Rex second release will flash its pregnant significance on the screens. The momentous hour is imminent. Even as you read this, if you read it on the day it is issued, the hands are slowly crawling around the clock, cycling the day away, and nearing the climax of months of preparation and expectation.

"The Defender of the Name," is the title of the initial second release, and we are confident that our readers are as well familiar with the story, even thus prematurely, as they would be were we to dwell more extensively upon it. The tale has been reviewed probably more than any other production before its release date. Nor has this unique tribute been the result of over-zealous press-agentry. It has rather been due to the superlative quality of the film, to the unusual type of the story, to the genius evidenced in its construction and interpretation.

The Rex two-a-week is a tribute to Independent progress!

THE BENHAMS ARE BETTER

The whole dratted Benham family is better. Just as they all went "under the weather" simultaneously, so have they all hit the road to Wellville together. By the Benham family we mean, of course, the tribe of Harry Benham, the Thanhouser player.

So now, girls, it's out! Handsome Harry is a family man. And so strong a family man is he that when he gets sick his family gets sick; and when his family gets sick he gets sick. And not a portion of the family, either; it's the whole family or nothing.

First, Harry cut his hand while working in a Thanhouser playlet and then his youngest contracted the measles. Then Mrs. Benham caught a severe cold, and the oldest boy, Leland, had to "get the measles," too. The whole blamed bunch were on the sick list!

And now, Praises Be, it is announced that the Benhams are better—again in a bunch!

THE DURBAR IN KINEMACOLOR

Mr. Charles Urban has just returned to London from Delhi, bringing with him an enormous quantity of Kinemacolor film, brilliantly reproducing in the actual tints of nature all the wonderful spectacles and processional splendors—teeming with life, color, and tradition—of their Majesties' epoch-making visit to their vast and prolific empire in the East. The task of classifying and arranging these historic records for production, as well as of making the elaborate musical arrangements necessary for their realistic presentation at the Scala (including the engaging of a military band, pipers of the Black Watch, or some other Highland regiment, and performers on many native instruments) will take some little time, but Mr. Urban feels confident of having all ready by the afternoon and evening of Monday, the fifth of February. Owing to the vastness of the subject, and the fact that the present results (for Mr. Urban has left behind him a large staff to photograph all the Calcutta ceremonies) take at least six hours to put upon the screen, the program will be divided into two parts: That of the afternoon including the arrival at Bombay, a survey of Dehli and the mighty camps, the State entry and magnificent procession through the Elephants' Gate, the Polo Tournament, etc. In the evening will be, first, and foremost, a privileged picture of the King and Queen leaving the King's camp, the Durbar in all its splendor, and from a magnificent coign of vantage, the Garden party, the review of fifty thousand troops, the Military Tournament, the King's visit to the camps, and finally, the State departure. And, to suit the convenience of town and country patrons, the afternoon and evening programs will be alternated once a fortnight.

Kinemacolor Theater, New York, will soon have these films on exhibition.

San Francisco, Cal.—A one-story nickelodeon will be erected here at a cost of $3,800.

Trenton, Mo.—Manager C. P. Spoor of the Bee Theater, which was destroyed by fire, will establish a new moving picture show in the Boyce building, at 905 Main street, and will call it the Lyric.

Lexington, Ky.—All the stock has been subscribed for a new $100,000 theater to be erected on Main street by James B. Hagin.

Ballard, Wash.—Wm. H. Murphy has started to construct a $1,500 moving picture theater at Market and Tallman streets.

Keokuk, Ia.—The Dodges Moving Picture Theater was destroyed by fire.

A HARD LESSON (SOLAX)

Cast

Frank Chance.....Darwin Karr
His Friend.....Billy Quirk
His Wife.....Blanche Cornwall
The Owner of the Gambling Den.....Lee Beggs
Gamblers and Detectives

If those who are inveterate gamblers could be brought to face the ordeal which confronted Frank Chance, the gambler in "A Hard Lesson," gambling would be reduced to the mere betting of a box of candy or cigars. Professional gambling has ruined many a good man, while it has caused the unhappiness of countless noble women. The excuse some gamblers give, is that gambling has a magnetism or a fascination which is difficult for them to shake off. It gives them, they say, a certain amount of excitement and consumes that measure of excess energy which perhaps they would expend in a more vicious recreation.

In our production of "A Hard Lesson," which is to be released Friday, February 16th, one of the most realistic gambling scenes is shown on the screen. The story involves a man who gets to a gambling den regardless of the protestations of his wife. He is extremely lucky and his luck attracts attention. Strangers become friendly with him and he, being a "good feller," "sets up" the crowd. After the night's playing, he is advised by the owner of the den that it would be hazardous for him to attempt going home alone with so much cash on his person. Chance decides to remain over night. He is shown to a room.

During the night, he not only finds that he has been trapped, but an attempt is made on his life. The panels on the wall disclose to him the eyes of a person, while his bed begins to sink gradually below the floor. Chance makes his escape, however.

The strong character of the plot made necessary a succession of incidents which would sustain the interest. The climax almost "takes one's breath away." The story is compelling and forceful. Indeed, it is one of the strongest dramas from the Solax studios.

Edward Kirsch, President of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, and Joseph Hennegan, manager of a five-cent theater, were appointed yesterday by Mayor Hunt as an Examining Board for all applicants for licenses as moving picture machine operators.

Clayton & Donahay, proprietors of the new moving picture theater at Freehold, N. J., have bought the theater building and equipment on Throckmorton street from Edward Skirm. Clayton & Donahay will operate both houses.

It is said that the new moving picture theater, which is soon to be opened in the Linck Block, West Fourth street, Williamsport, Pa., is to be backed by the moving picture syndicate. The local head to the project is said to be a Mr. Maneval.

CHICAGO LETTER

Mr. George Gilmore, press agent of the Exhibitors' League of America, Illinois Branch No. 2, informs us that at the meeting of exhibitors, Monday, January 15th, many items of interest were discussed, also preparations and plans were made to handle the next National Convention of Exhibitors, which will be held here August 12th, 1912. At the next meeting Illinois exhibitors will nominate candidates for the various offices, and at the following meeting new officers will be elected from the list of candidates chosen. Wishing to promote better feeling and to become more acquainted in general, a Dutch luncheon will be given by the Exhibitors' League at the Hotel Sherman, the newest and most fashionable hotel at Chicago, Monday evening, February 5th. It will be held at a late hour as many of the exhibitors are busily engaged at their theaters until as late as 10:30 o'clock. All the members of the Illinois Branch No. 2, and the majority of film men here are expected to be present at this gathering. By request from Mayor Harrison to aid the destitute and suffering poor here, who are greatly in need of assistance at the present time, due to the unusual continued period of cold weather of late, the members of the league here, generously conceded to Mayor Harrison's request, and agreed to give their entire box office recipts of Tuesday, January 23d, to Mayor Harrison to be distributed among the needy.

The above charitable act was done purely out of the benevolence of the league, with no endeavor to receive newspaper publicity for the same. Many of the exhibitors contributed their personal checks of $20.00, thus demonstrating the generous impulse to give freely with no effort to gain publicity for same.

Now that the American Film Manufacturing Company has entered its new factory, the successful dinner to employees, held during the holidays, will be repeated.

For this purpose, it is proposed to utilize the new studio, where an excellent dinner and some extemporaneous talks are promised. President Hutchinson is a firm believer in the policy of getting close to his employees and the results of his first attempt have made him anxious to repeat the experiment. Gatherings of that kind, he believes, promote a better feeling among employees and tend toward more loyalty and closer understanding of the principles for which the American stands.

The titles of coming releases of the American Film Manufacturing Company, bearing such names as, "The Real Estate Fraud," "Where Broadway Meets the Mountains," "The Innocent Grafter," "Society and Chaps," "A Leap Year Comedy," etc., has given rise to some speculation in the trade as to whether the American is not slightly diverging from its usual type of pictures. Coming releases show a tendency to touch the effete East here and there without losing or imparing any of those Western elements that have made American films so popular. The cowboy, that imperishable, romantic Western product whose popularity remains undiminished, is still seen in American releases, along with the Eastern business man, college man and sorority girl. Thus, a double purpose is accomplished, as it is the intention to make Americans so universal in appeal that all classes of theater-goers will watch them.

Exhibitors' desire to obtain photographs of the well-known players at a moderate price is now possible, due to the efforts of the R. & H. Photographers, 17 West Lake street, who have pictures of the leading actors for sale.

The Morton Film Exchange has been purchased by Eugene Cline, the well-known manager and owner of many commercial Exchanges here.

Operator's license fee has been passed on by the City Council, which is $2.00 for renewal of license, and $3.00 for first license.

Mr. Hutchinson, of the American Film Manufacturing Company, and family left here last week for California, and we hope much pleasure was accorded them.

Mr. Berz, correspondent of the Laemmle Film Service, left Chicago last week for a Western trip, and it is expected that Mr. Berz, after leisurely passing through Oklahoma and Nevada, will locate and open an office in California, the object of which is not as yet known. Mr. Berz has been on the sick list for sime time, and we all hope the change of climate will aid Mr. Berz in regaining his health.

An exhibition of 6,000 feet of moving pictures was given here last week showing many interesting views of the industrial activities of Butte, Montana, Silver Bow Valley, Rock Canyon, Jefferson Canyon and Hell Gate.

EVERY THEATER NEEDS THIS SERVICE

One of the strongest attractions that has ever been presented to the theater-going public is now being furnished by Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., 1328 Broadway, New York. This company is supplying moving picture and vaudeville theaters with a daily service of current event news slides by Underwood & Underwood, the world's famous news photographers.

The public is keenly interested in the leading events of the day immediately after they occur. This service covers every event that is interesting—every occurrence that thrills, news pictures of wars, sports and all the leading national and international events.

It is one of the greatest educational features of the day and is pulling large crowds to the theaters that have booked it. The slides reach you about the same time your local papers are running accounts of the subjects furnished. It is very easy to understand why the public will follow such an up-to-the-minute service that is only possible in this wonderful age. Underwood & Underwood have a large staff of photographers in every country in the world, which insures your securing all the leading events of the day, no matter where they occur.

While the great Equitable fire was in progress, theaters all over the East were showing the most important fire scenes to crowded houses.

The public has responded so strongly to this attraction that many managers realize news slides have come to stay and have added this service to their regular show.

Four slides are furnished daily, twenty-four per week, at a cost of twelve dollars per week.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

THE Epworth Methodist Church of Denver, Colo., will be transformed several evenings during the week into a moving picture show, for which 5 cents admission will be charged. The pastor, Rev. Austin Chapman, who is now working to secure funds for the installation of the picture machine, is convinced that it is a worthy departure. Says Mr. Chapman: "The people seem to crave such things, and we will have to introduce them into the churches if we intend to hold our congregations." Mr. Chapman has been studying methods of this sort adopted by other churches in securing larger attendances and an increased interest in church affairs, and expresses himself as convinced that the moving picture used as a form of education and amusement in the churches is an important mark in the progress of our civilization.

Miss Helen S. Coe, of Portland, addressing the Lewiston Murray Club, believes that the moving picture is the greatest force which has ever come into this country. One remark of Miss Coe's would be well for the public in general to notice: "We all want to keep abreast of the times, and as the moving picture is a much-talked-about subject, it is well to study into the question and know more about it. We should take the subject into our minds and consider it in a broad sense, putting aside the underbrush." In discussing the subject of the popularity of moving pictures, Miss Coe notes that in Europe the pictures were first patronized by the aristocracy and then by the masses, while in this country the interest is working up from the masses to the aristocracy. Statistics prove that over 40 per cent. in this country are attending moving picture shows, and again figures show that it is an erroneous idea that the largest number are children who attend the shows. In many places they are not allowed to attend the performances unless with parents or chaperons.

With regard to the educational side, Miss Coe argued: "I believe there is a possibility of using moving pictures as the greatest educator in America." She also cited the case of a prominent librarian in a large Wisconsin city who noticed the great decrease in library patronage following the establishment of moving picture concerns in that city. What did he do? He did not condemn the moving pictures, but he introduced moving pictures into the library. He brought out Tennyson's poems in pictures, and the patronage of the library not only increased in large number, but it was said that the demand for Tennyson's poems became so great that the supply throughout the state was exhausted.

Miss Coe believes that under proper conditions the evening use of schoolhouses showing moving pictures of an educational nature might become an important factor in the life of the city. In conclusion, she urged that club women use their influence in making the moving picture show useful. "I would suggest," she said, "that all the clubs of these two cities (Lewiston and Portland) form parties and go and see the moving pictures. Just as soon as you see any objections report them to the Board of Censors of New York City."

Moving picture operators of Davenport, Rock Island and Moline met yesterday morning at the Times Building at Davenport in temporary session prior to perfecting a permanent organization. The meeting was in charge of Grand Treasurer T. J. Sullivan of the National Board of Electrical Workers, who addressed the members present, explaining the need of such an organization for the betterment of the employees and electrical workers. Mr. Sullivan has headquarters at Springfield, Ill., and is the editor of the official journal for the electrical workers of America. The subject of the meeting was the affiliation of moving picture operators with the National Organization of Electrical Workers.. A movement has been made in all parts of the United States towards this end and is meeting with great success.

The three cities above mentioned will have a membership of over 50 by the time the entire number has signed the charter, making one of the largest organizations west of Chicago.

A school teacher in Chicago in a recent interview hits the nail squarely on the head in the following statement: "When I first taught English I found it almost impossible to interest my pupils in books that really are worth while. For a long time I thought it was ignorance on their part, but I soon found out that many of those pupils who did not seem to care for books were in reality a great deal brighter than I had ever been, were quick to learn and had more retentive memories than I. Then I evolved a change, which I still hold good, that only persons with good imaginations enjoy reading books. I talked to many of my pupils who did not enjoy reading, and in practically every case I found the difficulty the same. They regarded a book as merely so many printed pages. There was no human interest, as the phrase is. I tried picking out historical novels for auxiliary reading, and before I gave them to my class I gave them reviews of the historical facts touched upon. This gave fairly satisfactory results.

"When the moving picture show came into popularity it was interesting to note the change. I remember we had been studying Shakespeare's 'Macbeth.' One morning my first class surprised me by manifesting real interest in the play. My astonishment increased as each succeeding class manifested growing interest. Finally I asked one of the pupils what had caused the interest and was informed that the Shakespearean drama had been the subject of one of the reels at a nearby moving picture house the preceding night, and the majority of my pupils had taken the opportunity of getting acquainted with the play.

"After that I was a motion picture convert." At the price of 5 cents every school child in Pueblo can see pictures from the greatest writers the world has produced, and almost every week some great play in motion photography, and the pupil who sees it learns the stories in a very few minutes that otherwise would take months.

It is estimated that there are nearly 5,000 actors and actresses idle in New York City alone, owing to the fact that the moving picture drama is usurping the place of the spoken drama in all parts of the country.

be the scene of a novel night school for the parents of the children. While the children are studying in a quiet room or being entertained with moving pictures, the mothers will be taught by a teacher in charge many things belonging to the domestic department of life. The fathers may bring a broken chair or any other article of furniture to mend, thus learning the use of tools and the economy of their proper use.

The expense of the additional service of teachers, janitors, etc., will be met by V. E. Macy, of Manhattan. The cost will be about $3,000. His offer was accepted by the Board of Education at a recent meeting.

The expedition will be financed by the Norwegian government. This expedition will doubtless result in the procuring of a number of wonderful moving pictures.

The new school board of Washington, Pa., has announced its intention of installing a moving picture machine in the public schools to be used principally in the study of history, geography, chemistry and botany.

A moving picture show was given by A. J. Gillingham, manager of the Detroit branch of the General Film Company, in the Board of Education rooms Wednesday afternoon, for the benefit of members of the committee on text books and course of study, which is considering the purchase of a number of moving picture machines for use in the schools. Among the films shown was an excellent one, giving in vivid detail the work being done on the Panama Canal. The famous "tuberculosis" film was also shown.

A rather unique use for the moving picture film was found in its adoption for the prevention of this. Whether this method of prevention was actually a success was not literally known, but, however, it was tried aboard a steamer en route to Japan not long ago. The diversion, it is said, was much appreciated.

An important step taken in educational circles of Chicago is the installation of a moving picture equipment in the Audubon school, 3500 North Hoyne avenue. For an hour 450 pupils were entertained with an instructive motion picture exhibition, views of foreign countries, supplemented with songs and selections by the Eighth Grade orchestra. Mr. Chas. A. Kent, principal of the school, operates the machine himself. On the particular instance spoken of the following subjects were shown: "The Canals of Venice," "The Illinois Steel Mills, "Farming with Dynamite," "Catalina Island," and "Marine Gardens." The expense of the machine, which cost $170, was paid out of the fund of the school. The pupils had formed a moving picture association, to which they contributed 10 cents a month with which to rent films.

Another mark of the rapid development of the motion picture business is shown in the fact that in Houston, Tex., where a year ago there but four exclusive motion picture shows, to-day there are twelve, with plans for the investment of more than $100,000 more in new enterprises of this character. The Dixie Film Co. will operate a motion picture show in the new $75,000 theater being built as a part of the new Krupp and Tuffly building at Main street and Prairie avenue.

At the monthly meeting of the Sherwin-Hyde Parents' Association held on the evening of January 18th in the assembly hall of the Sherwin Grammar School, Sterling street, Roxbury, it was agreed that the moving picture show is here to stay; that it might be made better; that children should not be allowed to attend unless accompanied by an adult; that it can become a powerful educational faculty; that at present the visits of children should not be more than once or twice a month. A low-priced but high-grade moving picture theater with all objectional features removed was advocated as the best for children and adults.

That invaluable entertainer, the Daily Consular and Trade Report, devotes attention in a recent issue to moving pictures abroad and develops that the films have a big patronage not only in the 3,000 playhouses of England, the 1,500 in Germany, France, Norway, Russia and Spain, but have invaded Turkey, Morocco, Syria, Japan, China, the Straits Settlement, New Zealand, Australia and even Honduras. The American subjects and workmanship are the most popular everywhere, the failure of a theater in far-off Turkey being attributed to a change from American films with the consequent disappointment of patrons. England likes the educational subjects especially, and on occasion exhibits an enterprise that sets the pace for Americans. The Grand National Steeplechase in Liverpool, for instance, is run at 3 p.m. and motion pictures of the event are taken, developed on a special train and shown that night in London, 200 miles away.

Prof. Harold Barnes, of Girard College, Philadelphia, in an address before the League of American Penwomen at the Public Library last night, strongly endorsed the comic supplement and the moving pictures, provided they were of the right sort and did not exploit anything that would disease the minds of children. He said that the scheme of moving pictures had been tried with great success in several school systems and had proved valuable. The subject of Prof. Barnes' address was "The Parent, the Pedagogue, and the Pupil."

One of the latest uses made of the moving picture is in its adaptation for city publicity purposes. Secretary G. H. Cleveland has followed Chicago's example and has given from the proceeds of its moving picture theaters to charity, about two hundred moving picture houses contributing to the fund.

A TIMELY EXPLANATION

Much misunderstanding has recently resulted from a confusion of the Solax and the Gaumont interests. Mme. Alice Blache, the president of the Solax Company, has decided to dispel the false impression which may exist in the minds of many by the issue of the following signed statement:

January 22, 1912.

Gentlemen:

We wish to protest vigorously against the allegations being made to the effect that the Solax Company and the Gaumont Company are allied in business.

The only relation which exists is a family one, Mrs. Blache being president of the Solax Company, and Mr. Blache manager of the Gaumont Company of New York. This is the only relation existing between the two companies.

The Solax Company received its charter September 7, 1910, through our attorneys, Goldie & Gumm, of 27 William street, New York City, who will give complete information to any person desiring it.

It is true that the Solax Company has in the past rented the Gaumont studio, and all developing and printing has been done in the Gaumont plant, but this has been strictly on a cash business basis and under the same conditions as many other moving picture concerns have had their work done by the Gaumont Company.

We have recently purchased a large piece of land in Fort Lee, N. J., where we are constructing our own studio and where we will shortly be installed in very much larger and better quarters than we have at present.

We trust that you will attach to this communication the importance which it merits, and believe in our sincerity in making these statements to you.

Yours very truly,
SOLAX COMPANY,
Alice Blache, President.

MR. DAVID HORSLEY HOME AGAIN

Mr. David Horsley is again with his friends in the East, after an eventful sojourn with his motion picture stock company in California. So far it has been impossible to get within more than looking distance of Mr. Horsley, so surrounded is he with well-wishers and friends, eager for his first word and best smile. However, in our next issue we will be able to give our readers something from Mr. Horsley direct—at least, so we hope. Mr. Horsley will be an extremely busy man for some time to come, as his return here will, of necessity, add a new impetus to the business which has been so well looked after in his absence by Mr. Charles Simone, who, by the way, reports himself well along the road to recovery from his recent attack of muscular rheumatism.

Nestor have some excellent films for release soon, of which more in another issue.

HALLBERG ECONOMIZERS FOR ALL CIRCUITS

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that during the past week he has shipped out alternating current Economizers for 25 cycles, 40 cycles, 60 cycles, and 133 cycles, and has booked orders for D.C. Economizers for 110 volts, 220 volts and 500 volt circuits. He is also furnishing chairs and machines for three new theaters.

LANTERN SLIDES, COLORED AND UNCOLORED

BY WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT

MR. A. W. THOMAS, newspaper man and scenario writer, of Marion, Ohio, submits the following under the caption, "A Picture Play Arrest," for this page: "The Kid of Roaring Camp" and "Eleanore Cuyler" became too hilarious the other night in "The Two Flats" and "The Widow" living next door, who is one of "The Professor's Daughters," called "Whoops, the Detective." The sleuth hurried to the scene and hustled "The Cowboy's Sister" and "Desperate Desmond" before "The Prosecuting Attorney," where the woman said she was "Bonita, of El Cajon," adding that she and her friend, "Brown, of Harvard," were indulging in "A Ragtime Love Affair."

"A Terrible Discovery" was made, replied the official, declaring she had been "Betrayed by a Parasol." The woman and her companion were silent. "Playing the Game" is always followed by "The Parting of the Ways," so the "Village Romance" will end here, "The Horse Thief" getting "Thirty Days at Hard Labor," said the court. The accused man, losing his nervousness, now found words and declared "A Slight Mistake" had been made; that he was "Deacon Debbs" and the woman was "Stage Struck Lizzie," a "Diamond in the Rough," who was on "Uncle Hiram's List" and he had simply called to see her. "For the Love of Mike," exclaimed the officer who had made the arrest. "On the Stroke of Three" it was "A Question of Seconds" when I nabbed "The Strangers," said the sleuth to the court. The detective said the woman told him she was "The Actress" in "Divorcons" and that the man was "Alma's Champion"; that they were on their way "Back to His Old Home Town" where they would meet "Two Men and a Girl," all of them joining in a sketch entitled "A Day at the Circus."

"By Decree of Fate," remarked the court, "Her One Day's Dream" is over, but "A Timely Lesson" has been learned and I shall send her back to her father, "The Blacksmith." Until her companion's fine is "Paid in His Own Coin," he must go with "Lazy Bill and the Strikers," ending "The Caddy's Dream," he added.

"Love That Never Fails" didn't prove so in this case and "Gossip" has it that it was "His Fate's Rehearsal."

"Did you see Dainta's Farano?" was asked of a cultured woman this week. In telling of this the lady said at first she thought the questioner was asking about some new kind of breakfast food. Fortunately the interrogator was put right with Dante, and the Inferno was explained, not in sublime verse but in understandable English.

ALL IN THE PICTURE SHOW

You do not have to go abroad
World wonders for to see,
They're here before your very door
As reel, as reel can be.
The great canal, the camel pack,
The Tiber's peaceful flow,
The River Nile, the Paris Style,
All in the picture show.

You see the Czar upon his throne,
The peasant girl afield;
Castles, hives, dens and dives
Upon the screen revealed.
The mighty battles of the world,
The tyrant's overthrow;
The Kaiser's band, the low brigand,
All in the picture show.

The world's great hidden mysteries,
The wonders of the deep;
The sad, the glad, the good, the bad,
The costly and the cheap.
How marvelous the moving screen,
How eagerly we go
To see the things just as they are Shown in the picture show.

Old 1911 is passed and gone
And a new year has been born,
Let us start this new one right
By boosting the pictures with all our might.
We know in the past much fame has been won
But remember the game has only begun.
The churches and schools at last have found
The best educator the world around,
Pictures, the only teachers of their kind
Not only amuse but improve the mind.
So lets get together with right good cheer,
There is much to be done in the coming year.

ARE YOU A LIVE WIRE?

A good live exhibitor readily realizes the necessity of good advertising and is prompt to take advantage of something that will increase his receipts. A great many exhibitors are afraid to make any changes in their business for fear it will interfere with some old fogy notion, pertaining to that particular thing, which has been handed down through ages and is a part of ancient history.

SCENES FROM THE GIRL WHO WAITED
Republic Release, February 18th

POWERS SHAKES THE PLUM TREE

Some great things are to be expected from the Powers Company. Not content with securing the services of Albert McGovern, versatile director, Mr. Powers has contracted with Mr. Giles R. Warren, who recently resigned as scenario editor of the Lubin Manufacturing Company. Warren will, effective in two weeks, have taken up his duties as scenario editor for the Powers Company and will work in conjunction with Mr. McGovern, in making Powers picture plays better and brighter. We repeat, that some great things can confidently be expected from the further association of these two acknowledged masters of different branches of the cinematographic industry.

Powers will be busily engaged in receiving congratulations from leading scenario writers when they learn that Giles R. Warren is soon to assume charge of the scenario department of the Powers Company. Much of the best work will immediately be forwarded to the Powers studios.

Warren was formerly scenario editor of the Imp Films Company. After efficient service with Laemmle he joined the Lubin forces and, until his recent resignation, the Lubin Manufacturing Company boasted of one of the best conducted scenario departments in the business.

Many of the plots which made the name of Lubin much to be desired during the past year were evolved in the fertile brain of Mr. Warren. His originality and versatility as a writer is too well known to necessitate mention here.

There is another side to Warren's acquisition that has made his services so eagerly sought for since his resignation from the Lubin Company. It is the fact that he is so universally admired and respected by the great army of authors, that makes him very desirable to the various picture manufacturers. Warren has the deserved reputation among writers for prompt service and fair dealing, and nothing else is countenanced in the office over which Mr. Warren presides.

Mr. Powers is to be congratulated on his enterprise in contracting for Mr. Warren's services and the flood of A No. 1 scenarios that will be logically turned into the Powers channel from the date of this notice, will be the best proof of Powers knowledge and foresight.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

HOADLEY BACK IN THE HARNESS

C. B. Hoadley, who recently resigned as scenario editor of the Imp, is back in harness once more after a deserved vacation of several weeks. This will be joyful news for the hundreds of authors who learned to admire Mr. Hoadley while that gentleman was with the Imp Company. One strong asset for Hoadley is the friendly regard in which he is held by the writers in all parts of the country. He earned this esteem by kindly methods. It is understood that Mr. Hoadley is considering several flattering offers from producing companies to join their respective staffs either as editor or publicity agent. A letter directed to him in care of the Moving Picture News will be delivered safely.

Mr. Hoadley is said to be the only real, simon-pure newspaperman in the picture business to-day. He has served in editorial capacities with every newspaper in Toledo, Ohio, and gained fame as a feature writer for Gotham newspapers. He is also a successful writer of magazine stories. During his long service with the Imp he proved his worth in the capacities of editor and publicity writer. For a time he was in complete charge of the advertising force and originated many new ideas beneficial to that company. He is strikingly original in his publicity work. Hoadley is particularly versatile as a writer of the juvenile picture play, his child stories having been in great demand not only with the Imp, but with other first-class producers.

Personally, Mr. Hoadley is a good fellow, has a knack of making friends and keeping them, and they all will be interested to know that he is once again ready for business.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN RE-INCARNATION?

One way or t'other you will be glad to see the theory advanced in a Thanhouser issue called "As It Was In the Beginning." There is an indifferent society girl of the present. She is introduced at a function to a man who impresses her as being "masterful." There is that about him which makes her weaken before his gaze. Later, she sits alone, musing. She is carried back to a prehistoric age, in her dream, and she finds there a savage, the counterpart of the stranger at the ball, who fascinates and dominates her just as the stranger did.

Do you think her dream had any foundation in fact—in the fact of the long ago? "As It Was in the Beginning" is the fourth and last feature in Thanhouser's "greatest January," releasing Tuesday, January 30.

And speaking of Thanhouser Company, we would mention they advise us that an additional lot of three and eight sheet lithos have been turned out for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "East Lynne," and exhibitors who cannot obtain this matter at their Exchange should write direct to the Thanhouser office at New Rochelle, N. Y.

REPUBLIC'S ARCTIC PRODUCTIONS

In spite of difficult and ofttimes dangerous obstacles, a freezing temperature, the thermometer often registering 30 degrees below zero—snow and windstorms seldom experienced by picture players—the members of the Republic Saranac Company are continuing to turn out Arctic reproductions that will undoubtedly meet with approval.

The majestic Adirondack Mountains are known all over the world for their beauty and grandeur, and as every picture is taken in the very heart of these mountains the scenic effects alone ought to be worth while.

The peculiar weather conditions of the high altitude is another great advantage moving picture manufacturers have, as a blinding snowstorm is often accompanied by a brilliant sun. Most of the "Rep" pictures have several scenes taken during a frightful blizzard, and the effect ought to prove very effective as well as novel. The primitive method of travel with dog sledges through snow that is often from one to six feet in depth is another unique feature.

GETTING RICH QUICK AS VIEWED BY THANHOUSER

Is getting rich quick a sure road to happiness? Guess again, says Thanhouser Company, and they serve up a story about some poor folks who really got wealthy quick, to support their contention. Said "poor folks" were a young married couple who only had an old farm house and their health to boast of. Suddenly, out of the horizon of funny fate, a round million springs upon 'em. And they don't dodge their "luck"—no, not for a minute. They were real flesh-and-blood people, you see. They corraled the gold with avidity and proceeded to cut a dash in good society. And like a flash, unhappiness came to them! They had money, and all that it could buy, but discord and darkness enveloped their lives. The wonderful gold proved too much for them! The story is a very simple and, seemingly, a very actual one and it will cause many film theatergoers to think. Under the title, "The Trouble Maker," the reel issues Tuesday, February 6.

A SYSTEM OF EXCELLENT MERIT

There is probably no one thing that is of any more importance to the exhibitor of motion pictures than to see that they are well equipped with a good system of advertising. There are two very essential features of the motion picture business, one being a modern and up-to-date system of advertising to induce the public to attend their show, and the other is to give them a class of advertising that will keep them after they have once become interested.

So many exhibitors lose sight of these two important factors in their business and do not stop to consider that the present, and perhaps the future, success of their business existence depends a great deal on the attractiveness and modern and up-to-date manner in which they present their programs to the public. One of the greatest showmen this country has ever known has said, "If I were starting in business and had only ten dollars, I would spend nine dollars and fifty cents in good advertising, and get a shave, haircut and my shoes shined with the other fifty cents."

There are numerous advertising propositions on the market and they all have more or less merit, but there is one system which has made a most phenomenal record in the few months in which it has been operating, and from present indications will, in a very short time, become the most popular, if not the national system. The system is put out by the Exhibitors' Advertising Company, Chicago, Ill., whose ad appears on page 23 in this issue, and we believe it meets the demands of the exhibitor better than most any other system. A poster is given for each and every film released each week by the Licensed Manufacturers (there being 36 releases per week at this time) for which the exhibitor has to pay only $2.00 per week. These posters are mailed to the exhibitor each week for the following week's releases, so that an exhibitor always has his posters before he gets his film, even though he uses first run. The fact that these posters are mailed to the exhibitor each week saves him the annoyance and trouble of running around to find his posters to correspond with the films he is going to run. The posters belong to the exhibitor and he does not have to return them, but can file them away for future use if he so desires.

In connection with the poster service, and as a part of the system, an elegant oak frame is furnished for the purpose of displaying the posters, which is sold for the nominal sum of ten dollars. This system makes a very fine display and adds materially to the front of any theatre and, we understand, has been adopted and is being used by some of the best and most up-to-date theaters in the country.

WHEN CANDLES BEAT ELECTRIC LIGHTS IN THE SHOW BUSINESS

In front of an empty lot beside the Elite Theater, Santa Rosa, Cal., the advance posters for feature pictures are displayed on a three-sheet billboard. No attention was given to these advance notices until a candle was nailed in the center of the board and lit. The display was for Thanhouser's "She." Through curiosity everybody stopped and the result was a "No Standing Room" sign.

DAILY CONSULAR AND TRADE REPORTS OF MOVING PICTURES ABROAD

ENGLAND

[From Consul General John L. Griffiths, London.]

Moving picture shows are so popular here that there is not a town of any size or importance in the vicinity of London without one or more such shows, and there are a great number in London itself. Many are operated in groups by companies, syndicates, or circuits. Communications addressed to the "Manager, Cinematograph Theater," with the name of any town or city in the United Kingdom, would almost invariably reach the principal show of that character in the place.

The prices of admission vary from 4 to 61 cents. The length of films required for an average performance, lasting from 1½ to 1¾ hours, approximates 4,500 feet. Prices of the films per 1,000 feet range from $2.43 to $24.33, according to the date, the release, and the quality of film. Important and popular events are often shown on the same day as their occurrence. The Grand National Steeplechase Race, for example, is held in Liverpool, which is a little over 200 miles from London. The principal race begins at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and is over in about seven or eight minutes. That night the race is shown in a series at some of the London music halls, the pictures having been developed while the train was running from Liverpool to London.

It is now quite the custom for moving pictures to form part of the program at the music halls, 52 of which were licensed by the London County Council during the year ending with September, 1911. Outside greater London these theaters are licensed by the local borough councils.

There is a considerable number of firms engaged in manufacturing moving picture films, the total average production being estimated at about 130 000 feet of film per week. Competition is said to be very keen.

Evidences of Decline in Popularity

While these picture theaters still enjoy a wide measure of popularity, there is evidence that the public is not so much attracted as formerly. Possibly the existence of so great a number of shows has contributed to this decline, but the chief cause, according to a writer in one of the principal London weeklies, is the fact that proprietors have provided what they like rather than what the public desires. While programs are changed two or three times weekly, there is still too much similarity in the style of picture shown. There is undoubtedly an increasing desire for pictures of scientific interest, depicting, for instance, insect life, bee farming, ostrich farming, and the progress of the different stages in the manufacture of various products.

The Kinemacolor shows, in which the moving pictures are represented in two or three colors, have been very popular in London, and indeed everywhere in the United Kingdom. The coronation ceremonies, the investiture of the Prince of Wales, and other subjects of general interest have been represented in color, and have attracted large and appreciative audiences. It has been found that the reproduction of interesting historical events in which the costumes are a conspicuous feature is received most favorably by the audiences. Scenes from popular authors, such as Dickens and Scott, are accepted with manifest favor and are frequently produced in color.

There is apparently a good opportunity now for the manufacturers of American films to obtain additional trade in the United Kingdom. American-made films are being constantly shown in England.

Three weekly publications devoted to the trade and published in London are: The Bioscope, 85 Shaftesbury avenue, W.; the Picture Theater News, 58 Avenue Chambers, Vernon Place, W. C., and the Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly, Tottenham street, Tottenham Court Road, W.

[From Consul Homer M. Byington, Bristol.]

American Scenic Films Desired

The manager of a large moving picture concern in Bristol says that most of the films used are selected from those issued by the manufacturers in England or agents of manufacturers in foreign countries. A large number of American films are obtained through the various agents in London.

One manager points out that the moving picture shows here seldom get any subjects from the United States other than "drama," "comedy," and "comics." He says:

"Certain outstanding events and the scenery of many portions of the United States would be welcomed in this country. Naturally the topical events have to be of universal interest; such subjects as the great forest fire which occurred about a year ago should take well in England. While pictures of Japan, China, Siam, and various European cities, and scenes from nearly every country in existence are constantly seen, I do not remember ever to have seen a picture of an American city with the exception of Niagara Falls. American manufacturers are to be congratulated on their photography, but I think they stick too closely to well-recognized groups of subjects; a greater variety would be wiser in the long run."

[From Consul Augustus E. Ingram, Bradford.]

Refreshments Served in Some Theaters

In some of the moving picture theaters in Bradford tea and sweet biscuits or crackers are served free during the afternoon. Prices of admission range from 4 cents to 36 cents.

Local moving picture men say that fully 60 per cent of the pictures now shown in this country are American, and of the rest probably 25 per cent are French. In the trade journals are several advertisements of American firms. The American pictures that are now most popular are those called "American drama," particularly such as depict ranch or cowboy life. Occasionally such pictures are rather too sensational, and must often give rise to strangely erroneous conceptions of conditions in the United States.

American films are highly spoken of; the only criticism I have heard is that the color printing of the advertising posters that are used outside the picture theaters is often crude and not equal to work done in this country.

[From Consul Samuel M. Taylor, Nottingham.]

American Films Preferred

One moving picture theater in Nottingham, which uses 6,000 feet of film weekly, employs a "chooser," whose business is to attend the exhibitions given in London by manufacturers of films. These exhibitions are given in rotation, according to character, as comic, dramatic, educational, etc., and after seeing them the "chooser" draws up a list of films desired and forwards it to the general purchasing agent of the syndicate to which the theater belongs, who undertakes to obtain the films from the manufacturers.

The operator of another show says:

"We run a wonderful lot of American films, a good many French, some Italian, and a few English; but the Americans are at the top of the list in the superiority of their working."

He advises that in applying for orders all particulars as to films should be given, such as the length, subject, whether in color or black and white, etc.—the more particulars given the better the chance of doing business. His own circuit is running a great number of colored pictures at present and they are generally much in favor.

"TEA INDUSTRY"

Imp Release, February 10

It is not generally known in the United States that there is a tea farm, or rather plantation, where the tea plant is cultivated. Such, however, is the case. Whether the tea plant will ever be cultivated in the Southern and Western States to anything like the extent it is in India, China and Ceylon is a matter which agricultural chemists may decide for us in future years. For the present the unique fact remains amongst his many industries "Uncle Sam" includes that of the cultivation of tea.

In this picture, which was taken in Summerville, S. C., we are shown the process of tea plant cultivation, from the weeding of the ground, in which the plants are growing, right up to the mechanical picking of the leaves, which are finally sorted out by hand and packed ready for the market.

Tea plant cultivation is not given much opportunity for mechanical handling, so much depends upon the human hand in selecting and sorting the tea leaves. But it is interesting to note that in stripping the leaves from the plants a machine very much like a reaper is employed.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, NEW YORK

For fourteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

Washington, D. C.

One of the most progressive uses of the motion picture is that of advertising, an excellent demonstration of which was made in this city last week when 6,000 feet of films of the Studebaker-Flanders, E. M. F. automobile factory, of Detroit, Mich., was displayed before a large and interested audience. Through the eyes of the animated camera, the spectators were taken from the testing of the steel and the huge piles of pig iron to the finished product of beautiful cars being shipped to the agencies. The various castings, the manipulations of different machinery, the labor-saving devices, and the accuracy of workmanship were photographed in detail. The progression of manufacture was such as to be readily grasped by intelligent minds, while the explanatory remarks made by Mr. Boyce gave added information that was both interesting and instructing. The displaying of these films showed not only the wonderful mechanism of an automobile, but it also told its own story of world achievements and progress. No amount of still pictures could have made the same impression as those films accomplished, yet it was but a few years ago when such an expenditure would have been highly impracticable. The E. M. F. Automobile Company have found this form of advertisement a paying business. Mr. Long, the local manager, secured a representative audience for this private and complimentary exhibition of films, including not only those interested in automobiles, but business men who realized what such an exhibition means to a corporation. It is quite probable that other auto factories will find it necessary to do the same to keep abreast of the times. The motion picture has certainly become the most convincing argument to the public.

Through the Feature Film Company Tom Moore secured a most excellent part-reel of the recent funeral of Rear Admiral Evans. The day was one of the coldest and certainly the windiest Washington has known, but Camera-man Boernstein stuck to his post until the last fire of the guns, when the soldiers doing the firing were jumping around trying to keep the blood circulating. This part-reel has been shown at the Moore chain of houses and has been favorably commented upon. To this funeral series of events Mr. Moore made a most fitting conclusion, that of a battleship in mid-ocean with the picture of "Fighting Bob" Evans on the mast and the leader "Gone ashore." Tom Moore has "some ideas" about effects.

The Mount Vernon has been closed for the winter months.

J. Boyd Dexter, the first Independent Exchange man of this district, has ceased to do film service business and is devoting all his time to his poster work. It is to Mr. Dexter that the Independents owe their introduction here, and to his persistence their footing in this city and vicinity. Even after the Paramount, and later the Washington Film Exchange, was established, Mr. Dexter was associated with this office. After severing his connection with the latter Exhange, some of Mr. Dexter's old customers insisted upon being served by him and it was not until quite recently that he finally decided to give up the exchange business entirely. He, therefore, turned his customers over to the local Independent office, the Washington Film Exchange. Mr. Dexter is one of our best and most artistic rapid poster painters and his work is displayed before many of the motion picture houses and the large theaters, where it is noted as "something different." His recent contract to furnish all the display to his own liking for the Imperial Theater, where motion pictures form a part of the program, is considered an unusual order of much importance.

"Angels Unawares," as recently presented at the Empress, was one of the most impressive and heart-and-home interest photoplays we have seen recently. After its release day showing at this theater, it made a good run over the city, with favorable comments.

The Plaza is making improvements and enlargements to its seating capacity as well as the offices of the Moore Amusement Company. Many additional seats will be made to the side and depth of the house, which will make the seating capacity the largest on Ninth street. The offices will be more commodious. Tom Moore is never content; he is always "moving on" in the room for improvement.

Manager Airey, of the Alhambra, who is forever tinkering at something in the way of curtain, screen, lights and projection, has a new scheme in mind now to make more effective the picture. The exact nature of this will be known later. Mr. Airey, who made such a success of a road motion picture show last fall is preparing for a larger company this summer, in which he will use some new spectacular effects in his picture tent.

Manager Notes gave the first presentation of Cardinal Farley's return and scored quite a hit by so doing. The people of Washington were much interested in this and the picture was far better than the newspaper accounts. The moving picture theaters are indeed becoming live-wire news gatherers.

In the recent presentation of "A Ragtime Love Affair" at the Leader, the pianist played the piano lesson in the photoplay so realistic that the spectators "felt" that the scene was real and did not blame the father from putting his fingers to his ears nor the professor from tearing his hair. It is little points like this that make "hits" in the presentation of the photoplays.

A TENSE SITUATION FROM "HIS BROTHER WILLIE," A POWERS PICTURE PLAY, FOR FEBRUARY 20th

SOMETHING DOING IN CLEVELAND, O.

Cleveland Local No. 1., M. P. Ex. League of America, is keeping things moving very favorable to the interests of Ohio showmen since organizing under the league banner. Many things have been started, after due deliberation at headquarters, that will be of direct benefit 'ere long to every moving picture exhibitor in the Buckeye State, and one thing is certain: The politicians of the state will have a wholesome regard for the Buckeye moving picture man by the time another legislative session opens at Columbus.

* * * *

Meantime any grafter, schemer or fly-by-nighter who tries to put anything over on one showman, as against another showman in Cleveland (P. S. Sixth City) will do well and save time for himself by seeking an audience with the boys in a body any Wednesday morning at headquarters from 10 to 2 (after that we eat, smoke and "kid" one another). Anyone with a "real good thing" of interest to the business will do business quickly with all local showmen worth seeing. The first mentioned gentry will positively "get the hook." (Don't forget print our correct headquarters address, Mr. Editor.) All trading stamp and souvenir catch-penny schemes are regarded as "baby business and altogether too undignified to be identified with the art of entertaining Mr. Family Man." The unanimous vote of a majority of Cleveland showmen—all league members—makes this "official" since our last meeting yesterday. Cut-throat competition among downtown managers is also practically a thing of the past since the league got them all to adopt the get-together policy with its motto, "Con outsiders all you like, but pull together for the love of Mike."

* * * *

The solution of the most serious problem confronting the moving picture men of all large cities to-day seems to have been met by the prompt action of Cleveland Branch No. 1, after thirty days' consideration of the matter, pro and con, and it begins to look as though a magnificent bouquet of large proportions is due the General Film Company. Fact! Now let every exhibitor watch the news from Cleveland and be ready to act as Americans with backbone.

* * * *

Meantime, please make note of the fact that Tuesday, January 23, is "benefit night" at all photo playhouses in this city. The Associated Charities get one admission out of every five for the relief of the poor, of which Cleveland has its share during this fearful hard winter. This was settled at our last meeting, and sixty-four dollars were thrown into the Perfecto box by the members present as a preparatory good-will boost; this included five dollars from Manager Willis of the General Film Company. All the Cleveland papers start in to-day to "plug" daily for the "Associated Charities Benefit Night." Every theater, in advertising it upon the screen, also solicits bundles of old clothing and will deliver some to Associated Charities headquarters. Is not this practical relief plan worth following by showmen of other cities?

* * * *

Cleveland motion picture men don't understand all the hue and cry over censorship bodies being deemed necessary anywhere. With an output of almost 100 reels each week—regular reels—from firms anxious to please, and with bankruptcy surely awaiting those who fail to please, it does seem as though the showman ought to be able to get his quota of about twenty reels a week and do his own censoring. With such an abundance of films upon the market it is simply a question of the "survival of the fittest" and back to the woods for the would-be censor. Put a sleuth on the track of these back number cranks and you will find that the trail leads to someone who is selfishly antagonistic to the Family Man's theater, or is a prospective candidate for a soft berth. I have trailed a few myself and ran them to cover every time. Let every exhibitor be careful to conduct his place right and insist upon doing it himself, and above all things o-r-g-a-n-i-z-e.

THE GAUMONT COMPANY DOING GOOD WORK

There was a distinct air of enterprise and bustle hovering about the office of the Gaumont Company, at Flushing, as the newspaper reporters flocked there on Tuesday last to view a number of the excellent films turned out by that company, and it was with pleasure and wonder that one of our staff sat through a series of some of the finest films on the market to-day.

There is a distinct individuality about the Gaumont film peculiar only to Gaumont. Each reel is a series of well-adapted pictures. The hand-colored film of the Gaumont is second to none, and is beautiful in the extreme. Another remarkable thing with regard to the Gaumont film is in many instances the beautifully artistic carrying out of a simple theme. This is in itself an art with which many firms are not thoroughly conversant. One of the things which we are so apt to forget in the manufacture of the moving picture is that each scene must be a distinct picture in itself in order to please the eye, else a sensation of dissatisfaction is realized, and a great deal of the pleasure due in the viewing of Gaumont pictures is due to the fact that this detail is well looked after.

Several of the Gaumont films have been reviewed by us in advance. One of these is "Heaven's Messenger," for release on February 3d, and as we have before said, is one of the most beautiful things on the market to-day.

AN INNOCENT GRAFTER

A Western Social Drama, Released February 15th by the American Film Manufacturing Company

Jack Burton's father having died he becomes the sole support of his mother. He is unable to find work until one day he meets a young man who points out to him an abandoned oil well and assures him that they can make it pay by selling stock to raise enough money to drill the well. Happily he returns to his mother and tells her the gladsome news, and soon with his young partner they are installed in an office selling stock. Money is raised and when Jack suggests that they start operations at the well his partner cooly informs him that they won't work the oil well but keep the money for larger investments.

His partner has caused his sweetheart's father to invest his all in the fraudulent well, but when Jack's mother comes in with her husband's insurance money Jack tells her not to pay. Thereupon the partner follows the old lady home and sells her stock in the amount of her insurance. When he returns to his office he receives a letter from a confidential friend informing him that the Federal authorities are going to investigate the business. He hastily pens a note telling Jack that the Government is after them and to clear out before there is trouble. In Jack's absence he takes all the money and deeds to the well and hurries to the depot. When Jack reaches his home his mother shows him she has spent her all in the concern and Jack is furious. Returning to the office seeking his partner he finds the letter and knows that what he feared is true. He finds his partner at the depot and forces him to return the money and the books of the concern, threatening to face the penitentiary for both unless he does. He decides to redeem all stock and hangs out a sign to that effect.

Stockholders seeing the sign become insane through fear of losing their little savings, and Jack in examining his books finds it will take all his savings and his mother's insurance to right the wrong. His mother is heartbroken, but approves his course. He prepares to make payments on the morrow. In the meantime the Government officials have investigated the well and found it a veritable geyser. The only trouble had been that it was tapped wrong. The detective explains to the excited stockholders and amid cheering they depart, hoping to be able to buy more of the stock.

And Jack has vindicated himself and finds he is immensely wealthy. With the love of his mother and his sweetheart he is a happy man, while his partner dodging the secret operatives of the Government, waits for a fast freight.

The photography is the kind that has made American productions conspicuous for their stereoscopic, clear-cut qualities. The picture is engaging as a story and has those ingredients of the successful film, the defrauding of an innocent character with the consequent retribution of the injuring parties, so popular with American audiences.

MOTHER'S OLD ARMCHAIR

Republic Release, February 10

REP Bess Franklin and her mother are living a quiet and simple life. Norman Wallace is deeply in love with Bess, and when he asks her for her hand in marriage she gives it gladly. After the wedding, when they are looking over the many gifts, they see the one Bess' mother has given them. It is an old-fashioned armchair that the mother has had since she was a bride herself. She has pinned a note on the chair, which reads: "When in trouble seek solace from the old armchair. It will never fail you; never part with it.—Mother." Norman and Bess agree it is the best gift of all. They move into a little home of their own and find great comfort in the old chair.

A little baby comes to bless their union. One day Norman rushes in greatly excited. He has inherited, through the death of an uncle, a large sum of money. They buy a new home and as Bess is arranging the furniture she has the old armchair placed near the fireplace, as in the old days. When Norman sees the plain old chair amidst the new and costly furniture it jars on his artistic sense and much against Bess' wishes he has it removed to the attic, forgetting how dear it is to her.

As years go on he succeeds in Wall Street, and the wealth he acquires turns his head. He becomes indifferent to Bess, and neglects her for his fast friends. When this happens Bess steals up to the attic and sits alone in the armchair, and thinks of her mother and the old, happy days. Norman becomes reckless and plunges in the stock market. Suddenly everything turns against him and he knows unless he can get to a friend's office in a few minutes and beg for a loan of a few thousand dollars all will be lost. He rushes madly from his office to the elevator just as the elevator boy is closing the door. He tries to force his way in. The elevator quickly descends and catches him, crushing his legs. The man is a cripple for life and he has lost his fortune.

They are compelled to sell their house and furniture. When the men come to carry away the household goods Bess is broken-hearted, but to hide her tears leaves the room. She thinks of the old armchair and goes to the attic. Her thoughts are of her mother, and as she opens the door in fancy she sees her mother sitting in the chair. The men come to the attic to see if there is anything there, and are going to remove the chair, but Bess pleads with them and they see it has no value, so let her keep it.

Bess and her family move to poor quarters. She tries to make a living, but is not successful—things go from bad to worse, her little boy is sick, and her husband is helpless. The landlord gives them two hours to pay the rent or go out of the room. In despair Bess kneels at the old armchair, which they have kept through all their troubles, and asks God to help her. She raises herself from the floor by putting her hands on the arm of the chair. It breaks, and in trying to repair it she discovers a chamois bag with a note on it, saying, "From your mother." She opens the bag and finds it full of money; enough to start them in life again. Bess has received her reward for sticking to the old armchair.

THE RECKONING

Republic Release, February 11

Frank Shields and some miners are working a placer mine, which is beginning to pan out some valuable dirt. Frank Shields, anxious to have his brother with him, writes a letter asking him to come North and work his claim with him. Bob receives his brother's letter and immediately sets out for the North. He encounters Bart Murray, a bully who insults him and a fight ensues. Bob is beaten by the bully and finally is killed by one of Bart's blows. The miners exonerate Bart.

Kate Shepard, the daughter of the Sheriff, rebukes Bart for his conduct, and as he is trying to force his suit on Kate this angers him further. The man that Frank has sent to the road house to bring Bob over the trail arrives and learns of Bob's death. He immediately returns and tells of his brother's fate. This news is heartrending to Frank, who vows vengeance on the man who took his brother's life. He arrives at the road house, and the first one he encounters is the man he is looking for. Not knowing his man, he allows him to get away from him, but is informed by Kate Shepard and her father of Bart's identity. The girl shows her power over Frank and is successful in restraining him from committing any rash deed. Bart since Bob's death has been leading a troublesome life; he tries to make a disturbance in the mess hall and is put out by Kate's father. Later he sees a messenger start across the hills with a package of money and decides to rob him. He meets the messenger and asks for a lift. The messenger allows him to take a position on the sled behind him.

Frank meets Kate, and together they come to the top of the hill; both realize the love they have for each other. Frank sees in the distance Bart getting on the sled and the killing of the messenger. Bart makes away with the money package.

Frank tells Kate to return to camp and warn the men and in the meantime he will take the trail of the murderer. Frank gets on the dog sled and goes down hill. He comes up to Bart, and an exciting chase ensues. Frank wounds Bart, causing him to drop his gun. He finally draws his sled alongside of Bart's and then ensues a wonderful battle, with the dogs running at full speed. Finally Frank is the victor and causes Bart to kill himself by his own weapon. Frank secures the stolen money and sinks on the sled exhausted. He is later picked up by the miners who took the trail after being notified by Kate. He is carried in the house and placed on a bunk, and under Kate's care he finally recovers from his injury and is rewarded by winning Kate for his wife.

THE TROUBLE-MAKER

Thanhouser Release, February 6

They were married at the little country church where they had worshipped all their lives, and were very happy, although they had no wealth, only youth, health and happiness. The wealth came later, for an almost forgotten mining venture turned out to be immensely profitable, and before they had time to realize it they were millionaires.

It was at the wife's plea that they moved to a fashionable suburban colony in the East, and she dreamed of the time when she would be a member of high society. The first thing to do, of course, was to find some one who would show her how to get inside the sacred portals, and she hired a social secretary, hoping that he would coach and educate her husband and herself, as well as be their sponsor with the "Four Hundred."

The young wife was happy in getting the secretary she wanted, a man of an old family, but much embarrassed financially. She studied her "society lessons" with zest and warmly welcomed the persons, more or less in society, who were brought to the house by the secretary.

The husband, on the other hand, did not find the new game either interesting or exciting, and showed it. He and his wife at first bickered mildly, then quarreled violently, and in time there was a divorce.

The secretary saw his way clear to a fortune. He made love to the divorcée, and she was flatered by his standing in the world of fashion. She agreed to marry him, and would have done so had it not been that his perfidy was made clear to herself, although unwittingly. Broken-hearted, the woman decided to go back to the village where she had once been so happy, and she did not even bid her faithless suitor good-by.

On the train, en route home, she entered the dining car and was given the only vacant seat, one at a table built for two. And across the way was her former husband, as much surprised as she was. For, as it later turned out, he, too, was going home.

When they first came to the city, full of joy and anticipation, they had eaten in a dining car, which the wife pronounced as "wonderful." Now they were again in one, but things were different. Still, it made them think of the other happier days and to wistfully wonder if they would ever have such times again.

The wife's visit being unexpected, there was no one to meet her at the depot, and she was forced to accept the invitation of her ex-husband to drive her home. Their way led them past the little church where they had been made man and wife, and the husband called her attention to it.

"We have both made mistakes; let's forget them and start afresh," he said, and the woman, who was really heart-sick and secretly sorry about the divorce, consented. So, hand in hand, they re-entered the church and were married all over again.

This time, however, they were very happy and remained so, for each had learned the lesson that a couple must not let money, or lack of it, divide them after marriage, and that mutual concessions and forbearances are needed if matrimony is to be a success.

are received, and in war times it is vitally important that the enemy should not be able to understand the orders that are flashing about. So important is it, that the volume is always well weighted with lead, so that in case of impending capture it can be dropped overboard and speedily sunk.

A foreign adventuress, received in New York society under the title she claims, "Countess," was really a foreign spy. Her accomplice, also presumably noble, saw a chance for her to win a signal code by fascinating a naval officer. He picked his victim with rare skill, for the man he selected speedily fell before the fascinations of the Countess, and soon believed that she was the dearest, sweetest woman in the world.

While the fleet was lying in New York Harbor, the Countess was invited by the naval officer to visit his ship. There she found a chance to see the signal code, and asked her admirer, as a proof of his love, to permit her to retain it until the next day. He refused, of course, but she laughingly slipped it into her handbag, and mingled with the other guests so that it was impossible for him to more than guardedly urge that she return it.

The young officer found himself in a perplexing situation. He did not want to publicly disgrace the girl he loved, and he foolishly believed that he could trust her. The girl left the ship with the book, promising to return it the next day, and dramatically informing him that "your honor is safe in my hands. Do you doubt it?"

He did not, and the adventuress escaped with her booty. Luckily for the young officer, it happened that her actions were observed by a sailor, his suspicions aroused by her conduct, and he determined to keep an eye on her.

One reason was that the sailor owed a debt of gratitude to the officer, who had aided him with money and sympathy when the sailor's child was dying. He followed the adventuress to her auto, crouched on the running board, out of her sight, and she unsuspectingly carried him to her rendezvous with her fellow conspirator.

The two, happy in their triumph, were off their guard for a moment. This gave the sailor a chance to make a quick substitution. They found it out later when they looked for the code book and found a brick.

The sailor returned the book to the young officer, thereby repaying his debt of gratitude. Later the fleet sailed away, her cipher messages still safe, and the secret of a gallant officer's weakness securely hidden in the breast of a grateful common sailor.

MRS. MATTHEWS, DRESSMAKER

Imp Release, February 8

John Matthews, a laborer, is afflicted with tuberculosis, but sticks manfully at his job until he literally dies in the harness, being stricken while at work. He is greatly beloved by his wife and child, and his death is a sad blow to them.

Prior to her marriage Mr. Matthews was an expert dressmaker, and she takes up the occupation again to support herself and daughter. She has a hard struggle to keep the wolf from the door, but works hard, cheered by the thought that she is earning a livelihood. She is patronized by the wealthy and makes a dress for Mrs. Baldwin, the wife of a rich broker. The dress is delivered, but Mrs. Baldwin does not pay her, as she claims she has been disappointed in not having the gown sooner. The widow is distracted, as she had depended on the money to pay her rent. The next day her child becomes ill and she sends to Mrs. Baldwin for the money, only to be refused again.

The child becomes worse, and a physician is summoned. He tells the mother the case is quite serious; gives her a prescription and leaves. She goes to a nearby pharmacy with fear and trembling; she has no money, but hopes to obtain credit. The medicine is compounded, but the clerk will not trust her, as he knows her circumstances. Watching her opportunity, she steals the bottle and leaves the store. Her act has been seen and her arrest follows quickly. She is being taken to the police station when Mr. Baldwin, the husband of the woman who is responsible for her predicament, makes inquiry. Mrs. Matthews, unaware of his identity, tells her story sobbingly. He is filled with remorse and immediately assists the widow to the end that she is released. He gives her money to buy food and medicines and his wife becomes interested in the case. They make amends in the most substantial manner, and the widow is grateful.

THE TEA INDUSTRY IN THE UNITED STATES

Imp Release, February 10

It is not generally known that the tea plant is cultivated in the United States. But such is the case. China and Ceylon, therefore, have a competitor in preparing the leaf for the cup that cheers but does not inebriate.

This interesting fact is illustrated in the film under notice. Down in Summerville S. C., where the tea plant is cultivated so successfully that the product is marketed at a profit, the plat is grown both in the open and under cover; all the operations of weeding, pruning, cutting, sorting and packing are shown, and the picture gives one a vivid idea of what is necessary, in the manipulative sense, for the cultivation. The old way of cutting the tea leaves was by hand; the film illustrates a machine, resembling a reaper, doing the work.

On the same reel:

WHO WEARS THEM?

There is no doubt that domestic work palled upon Harry French. He hated the job of helping his young wife pack their belongings preparatory to moving from their Harlem flat. But Mrs. French was inexorable; she kept Harry hard at work.

But he intended escaping petticoat thraldon for a time. In the apartment below there was a card game threatening and Harry determined to make one. So he feigned madness, alarmed his wife and made his escape. Joining the party, he won largely and was happy in his success.

Mrs. French got wind of Harry's whereabouts and surprised him in the act of deception. When he returned laden with the spoil he was greeted with a broomstick attack, deprived of his winnings, physically sat upon and informed that his better half "wore them."

THE HELPING HAND

Imp Release, February 5

John Clinton, an old mechanic, who is struggling to support his wife and pay off a mortgage on his little home, meets with a sad blow. He is discharged from a job he has held for years for the reason that he has reported too late for work. He returns home and breaks the sad news to his wife, who is greatly grieved. To add to their misery, the man who holds the mortgage calls and insists on a payment, an instalment being due. There is a deficit of $20 in the family exchequer for the payment of the claim.

Clinton reads in a newspaper an account of a man who has sold his body to a medical society to be delivered after his demise. He conceives the idea of raising money that way, but his proposition is not regarded favorably when he broaches the subject to the superintendent of a medical college. He abandons hope and wanders aimlessly about.

When, passing a handsome residence from which two richly dressed women emerge and enter an automobile, he discovers a bag well filled with coin which one drops. He does not hesitate a moment, but immediately gives chase to the car. In the meantime the loss of the money is noted and the women return in search of it. They meet John on the road and he surrenders the bag to the owner. She is delighted over the recovery and rewards him by bestowing upon him a bill of large denomination. He is now happy to think he can pay the instalment and hastens home to share the good news with his wife.

Walking through the park, he sits down on a bench to rest. This bench is under a tree, and a park employee is in the branches pruning them. Thugs see the old man counting the money and spring upon him. In the struggle he drops the wallet on the bench beside him. The employee sees the fight and the wallet, and with his long shears reaches down and picks it up. The old man overpowered, the thugs look for the purse to find it gone. They disappear after giving John a parting blow.

The man in the tree drops the purse near Clinton and he finds it—surprised and delighted. The instalment on the mortgage is paid and the old man is in ignorance of the hand that assisted him in his hour of need.

AN INNOCENT GRAFTER

American Release, February 15

Jack Burton's father having died, he becomes the sole support of his mother. He is unable to find work until one day he meets a young man who points out to him an abandoned oil well and assures him that they can make it pay by selling stock to raise enough money to drill the well. Happily he returns to his mother and tells her the gladsome news and soon with his young partner they are installed in an office selling stock. Money is raised and when Jack suggests that they start operations at the well his partner coolly informs him that they won't work the oil well but keep the money for larger investments.

His partner has caused his sweetheart's father to invest his all in the fraudulent well but when Jack's mother comes in with her husband's insurance money Jack tells her not to pay. Thereupon the partner follows the old lady home and sells her stock in the amount of her insurance. When he returns to his office he receives a letter from a confidential friend informing him that the Federal authorities are going to investigate the business. He hastily pens a note telling Jack that the Government is after them and to clear out before there is trouble. In Jack's absence he takes all the money and deeds to the well and hurries to the depot. When Jack reaches his home his mother shows him she has spent her all in the concern and Jack is furious. Returning to the office seeking his partner he finds the letter and knows that what he feared is true. He finds his partner at the depot and forces him to return the money and the books of the concern, threatening to face the penitentiary for both unless he does. He decides to redeem all stock and hangs out a sign to that effect.

Stockholders seeing the sign become insane through fear of losing their little savings and Jack in examining his books finds it will take all his savings and his mother's insurance to right the wrong. His mother is heartbroken but approves his course. He prepares to make payments on the morrow. In the meantime the government officials have investigated the well and found it a veritable geyser. The only trouble had been that it was tapped wrong. The detective explains to the excited stockholders and amid cheering they depart hoping to be able to buy more of the stock.

And Jack has vindicated himself and finds he is immensely wealthy. With the love of his mother and his sweetheart, he is a happy man, while his partner, dodging the secret operatives of the Government, waits for a fast freight.

LUCKY MAN

Majestic Release, February 2

Mr. D. Willoughby Smith insists upon the masculine prerogative of free and unlimited use of the latch key, at the same time gently but firmly assuring his wife that feminine happiness is best conserved within the confines of the home.

A very late 'phone call summons Smith to his club to join a party of business acquaintances and Mrs. Smith, despite her protests, is left to gaze upon her own fair reflection in the mirror, twiddle her thumbs or some other equally diverting feminine diversion.

She decides to try and forget her troubles in sleep and discontentedly snuggles into the pillows murmuring a heartfelt wish that she were a man.

She wakes up with a start and then yawns and pauses with her mouth wide open, not in a weary yawn, but in amazed horror—her hand goes to her once soft little chin—it is bearded, she flies to her mirror and perceives that she is the possessor of a well-grown mustache and vandyke.

Her opportunity has come—reckoning not the consequences she dons a suit of her husband's clothes and then comes a series of adventures common enough to the long-suffering masculine sex but decidedly strange to Mrs. Smith, who meets with one calamity after another until finally really awakening in her own little bed, aroused by the noise of her husband's entrance, she realizes with joy that she is still in all respects just a woman. On the same reel:

AN OLD LADY OF TWENTY

Florence Davis has answered a hurry call that brings her to New York to prepare for rehearsals for the leading part in "An Old Lady of Twenty," a new play to be produced in the near future.

She rents an apartment in a studio building, and is no sooner installed in her new quarters than she at once begins to study the make-up for her new part. In the adjoining apartment Mr. Robert Armitage, a young artist, who has already made his mark in the world, is hanging on the wall some of his latest efforts. He pounds a nail through the wall with more zeal than discretion, and on the other side a shower of plaster falls upon Flo, seated before her mirror, engaged in putting on the last touches of her make-up. She naturally screams in terror, and Armitage, hearing the scream on the other side of the wall, realizes what has happened. He proceeds to the next apartment to make apology, and, after doing so, involuntarily exclaims what a "dear old lady." Flo, who has reached the mature age of twenty, conceals her amusement at the effect of her successful make-up, and courteously bows her thanks for the compliment.

Armitage begs that she allow him to make a sketch of her in her quaint costume, and she consents—and for many days the couple are thrown together while the painting progresses. Flo is careful never to let him see her without her make-up, and he becomes very fond indeed of the "dear old lady," who takes such a motherly interest in him.

The time has come when Flo wishes to see what effect her appearance in proper person will have upon the young artist. She sends him a note by the landlady to the effect that her daughter is coming to town, and as she has an important engagement she would like him to take care of the little girl until she returns.

An hour later Armitage hears a knock on the door in the next apartment, and he goes into the hall and is confronted by a dainty vision of youthful loveliness. His surmise that it is "the dear old lady's" daughter is confirmed, and he shows the girl her mother's note. She expresses pleasure at meeting him, and tells him that her mother has written her much about him. She then asks him if he will take her to Macey's as she wishes to do some shopping. He consents, as indeed he would have consented to do anything. Once in the store, however, she gives him the slip and returns to her room and gets into her make-up as the old lady.

Armitage in the meantime has been in despair, thinking the girl has been lost, and returns to tell her mother the sad news. She tells him that her daughter has returned, and is in the next room resting.

He is struck by the resemblance of mother and daughter, and asks for the privilege of making a companion portrait of her daughter. She consents, and Armitage loses sight of his "dear old lady" for a few days while making a portrait of a "very dear young lady." The daughter becomes so dear to him that when the portrait is finished he asks her to marry him. She demurs and tells him that he must ask her mother's consent, and he waits while she goes to fetch the old lady. A quick change is made, and mother sternly tells the young artist that her daughter is altogether too young to marry. He pleads in vain and finally sinks down in despair.

Flo perceives that his emotion is genuine, takes off her wig and tells him to look—he does so. His moment of despair turns to joy as she goes into his arms and explains the trick that she has been playing on him. She names an early date for the wedding, and sends a wire to her manager, stating that she must give up her part in "An Old Lady of Twenty," as she has just been engaged to play the leading part in "Just a Wife."

A GAME FOR TWO

Majestic Release, February 4

A husband who absorbs himself unduly in his work is ever a prolific source of marital complication.

John Hartman, a most learned writer on subjects far beyond the ken of his wife, further aggravates matters by collaborating with a "blue stocking," whose physical attributes do not conform with the usual unattractive feminine picture the term suggests.

The collaborator is Mrs. DeWitt Turner, a widow of mentality, whose literary work appeals strongly to Hartman, and who does not hesitate to use every means to stay time's marring finger upon her complexion and figure; in other words, the widow is something of an artist in more ways than one.

Hartman's wife is not at all unaware of the widow's semblance of attractiveness, and resents very bitterly the hours her husband spends over his collaboration. Remonstrance is in vain, however, for Hartman looks upon his wife as a child, and pats and indulges her where reasoning would be far more effective.

The last straw is laid upon his wife's delicate shoulders when he breaks an opera engagement at the sudden call of the widow, who has a bad habit of receiving sudden inspirations at very uncomfortable times for Hartman's wife, to the care of a young bachelor, that she may not lose her evening at the opera. Smithers, the bachelor, is an easy-going young fellow, without a trace of harm in his make-up, and Bess decides that the time is ripe and the conditions favorable to give her complacent husband a severe jolt. Despite Smithers' ineffectual protest and resistance, Bess fairly forces the young fellow to allow her to have supper after the opera in his apartment, unchaperoned, but unknown to Smithers leaves a note for her husband which he received upon his late return, telling her intention to sup with his friend Smithers, and that if he is a wise husband he will call for her. Now Hartman, despite his literary absorption, is only human, and he remembers with a sinking heart that Smithers is a rather attractive young fellow, and, moreover, has a reputation of being rather "a devil of a fellow with the ladies." Smithers, who does not at all deserve the reputation, passes the most uncomfortable hour of his life at the little supper for two in his apartment, while Bess—feeling thoroughly secure—is gleefully anticipating anything that may happen.

The results are beyond her wildest hopes. Her husband—inflamed by jealousy—attempts to force his way past the hallboys in the building, and Smithers—in fear of meeting him, and unable to beat a safer retreat—makes a hurried departure by the fire-escape.

Now Smithers' apartment—as luck will have it—is in the same building as the widow's. They are separated only by a wall, and the at times fair "blue stocking"—innocent of cosmetics, and other artificial aids to beauty—is preparing to retire for the night, and rather exulting over the uneasiness, which she infers her evening with Hartman has inflicted upon Bess. In a most unattractive attire, she is about to raise her window when she beholds a man's face peering through the glass. Without waiting to investigate, she flies into the hall and beats upon the door of the next apartment, crying for help. Bess, who has locked Smithers out on the fire-escape, lets her in, and the widow retreats into a clothes closet before the sudden entrance of Hartman, who has at last succeeded in forcing his way into the apartment. Without a word of reproach to his wife, Hartman seeks Smithers, thirsty for the blood of the friend who has led his wife into a compromising situation. The search leads to the kitchenette, and Bess triumphantly locks him into that 2 x 4 room, and then, performing a like service for the widow in a stuffy clothes closet, and Hartman attempting to sleep on an ironing board, pass a pleasant night until the return of Smithers' valet in the morning, who releases them all, to the consternation of the widow that the man she has been angling for should see her in such a condition, and the terror of Smithers, who is able to hide, however, until the irate husband departs.

Hartman returns to his home, and finds his wife's room has evidently not been occupied. Unable to comprehend what it all means, but only feeling that his heart is broken at the thought that Bess has left him for that infernal Smithers, he goes to

WIDOW WINKS

Nestor Release, January 29

Widow Winks has set her cap for Deacon Blinks. She is determined to annex his name. Deacon Blinks is equally determined to espouse the obliging widow. Willie Winks is just as determined to do everything possible to kill the aspirations of the elderly Romeo and the heart palpitations of the mature Juliet.

With Willie constantly on the job, the deacon gets all that's coming to him. The widow, too, is not forgotten by her impish offspring, and goes through a rigid ordeal. Willie's pranks, however, fail to shake the determination of the seasoned lovers, who swear to be true to one another forever and ever.

On the same reel:

RAVAGES OF A FIFTEEN MILLION-DOLLAR FIRE

The onlooker is taken to Broadway and Wall street, New York City, and views the Equitable Building, still burning. The entrance to building is shown in arctic attire; also striking views of northeast corner (location of deposit vaults containing nearly two billions of dollars), are seen in all their rigid and majestic grandeur. The spectator is then taken to the top of the Trinity Building, also the highest point of vantage of the U. S. Realty Building, and from thence he looks down upon the smouldering ruins.

THE MAN FROM THE FOOT-HILLS

Nestor Release, January 31

Tom Evans is out of work—his wife Jennie is sick. He goes to a ranch to get work. There, through the help of one of the cowboys, he obtains work, but being out of supplies, goes to the ranchman the next morning and asks for a small loan. The ranchman invites him inside, and, out of the safe, willingly gives him part of his month's salary.

Jim Hoover, the foreman, has gambled and lost. He also comes to ask advance salary. Neither Tom nor the ranchman observe his entrance. Jim sees the open safe and slips behind a bookcase. Tom exits with the money the ranchman has given him, but in his hurry to get home with it, leaves his coat on the chair. The foreman snatches up the coat, and as the ranchman, Col. Foster, is closing the safe, he throws the coat over the ranchman's neck, tying the sleeves—takes the money from the safe and runs out.

Tom hears the noise from the outside, and turns just as Jim comes out. He sees the bag of gold—holds Jim up with his gun and commands him to drop it. He obeys and runs, and as Tom picks it up, the ranchman rushes out, sees Tom with the gold, and, not having seen who took the money, accuses Tom, who protests his innocence. The cowboys do not believe him. The foreman, seeing how things are going, returns and Tom accuses him. They quarrel. Tom finally shoots the foreman in anger, and then mounts his horse and rides away, followed by the boys. They eventually capture him, and bring him back to the ranch.

In the meanwhile his friend at the ranch has gone to Jennie, found she needs a doctor, has gone for one, and then brought him to the ranch to see the wounded foreman, and also to get the foreman's wife to go to Jennie. The friend tells the doctor to make the foreman believe he is dying, and he may then confess the theft. The doctor does so—and Jim confesses. The physician then returns to Jennie, and later, as the boys bring up Tom and the ranchman, shows them the confession of the foreman. Tom's friend returns from his cabin and brings the following note from the doctor: "It's a boy, and weighs nine pounds. Both doing fine. —Dr. Thorpe."

Ranchman and boys congratulate and ask his pardon.

from the drum's interior attracts the captain's attention, who promptly investigates, and rushes troops to Claude's rescue. They arrive just in the nick of time, and Desmond is obliged to surrender.

On learning of his chief's capture, Gomgotz quickly gathers all his savages, and starts in pursuit of the scouts. After a sharp skirmish, Gomgotz realizes the superior fighting strength of the enemy, and resorts to foul means. Attaching a telephone apparatus to a kite, he sends it in the direction of the soldiers. Claude and Rosamond, busy with the kite, fail to notice the telephone which Desmond makes good use of, telling Gomgotz that the troops are without ammunition. The wild men, therefore, make an energetic attack, put the soldiers to flight, save Desmond and capture the lovers.

Rosamond refuses to marry the villain, and poor Claude must suffer. He is lowered into a hole, buried up to his neck, and left there to perish with a house placed over his head. Rosamond, womanlike, faints, and is led away.

The lone house lures some bandits, who convert it into a deposit vault. In counting their gold, a coin drops and disappears through a crack in the floor. They look for it and—Claude is unearthed. After telling his story, the good-hearted robbers give him a rifle and, thus armed, Claude goes in search of his beloved. He finds her tied to a tree, and, while Desmond hobnobs with Gomgotz, Claude releases Rosamond, and both dash away, mounted upon fiery steeds. Desmond quickly gives chase, but in the jungle Brutto, the big gorilla, decides to aid the lovers by striking the villain on the coco with a cocoanut. Desmond takes the count, and Claude has no trouble in making him prisoner. At the barracks, the cigarette-smoking fiend is tied to the cannon's mouth, preparatory to getting a blowing finish. Just as the order to "fire" is given, the lovers embrace and goo-goo at one another. Curses on the luck!

AVIATOR AND AUTOIST'S RACE FOR A BRIDE

Champion Release, February 5

William Crane is a reckless and fearless autoist, who has lots of admirers, among whom Bertha Monroe is the chiefest. The remarkable incidents of this story begin when the tall and handsome Crane calls on Bertha for a spin in his machine. Bertha's mother, knowing Crane's reckless proclivities, is averse to her daughter's acceptance, but Bertha is possessed of her own will, and joyfully accepts. Thus they speed away.

Now, the terminus of their drive found them at the Aviation Field, where a number of flying men held forth. Among these was the daredevil Lee Hammond himself. Lee was a great admirer of Bertha Monroe, and his eyes lit up with pleasure when he perceived her; and as quickly darkened at the sight of her companion, Will Crane. Lee knew Miss Monroe's daring spirit, and his quickly given invitation to her for a flight was readily accepted by her. Before Crane realized what had happened, she was up in the air.

In impotent rage he dashed after them in his auto, but he soon came to grief, and was compelled to alight to tinker with the jarred mechanism. Hammond also alighted so that he might also pay his attentions to his fair companion, which he performed in a very pretty love scene. Soon, however, Crane was rushing on the scene, and what might have proved a tragic ending was averted by the clever girl who was the innocent cause of it. And she did this by simply proposing that the matter or question of right to her be settled by a race.

And so the race came off, the Aviation Field being selected for the unique trial between Crane and Hammond. The beautiful girl was the judge. Then both machines, aero and auto, leaped forward like things alive, at terrific speed. What a contest! The aeroplane, dipping dangerously in advance of the speeding auto, which races fairly in the air. The whir, whir of the flying machine grew louder and louder, and once again it swooped down in the lead of the auto, which groaned, puffed and snorted to maintain its place.

At last the stamina of the thing of the air begins to count. The last lap had been made in a sensational flight; then came a startling culmination. The man-bird swooped down where the fair judge was standing, and the life and soul of the bird, Lee Hammond, reached out, clutched her, and bore her triumphantly aloft; his great prize nobly won by him in His Race for a Bride.

A DIVIDED FAMILY

Champion Release, February 7

Just as the previous Champ pictures pointed out a comprehensive moral, so does this story teach us a lesson—a lesson of harmony and unity in the home. Arthur Gleason is the spoiled child of his mother—his every whim being catered to. The reprimands of his father fall on deaf ears. In fact, deep resentment possesses him when his father takes him to task. The mother flies to the aid of the son, a big scene occurs, and the result is the boy leaves home and the parents separate; separate with bitterness in their hearts.

The boy goes to sea. The father changes his name, and throws himself, heart and soul, into his profession—the law. We next see the poor, wretched mother as a housekeeper in a wealthy home of aged people, where the old man is a roue of the deepest dye. Thus is the life of Mrs. Gleason made more wretched, the attentions of this old scoundrel being horribly disgusting to her. The antiquated wife of this roue becomes foolishly jealous, and is blind to the fact of Mrs. Gleason's innocence.

Thus, one day, when she comes upon the husband forcing his unwelcome attentions on the housekeeper, she flies into a terrible passion and attacks the woman. The result is, the poor creature, defending herself against the attack, chokes the ancient dame into unconsciousness, believing she has killed her.

The son returns to his old home, only to find strangers installed there. This is a sad scene. The young man has now given up the sea and joins the police force. It comes about that his mother is arrested and brought into his station. Think of the recognition in this scene. Then he goes forth to find a lawyer to save his mother from the charge of this heinous crime. Now, the lawyer he has been sent to is one of the best at the bar in criminal cases. But when he finds him it turns out to be his own father.

Therefore, you may be assured another great scene is the result of the meeting. The court scene presents a wonderful picture of human nature. With all due gravity and dignity the trial is gone through with. The just verdict is returned, and the unfortunate mother is now made happy. Well, a happy reconciliation is finally brought about, and father, mother and son are again brought together in a brighter and happier sphere.

CALINO AND HIS BOARDER

Gaumont Release, February 13

The genial Calino decides to take a boarder. The gentleman turns out to be a huntsman of ultra cantankerous propensities. All goes well till pay-day, when the roomer refuses to get out of bed to pay his bill.

NEW BUSINESS

And plenty of it this year for the

"HALLBERG ECONOMIZER"

But the most gratifying endorsement is that of exhibitors who have been using "THE HALLBERG" for years; when they open new theaters no other current saver will do. This tells the story. The "imitations" are cheaper only in first cost. You must pay a little more for the best, but you will soon be repaid by "THE HALLBERG" not only in saving on electric bills but in the brilliancy of your pictures and satisfaction to your patrons. If you have any doubts, write to me and I will give you the names of exhibitors in your neighborhood and you can soon convince yourself.

He informs Calino that his pocketbook is in one of his trunks in the garret. Up goes the anxious Calino and his officious mother and sister, only to find, upon ransacking each trunk a furious bloodthirsty African lion emerges. The hungry beasts pursue the trio in full haste, and the complications and situations encountered are unusually comical. Of course, poor Calino never makes the hoped-for collection.

On the same reel:

ZIGOTO, KING OF DETECTIVES

Everybody behind the scenes is busy making up the clever little danseuse. Midst her hustle to get ready, she has time, however, to receive a valuable necklace from her stage-johnny English lord admirer. In her excitement to respond to her cue, she rushes from the room, dropping her pearls in an undergarment. She returns to find, to her alarm, that the jewels have disappeared. She consults the aid and ability of the famous detective, Zigoto. This noted sleuth commissions his two cleverest subordinates, Detectives Fuzzle and Summer. The mysterious comedians respond to the obligations placed upon them, the former by taking a most serene nap, on a bench under a side window of the theater, the other by uprooting everything and person in his search for the coveted necklace. In the meantime the lord buys the actress an exact duplicate. Summer spies him, mistakes him for the thief, leads him as prisoner to the detective bureau. In the meantime Fuzzle is rudely awakened by a thump in his hat. Upon investigating the cause, he finds the necklace which had been dropped from above as the maid was shaking out the ill-fated undergarment. With his prize in hand, he also reports to the bureau, arriving simultaneously with his comrade. Surprise, joy, humiliation, all, ensue.

FIRE AT THE MINE

Gaumont Release, February 17

A tale of two rivals for the same girl's heart—the loser, a noble fellow who later sacrifices his life in order to save that of his former rival. Both are colliers in the same mine, and pursue their lives, one with the happiness of the girl he loves, the other alone with his aged mother. One day a fire breaks out in the mine, and all but one of the miners make their escape up the elevator ascents to safety. The lone, remaining collier is found to be the husband of the young wife. She becomes hysterical, and pleads with some of the fortunate miners to rescue her loved one—no one but the former rival and a second volunteer undertake the task. The husband is saved, but the heroic rival forfeits his life. The loss is grievously bemourned, and all join the common cause of paying homage to the martyr. His aged mother is adopted by the man whom her son saved from a charred grave.

THE GAMBLERS' WIFE

George Kleine's Eclipse Release, of February 14

Fourtier, an artist, is easily induced by a friend to gamble, and soon neglects everything else to gain riches by courting the favor of Dame Fortune.

His faithful wife and good friend Joubert, try in vain to get him to return to his work.

Accidentally, however, Joubert overhears a conversation between the artist and his associates who have struck an infalible system for winning at "roulette." The faithful fellow gives instructions to Mrs. Fourtier, who, that evening disguised as a man, plays the game and breaks the bank.

Fourtier is financially ruined and is greatly discouraged. His wife eagerly pays his debts, however, and then finds her husband in time to prevent him from committing suicide.

Later, they repair to the studio with the faithful Joubert. Moved by his wife's devotion and the kindness of his friend Fourtier asks forgiveness and promises never to gamble again.

THE FIXER FIXED

Solax Release, January 31

Percy, a hall-room, gets a crush on his neighbor, an artist. Although Percy is wealthy in emotion, he is poor indeed in worldly possessions. He is about to commit suicide when he receives a letter from a wealthy cousin that he is about to visit him.

The cousin comes, and when he meets Percy's neighbor, he becomes a worshipper at her shrine. Percy, with an eye for business, tells his cousin he can fix things up. The rich cousin is grey-eyed, and supplies Percy with the "wherewithal."

Percy gets on the job, but, instead of working his cousin's game, works his own game. The cousin begins to suspect that he is being double-crossed, and starts out on his own hook. His captivating personality is too much for the little artist, and she succumbs to his charms.

GUILTY CONSCIENCE

Solax Release, February 7

Mr. and Mrs. Wise dine at a restaurant. The weather is inclement, and Mr. Wise, having had sufficient experience in New York cafes, decides to attach a label to his umbrella, stating that the man who owns it weighs 300 pounds and can lick anything from an elephant to a laughing hyena.

In spite of this precaution, Mr. Wise's umbrella is stolen, and he and his wife take the foot-line. They are naturally drenched.

It occurs to humorous Mrs. Wise to advertise as a joke that the person who stole Mr. Wise's umbrella will be arrested and punished. The next day the Wise household is just flooded with all kinds of umbrellas. People came from all directions and stealthily dumped their umbrellas into the Wise backyard. The man who really stole the umbrella sent this note: "The man who stole your umbrella can run sixty miles a minute."

THE SNOWMAN

Solax Release, February 4

Children play in the snow and build a snow man. Along comes a bully, and, after bullying the children, decides to demolish the snow figure. The bully then walks off, satisfied with the mischief he had done.

After interfering with the fun of other children, the bully sits down to rest. His thoughts begin to wander. He imagines that the demolished snow man has come to life. The animated snow man tries to grip him, but the bully is agile. He takes to his heels. The snow man gives chase. After running on indefinitely for miles and miles, the bully is caught. The snow man rolls him up in a huge snowball and sends him rolling down a steep abyss.

The bully gets up with a start as he finds he has been soaked with a snowball. He laughs. He goes back to the kids he had bullied and helps them to patch up their broken snow man.

MIGNON

Solax Release, February 2

The story of Mignon is as fascinating as it is rhythmical. Mignon, the daughter of noble parents, is stolen, when a child, by a band of gypsies. Her mother dies from grief, and her father, almost deprived of reason, gives up his ancestral home for the roaming life of a minstrel. He wanders from place to place in search of his child.

Mignon grows up without knowing her antecedents. She is ill-treated by the gypsies, until her liberty is purchased by Guglielno, a traveling student. She falls in love with her rescuer, but he is allured by the seductive charms of Filina, an actress.

Events come to a most thrilling climax at a castle where a grand fete takes place, and where Filina is the lioness of the occasion. Guglielno's attentions to her enrages the untutored mind of Mignon into a frenzy of jealousy. She is about to commit suicide when the soothing notes of a harp, played by an unseen hand outside stops her. Lotario, her father, appears, and she confides in the minstrel, and implores his advice and protection. The half-crazed minstrel is carried away by the girl's story, and sets fire to the castle.

This rash act is almost wrought with fatal consequences for Mignon. But it is the means of bringing father and daughter together, and of opening the eyes of Guglielno to the affection which Mignon has for him.

VENGEANCE VS. LOVE

Great Northern Release, February 3

The story opens in the private room of a Russian public benefactor who has been arrested by order of Count Alexis on a capital charge. His wife is praying for his safety before a cast of the Virgin Mary, and she turns away and sinks into a chair prostrated with grief. There she is found by her son Paul, who attempts to console her. A maid servant hands him a sealed packet which he opens, and is horror-stricken to find it is a note from the secret society of which his father is a member, intimating that his parent has been shot by order of Prince Alexis. The shock also kills the mother. Paul vows to be avenged on the Count, and to this end seeks the aid of the secret society. The president gives him a revolver, and with another member, accompanies him to a hotel, where the Count and his daughter Lonja, have just arrived. Paul, seeing Lonja, is struck by her beauty, and coming upon her whilst she is leaning over a rustic bridge feeding the swan, he declares his affection, and the bond is sealed with a kiss. Later, on the some evening, the two members of the secret society are introduced to the Count, to whom they humbly bow, though inwardly raining maledictions upon his head. They discover that unforeseen complications have arisen in their plan, which bid fair to knock their plot upon the head, inasmuch as Paul is in love with Lonja, with whom he dances during the evening. The anarchists remind him of his vow, and this he promises not to forget. He goes in search of Lonja and succeeds in finding her alone, but his fellow-conspirator calls him away. She, thinking something is amiss, follows, and overhears the details of the attempt to be made on her father's life. She returns to her desk, and writes a note to Paul requesting his presence in the concert room. Thither he goes and she tries to keep him until after midnight, when the crime is to be carried out, but he sees the hour is approaching and slips from the room, making his way to the door of the Count's bedroom. Meanwhile, Lonja has discovered his absence and follows, determined to prevent bloodshed. Paul opens the door and creeps inside, after contemplating his sleeping enemy, raises his weapon, and is about to shoot, when his arm is knocked up by Lonja, who thus saves her father's life. Paul rushes from the room, and after telling his companions that the plot has failed, determines to commit suicide. Meanwhile, Lonja pleads for her lover's life, and in this she is successful. Then leaving her father, she goes in search of Paul, whom she finds about to put a bullet through his brain. Again she prevents loss of life, and entirely repentant, Paul, his face in her lap, embarks on a new life.

THE NURSE

Powers Release, January 27 changed to February 6

There is an old saying which tells us that we cannot know people fully well until we have lived under the same roof with them.

If the wife in this story had known it, she might never have entertained the friend who came to visit her; for it is this same friend, the chum of girlhood days, who opens the first chapter of an intrigue which wrecks the happy home. But there is a Providence which presides over such matters and which in this case sends a representative to earth, so to speak. This envoy is a little daughter of the couple through whom fate pulls her strings in such a way that before the picture is finished her little arms are drawing her separated parents together into loving embrace.

The part of the little girl in this picture is played by Juliet Shelby, a wonderful child who has scored such a magnificent success with William and Dustin Farnum in the "Littlest Rebel."

A WAITER OF WEIGHT

Powers Release, February 10

We would not so much despise the titled foreigners who come to this country in search of marriageable fortunes if the parents of the daughters were not themselves so foolish in taking the chances they do. So disgusting is the persistency of the newly-rich in the hunt for title that the average man is satisfied when he hears of a case where the hunter is stung.

And stung they are, very often. This picture shows what a waiter with a Bordeaux twang can do in the marrying line, and he almost proves living argument that clothes make the man—that is, so far as the parents of the girl are concerned. There's a young artist on the courtship job, however, and he not only sees through the waiter's clever scheme, but schemes a niftier scheme to beat him to it—and he does. The waiter loses all his weight with the family.

THE DEFENDER OF THE NAME

Rex Release, Sunday, January 28

Joan of Arc was not the first of the daughters of Eve to forget her sex and its frailty and accomplish a man's task. The feminine of hero was created with the birth of the species and will live as long as this earth revolves. So for a tale of feminine courage, feminine heroism, feminine honor and weak feminine strength.

John Potter is the son of one of the most distinguished families in Old Virginia. As far back as the record of his ancestry is written, it is a tale of courageous deeds, of brave men and true women. Never a stain or blot have rested on the family escutcheon, and the family pride is strong in its honor.

The stirring news that Sumter has been fired upon volleys its pregnant purport into the homes of the South. Impulsively, and in the enthusiasm of the moment, John volunteers to serve.

The Union forces, moving from Washington, threaten the Confederate Army, and only a knowledge of their plans will save it. The mission to secure these plans is delicate and dangerous, and its accomplishment means signal honors and the gratitude of his people to the one who brings it about. . . . John is assigned the perilous and paramount task.

In the red rays of the dying sun, disguised as a Union soldier, John starts on his mission in high hopes and a giant determination to succeed. As he steals through the Union lines he comes upon a squad of Union soldiers, and in their midst a Confederate, a spy. A sharp order, and from the barrels of twelve guns the prisoner's punishment, or justice, or whatever in God's world man can call it, is meted out to him. Like a blow, it dawns upon John that, if detected, that would be his fate. His heart stops, the red of his determination pales into a white fear; the bravery, the honor, the sterling record of his line, his great mission and its hope of saving the honor and the cause—all are forgot; and he turns toward the Confederate lines, flying, a craven and a coward. He runs to his home, and bursts in upon his sister, who alone is awake. A few brief words and she knows all, and from her trembling lips comes the word that had never before been applied to a member of her family—"Coward!" The boy, desperate in his shame, runs into another room; there is a muffled shot, a thin wreath of smoke tells its grim tale, and the girl realizes that the young life which within a few hours had come to such a miserable climax is ended.

In horror and desperation, she thinks of the morrow and its disgrace, when all the world would know the ignoble act of the weak boy. Then—her plan is formed. She knows the boy's mission and its end; she determines to accomplish it—and flies out into the night.

. . . God lets her succeed. The plans in her possession, she is safe again in the home where her brother lies. With the strength given her by her dormant resolve to save the family honor, she drags the body of her brother to the outposts of the Confederate lines and places the dead form with the papers in his hands. Then, a weak woman again, she staggers off toward the old home.

The sentries find a Confederate spy who had been wounded to death in the Union lines but had escaped to just within the Confederate outposts before he fell dead. None have known, none will ever know. The boy is tendered a hero's burial and a hero's tributes. And only a girl ever sits, with a grave and meditative face, thinking of the secret dead with the dead!

FINE FEATHERS

Rex Release, February 1

Fine birds are very often the result and the product of fine feathers. If any old common or garden variety of hen were decorated with the peacock's colors, it would presumably parade about with all the gusto and glory of that aristocratic bird, nor would many distinguish its true identity. The same rule applies to the famous human race. The world hasn't changed in a short time like several million years. It's the same to-day as it was when Eve bought her first spring suit. The author of nature made it so, and the years cannot alter the breed called us.

Arthur Vaughn, a rising young artist, steps into a cobbler's shop to "save his sole," and sees there a girl, the daughter of the cobbler, with a wistful, wondering look in her eyes, and a hungry, yearning smile on her lips, from whose beauty of face and grace of form her rags and the sordid signs of tedious toil could not detract. The cobbler is an habitual drunkard, and the artist's heart goes out in sympathy to the pensive, dreaming girl. He tells her to leave the squalor of her surroundings and offers her work in his studio. The girl gratefully accepts.

One day while the artist is idly sketching fleeting figures on the canvas, he sees in the girl's face a thing of peculiar wonder and beauty, an expression of sweet sadness merged with the hope of youthful years; her lips smiling with sorrow and a distant but distinct scorn; her eyes filled with mist and her face with mystery. The artist sees in the baffling paradox of her expression an overwhelming inspiration, and he paints her as she stands, in her regal rags and the proud scorn of her youth. Some of the expression, some of its wonder and appeal, take form in the colors, and the idiosyncrasy of face and dress is striking and startling. It is pronounced a master work.

But the girl secretly resents his translation of a queen's pride in a beggar's garb and one day dons the satins and silks of the models, and bids him paint her in those raiments, the heritage of her beauty and the right of her youth. His trained eye notes the distant contrast, observes how the subtle suggestion of the silks enhances the charm of her face, and he paints her in fine feathers.

The portraits, with their contrast and realism, are masterpieces, and quickly establish the artist's reputation. At an exhibition of the Art League, critics are unanimous and emphatic in their commendation of the work. It attracts the attention of the president of the league, who becomes curious to know the model. He meets her, and impressed by her sweet sincerity, exhorts her to leave the life she is leading and the sin and shame of her associations. The girl ponders his advice, sees the truth of it and the tearful trend of her life and . . . asks the artist to marry her. He tells her he cannot.

The girl, resolved to return to a life of honor, accepts her only alternative, and returns to her miserable home. Then it is that the dawn breaks, and the artist's heart receives the message. In her absence, he realizes that he really loves the girl, and goes to seek her amid the squalor of the cobbler's shop. He enters in time to frustrate the maddened cobbler from wreaking his drunken vengeance upon the girl for leaving him—and leads her out into that life which through all the years she had dreamt of.

LONDON OFFICE OF THE NEWS

Perhaps not by leaps and bounds, but none the less surely, the English film is overtaking its competitors from America and the Continent. And no firm is doing more to advance the prestige of the old country than Messrs. Creeks & Martin, of the "Lion's Head Brand," whose recent releases are a delight to those who can appreciate the humors of English village life, with its pathetically humorous old maids and widows, its crabbed old bachelor-gardeners and the hundred and one types whose portrayal has given us so many delightful pages of literature and now seems likely to result in a series of films in their way just as remarkable. "The Courtship of Miss Twiggles" and "The Widow's Legacy," two of the most recent of the "Lion's Head" films, mark, I hope, the beginning of a series of English rural comedies (I italicize the word because our film humor has previously mainly been of the "comic" variety) which will do much to advance the credit of the British film.

I don't pretend the English film is yet up to the standard of the American subject at its best. These "Lion's Head" subjects, for instance, hardly boast such fine artists as the Vitagraph and Biograph, but I am strongly of opinion that the general level of English films is quite up to that of the stuff which reaches us from the States. We get some plots from your side thin almost to transparency, and the ingenuity of some of your producers in attenuating a 300-foot plot to fill 1,000 feet of film is certainly not met with here. In fact, the average English plot has the central idea of 50 per cent of Western subjects beat out of sight. Where you score is in the setting and in the acting. Well, we are training artists rapidly who will challenge comparison with your best, and as for settings, B. & C. recently staged a complete subject on the Cornish coast and Crecks & Martin have issued a drama which boasts one of the finest light effects I have seen in English, Continental or American staff.

There is always something to be learned about the trade from the general press, which gets hold of facts at times which have unaccountably been missed for years by those engaged in the industry. Of this character is the discovery, by Tit-Bits, that films are sold at 4d. per foot and that "the estimated cost of production is 1½d. per foot, leaving a handsome profit." I should say so, but unluckily there are two trifling errors in this statement; not all films by any manner of means are sold for 4d. per foot, and the man who can stage, develop, and print a subject, pay wages and other expenses, at a cost a shade over the actual cost of the base, is a genius who if he exists in the trade on this side has hidden his light in a manner hard to understand. There is also a pretty little story in the Tit-Bits article about a look-out man who lives on the roof of the studio and signals approaching clouds which may spoil the picture. I have seen several pictures staged, but the attention directed to the clouds during my visits has mainly taken the form of picturesque language. Will G. Barker, when a fog compelled him to give up the idea of photographing "Henry VIII" at the first attempt, is generally allowed to have set up a record in that direction which is expected to stand until he himself betters it.

HEREBY NOTIFIES THE MOTION PICTURE PUBLIC OF ITS CHANGE IN RELEASE DAY, FROM FRIDAY TO TUESDAY. THE LAST FRIDAY RELEASE WILL BE FEBRUARY 23RD AND THE FIRST TUESDAY RELEASE WILL BE FEBRUARY 27TH. THE SUNDAY RELEASE REMAINS UNCHANGED.

¶ This change of day is deemed advisable to avoid an overproduction of film on Friday and to better balance the weekly program for the Exhibitor, and we trust the action will be appreciated.

¶ Every Exchange has been notified by wire and letter, so that ample time has been given for the rearrangement of program.

¶ Every Exhibitor should note this change in making up the weekly program and avoid the possibility of missing even one of the fine comedies and dramas now being produced by this company.

¶ The first subject to be released on Tuesday will be an entremely hilarious comedy called "STRIP POKER," in which three of the participants in the game play better than Herbert Prior, and they send him home in a barrel. A laugh from start to finish.

NEXT WEEK'S RELEASES

FRIDAY, FEB. 9th, "HONOR THY FATHER." A strong dramatic picture with correct portrayal of the fourth commandment—the struggles of a poor hard working girl augmented by the wayward father—the ever present Bible and its wonderful influence and teaching.

SUNDAY, FEB. 11th, "ARRESTING FATHER." Another Majestic Comedy of high quality—the quick brain of the youthful lovers outwits the objecting father and lands him in jail after a series of laugh producing situations.

FRIDAY, FEB. 16th, "HIS STEPMOTHER"—Drama.
SUNDAY, FEB. 18th, "PETTICOAT PERFIDY"—Comedy.

WE RELEASE TWO MAJESTICS EACH WEEK

And any Exhibitor not showing his patrons these two pictures is depriving them of two of the best pictures now being produced and if the Exchange is not providing the Exhibitor with 2 Majestics each week, then they both suffer in receipts.

AGAIN THAT FIRE QUESTION

WE are perfectly well aware it does not add much to the value of the industry to keep harping upon the subject of the fires in theaters, factories and exchanges. It is only by constant dropping of the water on to the stone that it makes any impression, and as we were making calls this week at one of the film exchanges in New York City we were astounded at the number of operators that were smoking while delivering film. If the film was on the non-flam order it would be all right, but not being so, it was all wrong, and walking down Broadway on Tuesday of this week we saw a very admirable and at the same time unique device to call attention to the public to the danger of throwing lighted matches, cigarettes, or cigar stumps away.

Fire Commissioner Johnson is taking admirable steps to give publicity to this offense, and taking into consideration the Equitable fire and the fact that a motor engine was just below this building it might teach a good lesson. The inscription upon the sign printed in large letters so that "all who ran might read," is as follows: "Careless throwing way of lighted matches, cigars and cigarettes, endangering life and property is a misdemeanor and will be prosecuted." If this could be put in every place where films are used it would do splendid work, especially if the offenders who smoke could be arrested. It would not be necessary to arrest all persons who are careless with their cigarettes, cigar ends and matches. A few arrests would be sufficient to warn all careless workers that their own arrest is imminent if they persist in their foolishness.

The New York Fire Prevention Bureau when it is in full operation, might strengthen its campaign against the foolishly throwing away of matches or cigarettes, by undertaking the enforcement of rules against smoking in factories, and other places of employment containing inflammable material, among which may be included the moving picture industry, and which now depend for enforcement solely upon the care and carefulness of employees. The whole moving picture industry is interested in the enforcement of such laws. We have often said that the smoker in the moving picture industry is the greatest criminal of the Twentieth Century, and as such, in whatever city, town, or hamlet he may be, he should be brought under the ban of the law, and his evil habits suppressed, so far as his contact with the celluloid film is concerned And now that it is possible to obtain non-inflammable film which promises to work well, the authorities should see to it that it is used, otherwise, the smoker must be eliminated.

On another page will be found a report of an explosion of bombs and the injury of actors resulting from such criminal negligence as referred to in the above.

MOVING PICTURES AND BOYS

QUESTIONS sometimes arise: What shall we do with our boys? Shall we give them dime novels? Shall we place in their hands the horribly revolting colored supplements of the Sunday magazines with their crude suggestions and ridiculously drawn and colored scenes (supposed to represent everyday life, which we parents know to be absolutely false)? Shall we send them on the streets where they can learn the evil of life quickly, or, shall we send them to the moving picture show?

These were questions that arose in our mind when we picked up the Catholic News and read therein one of the most scathing articles on the evils of moving picture shows it has been our lot ever to see. We do not know who is responsible for these articles or what venom possesses the writers to pen such falsehoods. The daily press,—some of the magazines,—(all except those that are subsidized by the exhibitors, manufacturers and others interested in the moving picture industry by supporting them with advertising seem to rise up and say that the motion picture is bad for the boys and girls of to-day.

Our attention was called to the meeting in Philadelphia where recently Professor M. A. Honline made the following estimate of the influence of moving picture shows:

"Boys go to these shows. There they see depicted various kinds of crimes, and learn how men are murdered and property is stolen. They not only learn these things, but they believe they, too, can do them, if the characters in the picture can. Such pictures should be suppressed."

One of the yellow journals had in their columns the reports of four murders with all their gruesome details, several flagrant divorce cases with all the nauseating evidence given therein, and several elopements, two burglaries with full instructions as to how they were done and a host of other material of beautiful elevating character for the young boy and girl to read with avidity, and then in finishing his editorial on the moving picture the editor had the audacity to say:

"But not only do the young learn in these cheap shows that life is full of movement, fighting and so on, they also find that vulgar intrigues is a part of the relation of the sexes, and that hiding in closets is perfectly natural and dignified. In fact the social picture drama is more pernicious in its effect than the picture drama of adventure."

We would like to know where the honesty of purpose, and where the common sense of these editors and professors repose. We want to call to the attention of these writers and lecturers that most of the laws, fairly universal all over the country, bar children under sixteen years of age from visiting the moving picture theater, and we had sooner that children learn from pictures than from the written reports such as appear daily in our newspapers which ought to be censored in a far greater degree than our moving pictures.

In direct contrast to the above we have the New Jersey State Home for Boys showing moving pictures to the inmates. These have been adopted as an experiment in seeking to correct criminal tendencies in the boys. From the report of the Superintendent good results have been noticed within the past few months where the moving picture show has been a feature of the instructive work of the institution. This experiment has been awaited with interest by criminologists and social workers in more than one state. It has been commented upon by people who have a live interest in the social reformation of boys who have got beyond the control of their parents, and, how the newspapers can compare the two reports, and make them work with facts we do not know. Of course New Jersey State Home has eliminated wild west robberies, homicide and melodramatic subjects in a large degree, and has adopted only a genuine humorous film as a whole, believing that when a boy is laughing, and his mind is wrought up to a sense of humor, he cannot harbor criminal thoughts. We have been asked specially to request the manufacturers to manufacture pictures that will teach by inference, moral truths such as the minds of boys and girls can grasp, so that they may be used as the main instructive features in most exhibitions.

Reverting to the State Home again, experiments here have shown that the moving picture has the most powerful appeal to the young, either for good or evil, and if films tending toward self improvement are manufactured by the various studios there would be a great demand for them in every educational center in the land. Speaking a short while ago with a prominent exhibitor he told us that his best money making exhibitions, were those that were the most blase, some with a little bit of spice in them, tending to bring full houses, while educational subjects were very largely tabooed.

We questioned then, and we question still more enforcibly now, whether such a statement is true. Locality perhaps has a great deal to do with the clientele attending the theater, but in the main we have found that such pictures as Pathe's Weekly have done more to instruct and elevate and draw as patrons to a house people who never visited them before. Take one downtown theater in Park Row, New York, where Wall Street men, managers, clerks, and office boys flock to this house in the noon hour to see this film, and our contention is that once a supply is created that tends to uplift and instruct the populace, a far superior clientele will be attracted to the theater.

UNCLE SAM'S NAVY

It is not only interesting to our readers but everyone who has the welfare of the sailor boy at heart to learn that Uncle Sam has made provision for their comfort by supplying moving picture machines and films on sixteen battleships plying to various ports, and we gather from good information that when ships pass en route the reels are exchanged from one ship to the other, thus giving a fairly continuous moving picture show, to vary the monotony of the life on board. The selection of films was left to Chaplain Evans, who has been very much interested in our educational propaganda for some time and who on his return will give our readers full particulars on the education of the navy.

MOVING PICTURE OPERATORS' BALL GREAT SUCCESS

The entertainment and grand ball given at Tammany Hall on Friday evening, January 26th, was a most enjoyable and creditable affair, of which our friends the operators may well be proud, feeling that their efforts to entertain their guests were not in vain. The first part of the evening's program consisted of a series of excellent moving pictures which by the way, were projected by the Simplex machine, and a number of songs, fancy dances and entertaining sketches.

In their nicely arranged souvenir programs we noticed the greeting to the gentlemen as follows:

"Man in society is like a flower
Blown in its native bed; 'tis there alone
His faculties expanded in full bloom Shine out; there only reach their proper use."
—Cowper.

And to the ladies:

"Auld nature swears, the lovely dears
Her noblest work she classes, O;
Her 'prentice han' she tried on man,
And then she made the lasses, O!"

The officers were as follows: John Stevens, President; Samuel Kaplan, Vice-President; Gus Durkin, Secretary-Treasurer; Joseph Basson, Recording Secretary; Moe Sollish, Business Agent; Theodore Greenberg, Sergeant-at-Arms. The Trustees were as follows: Robt. Saunders, Moe Sollish, Alex. Polin. The Arrangement Committee: John Ricards, Chairman; Frank J. Gillick, Secretary; H. N. Weinberger, Asst. Treasurer; Robt. Goldblatt, Simon Terr, D. Weinberg, Joseph Basson, Jacob S. Winck, H. N. Weinberger, Jas. Corrigan. On the Examining Board: H. N. Weinberger, Jacob Cohen, "Nuttie" Feinberg, O. Froelich. Reception Committee, Joe McAree, A. Mackler, H. Mackler, I. H. Gertler. Floor Committee: Robert Goldblatt, S. S. Atler, A. Kessler, M. Berkowitz.

The evening was pronounced most enjoyable by all present, with the hope that repetition may occur again in the near future.

American Films Popular in Winnipeg

W. T. Mallon, proprietor of a large theater in Winnipeg, Man, was a visitor in Chicago last week. Mr. Mallon has some interesting things to say concerning the advance of the motion picture business in central Canada.

"There are about fourteen houses in Winnipeg that might be classed as really first-class theaters," said Mr. Mallon. "Of these ten are Independent theaters and the remaining four are licensed houses. One notable feature in Winnipeg houses is the total absence of cheap vaudeville. Winnipeg people don't want it, so we add an extra picture. Another very noticeable thing is the fact that our patronage is of a considerably higher grade than you have here. The fronts of shows in Winnipeg are lined with automobiles, and the entertainments are conducted without so much of the boisterous element. The pictures made by the American Film Mfg. Co. have been quite popular in Winnipeg. Western pictures, principally Western comedies, are highly desirable, and we cannot get enough of them. I am using two Americans every week and wish I could get more."

Escanaba, Mich.—C. S. Sullivan has purchased the Royal Theater from the Royal Theater Co. and will furnish the best of moving picture shows.

Hartley, Ia.—Geo. Lehmann has opened in connection with his hotel a moving picture house.

MISS VICTORIA FORDE

Miss Victoria Forde, of the Nestor Western Company, and the subject of the above cut, is exceptionally clever in ingenue work. She has been on the stage since quite a child, and has had a particularly successful career on the legitimate stage. She has been recently connected with Maxine Elliott, Chauncey Olcott and John Drew. Miss Forde, who has established a fine record for herself as an equestrian, has been with the Nestor since the early part of last summer.

Nevada, Mich.—The Majestic Theater has changed hands; John Nott, of Lansing, Mich., bought it back from S. J. Bowers.

SARAH BERNHARDT IN MOVING PICTURES

Mr. Max Anderson recently went to Europe to examine the pictures of Sarah Bernhardt, before they were released, or, before they made any arrangement to purchase what is considered to be the greatest scoop on the American market to-day. Dozens of manufacturers tried their hardest to secure this world renown actress to pose for them. Mr. Max Anderson is to be congratulated upon securing the rights of the Film D'Art in which she posed so magnificently. Further particulars will be given our readers next week. M. C. Anderson, Henry M. Zeigler, J. E. Brulatour, comprise the company handling this product. We recommend our readers to write for full particulars at once.

THE IMP CALIFORNIA RELEASES

Commencing with Thursday, February 29th, the Imp Films Company will release a series of pictures made by their Californian company, who have been working around Los Angeles several weeks.

The first of these pictures is entitled "The Rancho Rose," and is a strong dramatic offering, staged amid romantic and picturesque scenery. The quality of these pictures is superb, and the acting is singularly fine.

Director Grandon has made splendid choice of settings; the company have put their hearts into the work and the result is the completion of a series of strong subjects which will enhance the renown of the Imp films all over the world.

THE S. J. FRY FILM EXCHANGE

The American National Film Company, of 32 Boyleston street, Boston, has dissolved, B. O. Wetmore and E. W. Helley retiring. The business of film rental, machines and supplies will be carried on by S. J. Fry at the same address under the name of S. J. Fry Film Exchange.

BANCROFT'S RANCH IN MOTION PICTURES

The American Film Manufacturing Co. predicts a sensation for its coming release, entitled "From the Four Hundred to the Herd." This film centers about an English Lord, wealthy and quite love-sick over a bright American girl. Aside from the story itself, this picture promises backgrounds never before seen in American films, many of the scenes having been taken in and around the grounds and gardens of the famous U. S. Grant Hotel near San Diego, Calif. This hotel bears the enviable reputation of possessing the artistic touch of the landscape gardener in addition to the most beautiful of natural, tropical beauty. Later, the scenes are staged in the great ranch of Bancroft, the historian, thus utilizing to its fullest measure the astonishing possibilities in Southern California for the motion-picture manufacturer.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Co., who has been visiting at the Western studios of the company at La Mesa, Southern California, returned to Chicago on Monday, February 5. Mr. Hutchinson was accompanied by his wife.

Moving pictures have been taken by the Eastern Film Company of operations at the Follansbee Tin Plant at Steubenville, Ohio.

Yonkers is to have a new $200,000 theater, to be built by a company organized yesterday by George H. Brennan. A site has already been decided upon on Getty Square. The policy of the playhouse will include vaudeville and moving pictures. This is Mr. Brennan's second venture outside of regular dramatic management. He recently concluded an arrangement with the Kinemacolor Company of America for the production of the entire play of "The Clansman," which he controls in motion pictures.

* * * *

The Yerka Improvement Club, Yerka, Cal., are taking steps to have a semi-weekly display of moving pictures. They are to be both entertaining and educational. The children and young people of Yerka are looking forward with pleasure to the completion of the plans.

* * * *

After extended conference between managers of moving picture shows and representatives of the Woman's Civic League of Birmingham, Ala., an agreement has been reached whereby those managers who are willing to comply with the views of the League will be given public endorsement, through a film to be displayed at each performance. The managers agree to keep lights burning in the theaters, to prevent loitering about their places, to eliminate all vaudeville, and to eliminate all suggestive or improper films and songs.

* * * *

Already private schools are installing moving picture machines. A new public school building in Connecticut has a special motion picture hall attached. And elsewhere the attention of educators is turning seriously to this new weapon of instruction.

The University of Wisconsin, however, has gone a step further, and has taken definite measures to incorporate the moving picture machine into its educational extension work.

* * * *

Contrary to statements made in a number of other cities regarding the decrease in the patronage of libraries owing to moving picture shows, Lorin E. Ripley, librarian of the public library of Sacramento, Cal., states that his accounts show a decided increase in the children's department.

The recent accident at Creedmoor, L. I., was a most deplorable one. That a man should even run the chance of losing his sight through the careless action of a curious onlooker, and that action being indirectly due to the deadly cigarette, to which so many of our young men are slaves is almost more than ordinary human nature can abide with composure.

True, every precaution should have been taken by those in charge to see that bystanders were kept entirely without the range of the performance of the moving picture company, who were a few days ago holding forth at Creedmoor, when the accident happened. It is, in our opinion, up to the manufacturer, director, or whoever is the responsible person in such cases, to do their utmost to protect the human flesh and blood that is doing service in the silent drama, especially where there are explosives of any character used.

The latest report, however, is that Henry Hoffman, of Jersey City, the young man so seriously injured in the accident, will in all probability recover his sight, for which indulgence on the part of fate we must all feel truly thankful with him, and continue to hope that in future more care will be taken by all parties concerned.

The moving pictures which were taken at the Nashville, Tenn. Penetentiary, on the occasion of the recent visit of Governor Hooper to that institution, depict scenes of pathos, where the shivering convicts, some with hands hidden in their pockets from the biting cold, and others with hands covering their faces so as not to be known, filed past the camera.

On Tuesday, January 23d, the new Criterion Theater, Ames avenue, Rutherford, N. J., entertained a theater full of invited guests at its initial performance on that evening. The theater was formally opened to the public on Wednesday, the 24th. This theater is a model structure as regards both convenience and construction, reflecting great credit alike on its owners, W. W. Vick, J. T. Collins, and T. E. Lawrence, and its builder, D. S. Goss. The new playhouse will seat about 700 people It is a fireproof construction and is both commendable and handsome.

"The Signal Code," from Thanhouser, is a cleverly constructed story woven around the signal code of the United States Navy. The young lieutenant of the Navy who falls in love with the pretty young countess, who proves to be a foreign spy, is inveigled by her into showing her the signal code book, which she carries away with her in spite of his appeals to her to relinquish it. She carries it to her accomplice, but one of the Navy men, who has witnessed the theft, follows on the footboard of the automobile carrying the pair and steals the book from the handbag of the countess when in an unguarded moment she allows it to hang over the side of the machine, placing a brick in its place. The consternation of the pair on discovering that they have been thwarted in their plans is great. The missing book is restored to its accustomed place and the last that is seen is the fleet going past Governor's Island.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE ORGAN INTO THE ONE MAN ORCHESTRA

By Robert Grau

WILL science replace the musician in the flesh so that the utilization of large orchestral bodies can be dispensed with?

There is one man who not only believes this is to be the record of to-morrow, but he has already demonstrated in a most emphatic manner that this achievement has already been accomplished; that there are many others who believe that Robert Hope-Jones with his Unit Orchestra has solved the greatest of musical problems is evidenced by the statement that one great theatrical firm has given an order for the installation of "the Unit Orchestra" in all of their theaters throughout the country, a total cost of one million and eight hundred thousand dollars being involved.

Whoever had the temerity to assume that the day would come that the old time church organ would become so potent a musical attraction that it would be regarded as a rival of the moving picture in drawing crowds? One man, however, an electrical dreamer, with a passion for the organ, made the effort his life work and in the last two years he has seen his dream evolve to a state of reality. Thousands heard the Unit Orchestra at the Auditorium, Ocean Grove, N. J., where it was regarded as the Eighth Musical Wonder of the world, but since the day the Unit Orchestra was revealed at Ocean Grove the inventor has added to its musical value, and a few weeks ago, having made up his mind that preparation had been achieved, decided to test its capacity as an attraction with the public.

A series of sixteen recitals was arranged for the Baptist Temple on North Broad Street, Philadelphia. The prices of admission were 25 and 50 cents. At the first concert a few hundred persons attended out of pure curiosity; the patronage, however, increased until, near the close of the series, thousands were turned away unable to obtain even standing room; in fact, the police had to be called out to disburse the crowds.

The "popular" side of the "one man orchestra" so appealed to such philanthropists as Andrew Carnegie and Charles M. Schwab, that they at once became interested.

The Unit Orchestra in use at Ocean Grove cost $25,000, and the cost of the different sizes vary from that sum down to $5,000.

To describe this unique invention is not an easy task, and as electricity plays the most important part in its construction, the modus operandi is not conveyed to the lay reader without a resort to technical verbiage. For centuries tone was produced in organs in two ways only, from whistles and from pipes, or brass tongues associated with pipes known as Reed pipes.

In the Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra the diaphone is the chief stop—that upon which the whole tonal structure is based. In the "Orchestral" department there are stops, and these are of great variety in power and tone color, including wonderful representations of the orchestral oboe, the clarinet, the oboe horn, the trumpet, the violin, flutes, and other imitative stops.

There is also a "percussion department," and the instrument in Grace Baptist Temple is unique in having the first complete percussion department ever introduced into any organ.

The tones from the nine stops of this department are produced by percussive means, nevertheless some of these tones are sustained or continuous sounding. By judicious use some most delightful and artistic musical effects can be obtained from these stops, more especially when they are combined with those belonging to the "flute" or "reed" families.

The stops are brought into and out of action—not by the usual drawstop handles—but by a double set of "stop keys" arranged convenient to the player or organist in an inclined semi-circle. These are variously colored so that the performer may readily distinguish between the different classes of tone.

Most of the stops can be drawn independently on any of the keyboards or on the pedals. There are three balanced swell pedals for controlling the expression, and these can be operated either by foot or finger. Each pedal is connected with an "indicator and controlling key" fixed on the lower edge of the music desk; this key shows the position of the expression pedal at all times and (being electrically sensitive) moves the pedal directly as it is pressed by the finger in either direction.

The console or key desk, from which the organ is controlled by electricity, is located in advance of the instrument. This console is provided with four sets of keys for the hands and one for the feet. The upper keyboard has the expressionless touch hitherto deemed inseparable from the organ, but each of the keyboards, including that for the feet, is provided with the "double touch," and the lower manual keyboard has also the "pizzicato touch."

The introduction of these touches which enable a performer to secure expression and change of tone color from the fingers, entirely alters the character and scope of the organ as an instrument. Its dignity and grandeur remain, but the power of accent and rhythm is for the first time introduced; instead of being a cold and impassive instrument it now becomes warm, emotional and flexible.

The Baptist Temple organ has 109 stop keys —to help in operating these 37 adjustable double touch thumb pistons are provided, and located between the various keyboards. Pressing these with ordinary force results in the manual stops alone being changed, but by exerting much greater force an appropriate selection of pedal stops and couplers can at the same time be secured.

For independent control of the pedal department a double touch "suitable bass" stud is provided below each keyboard. These secure automatically a bass that is exactly suitable not only in power but in quality of tone.

MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF MICHIGAN

Alfred H. Saunders, Editor Moving Picture News:

Detroit, Mich., January 24, 1912.

Dear Sir—Please insert the following letters in your valuable paper. At a special meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors of Michigan, held in Lansing, on Monday, January 8, 1912, matters of much importance were taken up. The main object of the meeting was to arrange for a final decision regarding Sunday shows, as it is the object of the Michigan exhibitors to assist one another when possible, especially in such matters as this. Each member of the association contributed $5.00 toward a fund so that the cases of the Lansing exhibitors, who have been found guilty of Sunday opening can be taken to the Supreme Court where a final and favorable decision is hoped for. As this was the first instant where financial assistance was required of members throughout the state it is with pleasure we announce that all members were most happy in giving their individual share. They also decided to incorporate and the officers instructed to that effect.

PETER J. JEUP, President.
W. LESTER LEVY, Secretary.

Detroit, Mich., January 24, 1912.

To the Moving Picture Exhibitors of Michigan:

You are hereby notified that A. L. Rule, has been appointed organizer for the Moving Picture Exhibitors of Michigan, who will call upon the Exhibitors throughout the state and explain the objects and benefits to be derived by becoming a member of the Moving Picture Exhibitors of Michigan.

Upon showing proper credentials he is authorized to collect the admission fee of $5.00 for each house and dues at the rate of $5.00 per year, payable not less than quarterly.

Mr. Rule is reliable and responsible for this amount as he has been placed under bond in a surety company, so you are secure in giving him your application and paying for same as we will be responsible for the amount.

This is an incorporated association, and affiliated with the National Exhibitors League of America. It is the object of the Michigan exhibitors to make their association one of the largest in the country; there is no reason why you should not join the Michigan exhibitors' association, since it is only a question of time when matters of National importance to the exhibitors will be an issue throughout the country, consequently it is necessary that every exhibitor in Michigan join the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Michigan. Our next convention takes place in Muskegon, Michigan, July 9-10-11, 1912, which will be followed by the National Convention in Chicago, shortly after.

PETER J. JEUP, President.
W. LESTER LEVY. Secretary.

A RIGHT GALA EVENT

One of the finest entertainments of the season was given by the members of the Exhibitor's League on Monday, the 29th, at Palm Garden, 58th Street and Lexington avenue, New York City, followed by a ball at which hundreds of merry-makers enjoyed themselves to the full.

It has never been our pleasure to attend a more enjoyable event nor one which augured more for the success of the independent manufacturers of moving pictures.

The early portion of the evening was occupied with a series of excellent motion pictures from leading Independent firms, and selections of music, recitation and comedy sketches from a number of talented moving picture actors and actresses. The little "Thanhouser Kid"—little Marie Eline Thanhouser—scored an instantaneous hit in her numbers. This sweet little girl surely is a winner with her quaint, old-fashioned manners. Miss Delphine Warner and the Messrs. Harry Benham, Chas. M. Seay, Leo Herbert White and Maurice Costello all pleased the audience to a finish, but—with apologies to the others—when the audience was asked near the close of the entertainment, who now they would like best to see, the building fairly rang with cries of "Bunny! Bunny!" And Bunny promptly appeared amid a storm of applause, keeping thereafter the audience in rears of laughter for some time. That's what it is to be fat and popular!

The Champion Company, pleased with their cleverly enacted farce, "Tables Turned" and the Powers Co. brought down the house on account of the vivid reality of the nature of the sketch which they put on, and which brought home only too strongly to many in the assembly the vissitudes of the rehearsal and photography of a scene in a picture play.

The moving pictures which were without an exception fine specimens of the industry, were applauded vociferously, and surely the "silent players" who were there to see themselves must have felt at least some satisfaction from their usually unapplauded efforts. Unfortunately several of the manufactories were not represented on the screen on account of the officious house officials cutting off what Dr. Lamberger jocularly termed "the juice." This fact naturally caused some little dissatisfaction among the manufacturers, who however covered their chagrin most manfully and good-naturedly. The following is the program in the order in which it was carried out:

THE TABLES TURNED

Imp Release Feb. 17, 1912

In "The Tables Turned," a young woman resorts to the old artifice in order to get level with her husband whom she suspects of flirting. He does not flirt, of course; the poor man is only being interviewed by a lady client. But his jealous young wife does not know this, and at the instigation of her maid she pretends to be insane, and a pretty how-de-do she creates in the house. When hubby arrives home he is at first mystified, but is put wise to the position of affairs by the commercially minded maid who wheedles a few dollars out of him for the suggestion that he should go mad. So mad he goes, despoiling the home and really alarming his yife.

An unlooked-for development is the conveyance of the husband to a sanitarium, where he is seriously treated.

His experiences are not of the jocular order; far from it. The attendants use him brutally, so much so that in the end he is placed in a tub of ice, and guarded by an attendant of a most ferocious demeanor. The wife has turned the tables to good account, indeed. However, her representations to the keeper of the sanitarium prove effective, and her poor husband is released. The story ends with the reconciliation of the couple in the bathroom.

Miss Cummins acts very energetically as the wife; King Baggot is the husband, who undergoes the varieties of sufferings, and William Shay is the suave, imperturbable keeper of the sanitarium.

WM. J. BURNS, WORLD'S GREATEST DETECTIVE, ENTERS THE FILM FIELD

There will be no more infringement of copyrighted films according to William J. Burns, the world's most noted detective, who has entered the film field in the interests of the Monopol Film Company, who are releasing to state right buyers the latest European sensation, Homer's "Odyssey," a tragic portrayal of the greatest epic poem in all the world's literature.

The bringing in of Mr. Burns with his world-wide reputation has electrified the film industry. It is the one topic of discussion to-day in film circles. It is the inception of a new era. Those who have thousands of dollars invested in motion photography and its branches have suffered from piracies, dupers and infringers. Through Messrs. Powers and Craft a new copyright bill was legislated which provided for a jail sentence and heavy fine for film thieves. Then came the question of getting the law's enforcement into positive action. This was engineered by Frank Winch, who enlisted the services of Wm. J. Burns. Winch and the detective are old friends, and the deal was easily and quickly arranged.

That the Monopol Film Company is determined to stop infringement on the "Odyssey of Homer" may be further evidenced by the following letter:

Treasury Department,
Office of Secretary,
Washington, Jan. 13, 1912.

Monopol Film Company,
145 West 45th Street,
New York, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:

The Department is in receipt of your letter of the 6th instant stating that you are advised that an effort will be made to import into this country certain piratical copies of a moving picture film entitled "Homer's Odyssey," or the "Adventures of Ulysses," which you claim is copyrighted, and requesting that the collectors of customs at the various ports be notified in order to prevent the importation of such piratical copies.

In reply, I have to advise you that as collectors of customs are furnished with printed catalogues of the titles of articles deposited and registered for copyright in accordance with section 57 of the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909, it is assumed that all piratical copies of copyrighted articles will be refused admission as prohibited importations without special instructions from the Department. However, the attention of the collectors of customs at New York, Philadelphia and Boston has been invited to your claim that the film referred to is copyrighted and appropriate instructions issued to them in regard thereto.

Respectfully,
(Signed) F. M. HALSTEAD,
Chief, Division of Customs.

Yet more—within a few days the announcement is expected from Washington, D. C., that the Post Office will take the matter up and declare a ruling on the misuse of the United States Postal Laws.

With Homer's "Odyssey" protected by the United States Federal Government copyright laws, the Collectors of Customs on the alert for importations of the film, the Attorney General of the United States ready to bring action under the Interstate Law, the Post Office at work on a ruling of misuse of mails and to top it all off with William J. Burns and his thousand offices everywhere on the alert, it would certainly seem that Homer's "Odyssey" will go to the state right buyers as no other film has ever gone before—absolutely protected. To Messrs. Powers, Craft and Winch, the film world at large is indebted for the greatest achievement ever chronicled in the industry.

The big arm of P. A. Powers reached cautiously over the fence of the Lubin coop of prize entries, and back with it came the daintiest of the dainty.

You'd never guess who—no, sir! She's pretty as any oval-faced doll you ever saw, with a pair of eyes that grasp; then they hold, and arrest, and finally hypnotize. They're wonders. She's petite, with a battery of tricks of expression all her own—and she does play them, too. Well, she's with Powers now, and you're going to see her in some wonderful pictures. P. A. Powers says "good ones"—he's modest. Anyhow, she will be in them, right in front, where you can see that wonderful face in its wonderful expression.

Oh—almost forgot! She's Miss Ethel Elder.

BACK TO THE WOODS

A Harrowing Tale—With a Moral

By Horace Vinton

An elaborately gilded frog on the glass panel of the office door first attracted the eye, underneath which appeared, in ornate lettering, a sign which read:

THE DORMANT COMPANY

Manufacturers and Producers of Comedy, Dramatic and Industrial Motion Pictures

IT was not intended that the name should be in any way significant of the trade mark, but by a singular coincidence the financial sponsor was of French extraction, his cognomen being D'Ormant, and when the sign writer was called to paint the name on the door he inadvertently omitted the apostrophe, and the company was known forever after as the Dormant Company.

The suite consisted of two offices. The outer being utilized as a general business office, and the inner as a sanctum for his August Majesty, the General Manager.

In the center of the outer room a mimeograph was working vigorously, attended by Susie Corrigan, the pretty stenographer, assisted by "Buck" McCann, the gum-chewing office boy.

There was a lull in the proceedings while "Buck" shifted his gum from one cheek to the other and ventured the remark:

"Maury Owens and Myrtle ought to be here sometime dis mornin', dey left Chicago night before last."

"Yes! And a precious pair of four flushers they are. It'll be many a long day before they get another engagement like the one they had with this company."

"Ah, I don't know, dem bluffs seem to go in de business. Gee! but dere a pair of beauts: t'ree hundred and fifty a week, and didn't know how to nurse it!" exclaimed Buck, as he fed the machine another sheet.

"I wish I could get a chance like that!" continued Susie, with just a tinge of envy in her tones.

"You! Ah, remove de halo and climb down out of de clouds or you'll be posin' fur an angel in a 'close up!'"

A look of indignation from Susie followed this facetious blending of vapory thought and tougher diction and she was about to reply when the clang of the elevator, followed by the opening of the office door, arrested her attention. A narrow-faced man entered.

"Mr. Webb?" inquired he.

"He's not in, call later!" answered Susie with well-studied indifference, as the mimeograph clicked on.

As the visitor turned to go, Buck again shifted his gum, stuck his tongue in his cheek, uttered a sound like the popping of a ginger beer bottle, jerked his thumb toward the door of the inner sanctum and grinned knowingly. As the visitor made his exit, Buck asked:

"Who's dat guy, anyhow?"

"Oh, it's one of those scenario peddlers!" carelessly replied Susie.

Presently Gilbert Webb, the general manager, emerged from the inner sanctum and inquired:

"Who was that?"

"That scenario writer who called the other day. I knew you did not want to see him, so I said you were out."

At this juncture the conversation was interrupted by the entrance of a very young woman accompanied by a man of uncertain age. We say uncertain advisedly, for his mature bearing and assertive manner were at variance with his carefully creased trousers and youthfully cut clothing.

No sign of recognition was apparent, and while the trio exchanged cold and meaningless glances, Buck snickered, while Susie tried to suppress him with an indignant frown of caution.

"So, you're here?" coldly inquired Webb.

"Yes! We're here!" answered the male contingent. "What do you think we are, anyhow, a pair of boobs?"

Pointing toward Susie and Buck with a deprecatory gesture the general manager opened the door of the inner sanctum and Maurice Owens and little Myrtle Thornton, his wife, the three hundred and fifty dollar per week leading man and woman of the Dormant Company entered.

As the door closed, Buck doubled up in a mock effort to smother his laughter as he croaked:

"Dere'll be hell in dere in a minit!"

With a suppressed shriek of reproof, Susie angrily replied:

"How dare you use such language in my presence!"

"Ah! Cut it out!" (With emphasis.) "Cut it out! Ever since you walked on in dat ball room scene in de last picture, because dey happened to be shy a dame, you tink you're it! You're jest like de rest of 'em, de minit dey gets dere mug on de screen it's all off!"

"Well, I made good, anyhow. You bet I'm going after it good and strong now. I'm tired of office work. Then look what the papers said about me!"

"De papers! De papers! You make me tired! It's dat gush wot makes 'em all dippy. If dese wise guys in de bizness would cut out all de 'bull' dey t'row at dere actors dey could cut down a bit on de salaries."

With this final burst of logical reasoning oral hostilities ceased and the mimeograph's click could be heard in the prevailing silence.

In the general manager's office another wordy conference was in progress.

"What's the trouble with you people!" asked Webb, with some show of asperity. "Do you think you are treating us fair, after all we've done for you!"

"All you've done for us! Well, I like your nerve!" hotly rejoined the young woman. "What have you done for either Maury or I?"

"What have we done! What have we done!" almost shrieked Webb with growing anger. "Why, we've made you the most talked of people in the film business!"

"Yes you have!" drawled Owens. "We had a reputation long before you came and pulled us away from the 'Fluke' Company."

The general manager regarded the pair with a look of extreme disgust at this outburst, and as a balm to his wrath, he arose and paced the floor to assuage his pent-up feelings.

Silence reigned for a brief period and he again resumed his seat.

"What was your grievance?" asked Webb.

"Well, it was like this," began the husband.

At this point the wife broke in.

"Wait a minute, Maury, let me tell it!"

"Now please don't butt in!" interrupted Maury with a look of reprimand at his wife. "We were working in that comedy, you remember the last one you sent us, and that dub of a director, Jim Collin——"

At this point, Myrtle again interposed:

"He put that big slob of a blonde Swede woman——"

"Oh! for the love of Mike! Can't you be quiet!" exclaimed Maury.

With a wounded expression Myrtle again subsided, while Maurice continued:

"Well, he put that Jansen woman right close to the camera and Myrtle opposite at the same table in the café scene. Myrtle wanted him to change the situation and he told her to be kind enough not to interfere. Well, one word led to another and finally Myrtle remarked: 'I'll have you understand that I am the attraction of this company, and things must be done in my way.' Then everyone in the scene gave the director the laugh."

"Are you sure it was the director they were laughing at?" quietly asked Webb.

"Why of course!" answered Owens haltingly, the facetious rejoinder of the general manager suddenly dawning upon him. With evident embarrassment he moved uneasily in his chair as he continued: "Anyhow, we were out of place with that bunch of 'rubes,' so we packed our trunks and skidooed!"

"Don't you think that was treating us a little unfairly?"

"No! Why?"

"We have spent quite a good sum of money exploiting your wife and self, have paid you a liberal salary for your services, and it looks only fair to us that you should have made some effort to maintain discipline instead of causing disruption," remarked Webb.

"Oh, pshaw! All this talk about discipline is rot! You know how you ran after us when we were with the Fluke Company. We had offers galore at the same money you paid us, but we gave you the preference," Maury continued, with an air of lofty patronage.

"Then you don't place any value on the prominence we have given you, or credit for bringing you to the attention of the public?"

"Not so you could notice it," laughingly rejoined Maury.

Myrtle, who sat peeved though passive, since the rebuke from her husband earlier in the conference, suddenly recovered her composure and broke in:

"Why our pictures were in every paper in the country and long notices telling how great we are, long before we came to the Dormant Company. We know how strong we are, and don't need to be reminded of it! You don't think the papers would say all that about us if it wasn't true?" concluded Myrtle, with self-contained assurance.

Webb gazed intently at the pair with an expression of hopeless pity at their shallowness. In his mind affairs had reached a crisis. He was a man of discernment and splendid business acumen. The Dormant Company under his administration, had been enormously successful from the very beginning, he had given much prominence to the fact that they had succeeded after untiring efforts and at great expense in securing the services of Maurice Owens and his wife, little Myrtle, and he feared their retirement might reflect upon his hitherto unquestioned judgment. It was this contingency alone that caused him to hesitate before bringing matters to a culminating point.

"Then you wish to leave us?" he suddenly asked.

"Yes! Except in certain conditions!" answered Maurice.

"What are they?"

"That you change your director——"

"And let that woman Jansen out!" snapped Myrtle.

"So, that's the stand you take!" hotly rejoined Webb. "Well, I'll do neither, so it is useless to prolong this interview." Rising abruptly he pushed back his chair and continued: "I'll prove to you that instead of you making this company or any company with which you have been associated the conditions are just the reverse. You were made by them!"

With this outburst, the first real show of temper Webb had exhibited during the interview, the general manager, with a gesture of finality opened the door and Maurice and Myrtle passed out.

The measured click of the mimeograph in the outer office continued as he closed the door and resumed his seat at the desk.

He picked up Collins' last letter, which informed him of the attitude of Owens and his wife and complained of the trouble they had caused him. He scanned it carefully, then rose and walked the floor for a second or so in a meditative mood. Dropping back into his chair again, he took up a telegram blank and wrote the following message:

New York, Oct. 26, 1911.

J. C. Collin,
Dormant Studio, Chicago, Ill.:

Have let them out. Am sending successors. Put on another picture with present company, pending arrival of new leading man and woman.

Webb.

Sounding the annunciator, Buck suspended operations and entered.

"Get this off at once!" said the general manager.

Buck made a hasty exit.

A whispered colloquy between Susie and he ensued, as he donned his hat and coat.

"Where are you going?"

"To send a wire!"

"Let me see it!"

Buck handed her the telegram, which she read hastily, then passed back to him. He made a quick dash for the elevator.

He had no sooner left the office, when Susie knocked timidly at the general manager's door and entered.

Webb looked up with a glance of inquiry as the girl began with some degree of hesitation:

"I understand little Myrtle has left you!"

"Yes! Why?"

"Well, I'd like to apply for the position!"

The general manager regarded her for a moment with a look of surprise. then realizing that she was serious, burst into a fit of laughter, at which outbreak the girl grew red with embarrassment. Finally Webb subsided and inquired:

"What makes you think you could fill her place?"

"I don't know why I can't, she had to begin."

"Quite true! But she had experience before she came to us."

"Well, I've had experience!"

"Where? With whom?"

"In the last picture Mr. Collin made here in the old studio, before he left. I walked on in the ball room scene, down to the camera and out of the picture and he told me the way I handled my train and fan was just beautiful. Then the papers had my name in them too, and——"

This final jolt stampeded the last remnant of Webb's hitherto well-sustained patience.

"The papers! The papers!" almost yelled he, "so you've been attacked by the paper germ too! Well, you had better resume your office work Susie, I'm sorry, but I'm afraid you won't do."

"I'm tired of office work, Mr. Webb, and you had better get someone to take my place after Saturday!" and Susie left the general manager's office in high dudgeon.

Before she had recovered her wanted composure Buck entered and noting her dejected condition remarked:

"Hully Gee! Wot's de matter wit you! You look as if you wuz posin' for de deserted wife in a sassiety drammar, or de discarded dame wot wuz trun out in de snow!"

"You mind your own business!" replied Susie spitefully, "and get a move on. We've got to get this announcement of our next release in the mail by six!"

What promised to develop into a serious wordy discussion was interrupted by the entrance of Homer Baxter, editor of "Moto-Portraiture."

Baxter had been intimately identified with cinematography from its earliest inception. He loved the artistic and scientific side as heartily as he detested the prevailing commercialism of the industry. He was a blunt spoken man, who did not hesitate to express himself when necessity demanded. Like all men of ideas, he was reviled and criticised by his inferiors, many of whom advanced through channels of hypocrisy, deceit and servility at the shrine of the "Golden Calf."

Susie's face brightened at the sight of him, and when he asked: "Is Mr. Webb in?" She smilingly answered:

"Always to you, Mr. Baxter!" Coming toward him with outstretched hand. "Oh, Mr. Baxter, I have not had a chance to thank you for that nice notice you gave me. It was really awfully good of you."

"Don't thank me," replied Baxter carelessly, "Mr. Collin asked me to give you a little send off and I did so!"

Webb appeared in the doorway of his office.

"Hello! Just the man I want to see! Come in!"

"I've come up to get your version of the Maury and Myrtle story," said Baxter, dropping into a chair.

"How did you know about that? Why they only left here a short while ago."

"Well, they just left my office after unburdening themselves of a tale of woe, about your treatment of them."

"What did they say?"

"That your producer don't know his business, that your company is rotten and——"

"I guessed as much." broke in Webb, rising and pacing the floor angrily. "I've had nothing but trouble since they came to me six weeks ago. They have been one grand disturbing element. and when not quarreling themselves, they have quarreled with everyone in the company. and to complete matters they walked out of the studio in the middle of a picture and came on here to give me the alternative of discharging my director and other members of the company, or releasing them."

"Why excite yourself, when you are the direct cause?" calmly asked Baxter.

Turning with a look of surprise, Webb dropped into his chair and remarked:

"I! How?"

"Well, in your anxiety to out-do your competitors you have given so much publicity to the fact that you have succeeded 'after great and prolonged effort in securing the services of Maurice Owens and little Myrtle Thornton, his wife. at an enormous salary.' that they have become imbued with the belief that their services are so vastly essential to your success that it will mean utter and complete failure for you should they leave."

WHERE BROADWAY MEETS THE MOUNTAINS

(American Release, February 13th)

John Newcomb, a young playwright, retires to the mountain country, secures lodgings at the Wayside Hotel and settles down to finish his latest play.

Here in the solitude of the vast mountain stretches, he finds inspiration to complete the play that was destined to bring him fame and fortune. It proves to be of such charm and human interest that the producers and their stars are sent out to rehearse their parts and obtain a glimpse of the country in which the plot was laid. Thus could local color be obtained.

But prior to the arrival of the company, while strolling amid the dreamy scenery of the little valley, the playwright meets Mary Cutter, daughter of a mountaineer, who delivers milk each morning at the Wayside Hotel. Young and unsophisticated, she sees and worships the handsome polished city man, who finding time hanging heavily upon his hands, pending the arrival of the company, goes much about with her and quite unknown to himself, falls in love with her.

Finally, the company arrives. Frank Willsden, the leading man, is delighted with the charming young woman who is to play opposite and amid the picturesque hills of Southern California the pair plight their troth.

Meantime the young playwright sees little of Mary Cutter and she possessed of the hot, ungovernable passions of the mountain-bred girl, finds much time to spend in and about the walks of the hotel, where she can watch the playwright and his leading lady rehearse their scenes. Believing that he loves the city girl, she hurries to her father with a tale of outraged feelings. He, with quick temper, organizes a band of cowboys and hurries to the hotel. There, by mistake, he meets Frank Willsden, the leading man, with his sweetheart. In error the mountaineer and his friends take him to Mary who easily sets them right. But the playwright, dazzled by the beauty of the leading lady and in a moment of jealousy accuses her lover, Frank Willsden, of having made love to Mary Cutter and his story seems to be proven by the arrival of the mountaineers with Mary and Frank. Then the revelation comes to the playwright and for the first time he realizes that he has loved Mary without knowing it.

A CHAT WITH MR. DAVID HORSLEY

By Our Roving Commissioner

FRESH from the sunny California clime, Mr. Horsley chats with much spirit of things in the Western portion of our Union. Delighted with the climate of California, I fancy it would please him best to remain there permanently, save for the fact that the headquarters of a large moving picture establishment is best situated within easy reach of the Eastern metropolis, where actors and actresses are so easily obtainable.

The arrival of the Nestors in Los Angeles was greeted with the first fall of rain which they had in that vicinity in many weeks—it looked as though there might be something of the mascot about the Nestors. They have been blessed with fair weather and sunshine ever since their arrival there, losing only two days of work in the twenty weeks which the company has spent there. On arriving there Mr. Horsley looked about, first thing, for a studio, finding just the thing he was looking for in the shape of a bungalow, which, with a barn and a number of other outbuildings, was situated on a property 200x150 feet. For the first few weeks he was there he put up at the Mountain View Inn, where, says Mr. Horsley, "I spent a number of jolly evenings with Mr. Rock, of the Vitagraph, and Mr. Bauman, of the New York Motion, who made Mountain View Inn their headquarters while stopping in Los Angeles. We tried to tell each other how to make money, and talked so incessantly on the moving picture business that our wives at last got so tried of it that they refused to sit and listen to the same old thing any longer, but we did have a jolly time."

Nestor's have now purchased 5½ acres in the vicinity of Los Angeles, where they will erect their own studio and plant. They are even now situated so that all negatives can be developed and are sent on here for printing. Much trouble has been experienced by them with static. "We went away from New York," says Mr. Horsley, "to get rid of it, and we find it even worse there. We were obliged to throw away 13,000 feet of film on account of it, and have had to take some scenes over again seven and eight times. This is discouraging, of course, and very hard on the company, especially when they have to repeat such incidents as hanging over a cliff or floating in the Pacific on a barrel of fire."

"We did everything," he continued, "to prevent developing static. We put lamps in the cameras, lined the slides with cotton velvet, which proved fairly successful, and even went to the length of insisting that the operators discard the rabbit's feet which they carried in their back pockets, and were about to attach reservoirs made of layers of tin foil and gold leaf, when one day one of the camera men who had somehow always had good luck with his pictures came in with about eight feet in the middle of a film just chucked full of static. I asked him how he accounted for it, and he said that he was always in the habit of keeping one hand on the tripod screw while he turned the crank with the other, and this day while in the act of taking a picture he took his hand away from the tripod screw to brush away a fly. This is the only way he could account for it; so now I tell all my camera men to keep a hand on the tripod screw when taking pictures."

"How do you account for this preventing static?" I asked, "Well," said he "we suppose either he grounded the electricity or then his body acted as a reservoir."

A number of the scenes which are shown in the Nestor Western pictures have been taken in Griffiths' Park, which is a tract of ground covering 3,950 acres. This Park was given to Los Angeles by Mr. Griffiths, and consists principally of primitive woodland and mountains, containing the highest peak in the Sierra Madres. There are times, however, when the company have to travel a number of miles in order to procure just the location they wish. The Western Company has had to work as far as 32 miles from the studio.

While travelling across the continent Mr. Horsley stopped off at Albuquerque and also the Grand Canyon of Arizona, where he procured 1,500 feet of excellent scenes, taking views first at Hermit Point, and then on the Bright Angel Trail. At Jacob's Ladder, which is about half way down from the Bright Angel Plateau, to the Colorado River, which rushes along the bottom of the canyon, pictures of the trail parting were taken. Wonderful panoramic views were taken at Sosser's Point, from which you can look down five different canyons.

The petrified forest was also visited by Mr. Horsley from whence he has brought several fine specimens of the petrified wood. Photographs were made in No. 1 forest—the petrified bridge is included in these views.

The later pictures (canyon and petrified forest) were taken by Mr. Horsley in anticipation of the proposed installation of the moving pictures in the schools. On his return trip he will stop again at Albuquerque where he has been offered every facility to obtain pictures of the Navajo Indians and their hogans (houses), also the blanket weaving of these Indians. Already Elle of Ganado, the most expert blanket weaver among them, has posed for him. For use in the schools of Greater New York he intends making a series of pictures showing the different tribes of Indians, the Navajos, the Pueblos, the San Domingos, the Apaches, and so on, demonstrating as far as possible the history of the Indian. Photographs will also be taken, to go with this series, of some beautiful blankets which Mr. Horsley brought back with him. The history of New Mexico will be put in picture form by the Nestors, and in fact, we have much to expect from them in an educational way.

Santa Fe, which is the oldest city in the United States, and possibly the oldest in the world, will figure in the historical pictures of New Mexico. Here has been unearthed a house containing no less than 1,500 rooms, which will form a feature of the many interesting scenes which will be taken here.

I cannot close without saying a few words about the new Nestor plant at Bayonne which is most complete and comfortable. The offices are equipped with full size sheet and projecting machine, in which will be used the wide angle lense, so that pictures shown may obtain full size. An arrangement is also made whereby the current can be alternated at a moment's notice, and a connection obtained with the Hallberg Economizer below. The drying room is supplied with filtered air and also a reversible exhaust fan. From the perforating room films can be passed to the printing room through a box arrangement in the wall, which has a door opening into either room. From the dark room and wash tanks the film racks are removed to the glycerine by means of a lock box into which the entire number of racks can be placed, and the door closed. Within the lock box, while awaiting the opening of the door in the opposite side through which they are taken for their glycerine bath, a spray which has been turned on from above does the final cleaning of the film. The glycerine tanks are provided one for the ordinary film and one for the tinted ones. A new scheme for coloring has been devised by Mr. Horsley which will be exploited shortly. The films of the Grand Canyon and the Petrified Forest will be colored by this method. No expense has been spared to make this plant one of the finest in the country. It is estimated that its entire cost will figure somewhere between thirty and forty thousand dollars up to date, not counting the new supply of modern up-to-date machinery which is being installed. In place of electricity acetylene gas is used to supply light to the printing machines of this plant, on account of the fluctuation in voltage experienced with electricity. Mr. Horsley will leave again for the West in two or three weeks' time.

Nestor showed some excellent work the past week. "White Cloud's Secret" holds the interest of the onlooker not only in the working out of the plot but also in the splendid choice of scenes, the novelty of which thrills the Easterner, and all those unaccustomed to the Western desert scenery. "White Cloud" on his deathbed tells his story to his son, and as he recites the story it is thrown upon the screen just as it happened, showing how he attacked and killed a miner, on the desert, taking from him his gold, his watch and his wallet, hiding the gold in a cave but keeping the watch and wallet. The father dies at the conclusion of his recital, and the son sets out to find the gold, which he actually does at the very spot where his father told him to look. He is overtaken in the desert by a desperate character who pilfers him of his canteen of water and his horse, leaving him to the mercies of the hot sands of the desert. He is found, however, by the son of the man from whom his father stole the gold who takes him into his home and cares for him. Finding out by accident who his benefactor is, in his gratitude he leaves the gold watch and all, with a note, signifying his identity and goes away while his benefactor is caring for his sick wife.

An excellent Nestor comedy picture—one of the best in fact that we have ever seen is "I Never Said a Word." It is a story of gossip and comprises the first half of a split-reel of which the last half is "Tightwad Pays For a Dog," which is a "scream." "Dog-goned Luck" is another fine Nestor comedy.

The last "Mutt and Jeff" picture was released on January 29th, and the last "Desperate Desmond" on February 3d. Instead of cartoon subjects, the Nestor Saturday release will consist of choice split reel comedies.

VIEW IN THE GRAND CANYON OF ARIZONA APPEARING IN A FUTURE NESTOR RELEASE

IN "SILENT WITNESS," THANHOUSER SURPASSES "TWELFTH JUROR"

When on January 12 Thanhouser issued "The Twelfth Juror" many observers of Thanhouser work stated that it was the best mystery picture that that producer had ever turned out. The mystery element was unusually well sustained.

But now advices come from New Rochelle of a "mystery sensation" that out-sensations the "Twelfth Juror" picture.

The new effort is called "The Silent Witness," and, as its title indicates, is a story of the courts like its mystery predecessor. It deals with a young business man whose wife is annoyed by an assistant in the district attorney's office. The assistant is found shot in the business man's home and the district attorney seeks to send the business man to the chair, when a housemaid rushes into the court room and gives the judge a packet which convicts the very district attorney who is prosecuting the case. "Silent Witness" releases Tuesday, February 13.

MADISON SQUARE HAS A GENUINE SURPRISE

Passersby Electrified by Monster Bust of Famous Greek Poet

There's a new statue in Madison Square—at least there was, it didn't linger long, there's where the story comes in.

First of all, it was a press agent's stunt, one out of the ordinary, well planned and well executed. Here's the story:

Only last Friday morning an express wagon drew up to the edge of 23d Street, several men lifted off a large veiled statue; carefully it was carried to within a few feet of the fountain, there a workman cleared away some snow, the statue which was seven feet high deposited and unveiled.

The workmen left, only one man remaining behind whose duties seemed to be those of a guard.

The stragglers going to work began to notice the new addition to the square. They collected in bunches; all inquired who it was and what it was. No one knew. The guard maintained a profound silence.

The growing crowd attracted the attention of the Square's caretaker. "What's all this?" he asked the guard pointing at the statue.

The guard did not reply. The caretaker was dumbfounded. He had no orders to receive or permit a statue to be planted in Municipal property, and he decided it would have to go. The guard showed resistance, then the aid of the police was sought. Traffic Squadmen Brason and O'Flaherty answered the call.

After vainly trying to get the guard to tell them what he and the monster statue were doing in Madison Square or by whose permission it was left there, the cops decided they had no authority to make an arrest without someone preferring some kind of a charge.

After nearly two hours telephoning to the various city departments, none of which knew anything about the statue, it was decided to arrest the guard and cart the statue away.

By this time a crowd of several thousand people had collected, and about a dozen men were passing out cards which read, "Look out for Homer's 'Odyssey' the greatest film in the world. It's coming soon."

By the time the cops returned the statue had been bundled off to the wagon and the crowd began to disperse.

JOSEPH IN EGYPT (Cines)

This attractive poster, offered by George Kleine, to be used in connection with the Cines film, "Joseph in Egypt," gives an idea of the grandeur of the film itself. The release date is January 27, 1912, and we certainly can say that with this subject and the picture "Brutus," released the previous week, the manufacturers are setting a high standard in introducing their product to the licensed field.

Following closely the Biblical narrative, the subject taken is well known, and in order to make the film a success it must be in every way a fine production. Every detail must be skilfully observed in regard to settings, exterior and interior, and the costumes of the characters must be of the finest.

We can assure picture-show patrons that in these respects the manufacturers have met every demand. Combining with this photography and acting of the highest order, the film really is an epoch maker in the line of gorgeous productions.

We first see the sons of Jacob tending their flocks in the land of Israel. It is a wonderful sight, indeed, to see the large number of sheep wandering through the hillside trails, the shepherds in their colored costumes and the picturesque countryside itself.

The next scenes, where the caravan of merchants appear, are very interesting. The hard-heartedness and cruelty of the brothers, contrasted with the timid pleading of the young Joseph, is well brought out.

The pictures then show us Joseph in the land of Egypt. Everything is staged in the greatest magnificence. The immense halls of the Pharoahs display the Egyptian architecture without a fault. These halls are filled with people dressed in the gorgeous Egyptian costumes of that time. Plenty of life and action is always in evidence, gripping the spectator and making him really live with the people in very ancient times.

The scenes where Joseph orders his brothers brought before him are singularly impressive. Joseph, who has grown older, is, of course, unknown to his brothers. They address him on bended knee and treat him with the greatest reverence. When he reveals himself and forgives them, we really feel with renewed emphasis the greatness of the story.

People as a whole like to see strange lands, peoples, plays and hear new stories, but they like best of all to see again, in possibly a different way, the familiar places and stories. And that is why a film like this "Joseph in Egypt," based upon one of the oldest and most familiar narratives, will make such a favorable impression in picturedom.

Such films as this will not only prove a large drawing card when displayed, but will have a great influence upon the moving picture business in general. Everything in picturedom points to an uplift, a tendency to have finer photography and cleaner, better scenarios.

An exhibitor who is far-sighted enough to realize the advantage to be gained by showing a wonderful feature like "Joseph in Egypt" is going to prosper; he is working for the interest of the entire moving picture industry.

The difference between a comedy and a drama, from the standpoint of the producer, is that, while a drama is essentially much "heavier" than a comedy it is easier to produce.

The production of a drama is only the working out of a scenario. If the producer pays attention to so-called laws of the drama and the technique, he very seldom can go wrong.

It is different in the production of comedies, however. The producer can follow no set laws or rules. His imagination and inventive genius is taxed to the utmost. He must work up his situations and invent the "business." "Business" is the most important factor in a comedy production. A comedy may have the funniest plot we can think of, and if the business isn't funny and original, the comedy will fall as flat as a pan cake.

In the production of "Lend Me Your Wife," the release of Sunday, February 11, Billy Quirk is featured. The comedy is not only remarkable for its comic situations but its "business" is so cleverly and humorously worked out, that one must indeed have a heavy grouch if he couldn't laugh. The picture shows Billy Quirk at his best.

MACE GREENLEAF WITH SOLAX

Handsome Mace Greenleaf has joined the Solax forces. Greenleaf was formerly with the Reliance Company and in legitimate. He has been engaged to play leading roles in coming dramatic features. With Mr. Greenleaf doing dramatic leads, with Billy Quirk doing rollicking comedies and with Darwin Karr playing light comedy leads, the Solax Company has an organization which should create quite a stir in the trade.

NEW THEATER FOR KALAMAZOO

A beautiful new photo-play theater will be erected on South Burdick street, directly across from the Government building. It will be the largest and handsomest photo-play theater outside of Detroit, in the state of Michigan. It will cover the entire plot of land adjoining the big Peck office building and will seat approximately 1,100. The theater will be strictly of fireproof construction and have a beautiful and showy lobby, well illuminated, extending across the entire front of the building. The investment will be somewhere about $65,000. The theater will be built by the Elite Theater Company, of which Harry S. Waterman is to be the business manager. Mr. Waterman is well known in the theatrical business, having run, at different times, fourteen different theaters in Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, and is at present running several in towns near Chicago. This building of such large and handsome houses for photo-plays speaks volumes for the rapid strides pictures are taking in the amusement field.

"CARIBOU BILL" AND THE REPUBLIC CO.

Citizens of Saranac Lake turned out en masse Wednesday evening, January 24th, when "Caribou Bill" Cooper, of the Republic Film Company, gave an illustrated lecture about his world travels with his famous $10,000 prize dog team, who are now appearing exclusively in "Rep." productions.

Cooper's "huskies," part wolf and part dog, have attracted the attention of passersby each day when they traveled from their kennels to selected locations. A capacity house was there to greet Cooper and other members of the company, and hear the history of the famous Rep. dogs. Two hundred slides gave a graphic story of the dogs' journey from eastern Russia to New York City; the famous old road houses of the Northern wilds, their lurid interiors, the gigantic blue green glaciers, ragged morasses, peaked icebergs and mountain passes were in turn flashed upon the screen.

This was followed by one of the Rep. films which was received with great applause.

UP-TO-DATE THEATER IN LAWRENCE, MASS.

It is not necessary to come to New York City, we are sorry to have to say, in order to see the moving picture at its best advantage. In outlying places and towns and cities far remote from the great metropolis there seems to be the greatest impetus for the erecting of pretentious houses for the demonstration of this wonderful invention.

In Lawrence, Mass., there is a moving picture house of which the manager, Mr. Chas. H. Williams, may well be proud. This theater has a seating capacity of some 900 people, and goes by the name of the Victoria Theater. Leading from the entrance the steps are of Italian marble. Inside the theater the beautiful decorations of buff and pink and ivory is enhanced by the soft glow of the shaded electric lights. The theater chairs, finished in green and gold, add a touch of richness to the scene. The woodwork is touched up artistically with bronze and green.

Every precaution has been taken to give the best of service to the patrons, and for their safety proper exits have been provided, an excellent ventilating system, wherein fresh air is drawn from without through openings on either side of the proscenium arch, and comfortable retiring rooms for both sexes.

The space occupied by this theater is 34 by 99, the lobby space being deducted from its length. There has been no crowding of seats together—there is plenty of room, and it is comfortable for all.

This house is furnished with four machines, two picture machines, one stereopticon, and one spot light. The operator's booth is iron, lined with asbestos board.

Just below the balcony, on either side of the house, are boxes, which contain in all sixty chairs.

The manager's office, which is at the front of the theater, and at the rear of the operator's booth, is lighted by large windows, giving a specially healthful, sunshiny atmosphere to that portion of the building.

The asbestos curtain is worked by an electric device, and also the lights for the entire house except the lobby and front can be turned on from the switchboard on the stage.

In the front of the house, above the entrance, a richly colored stained-glass window adds its charm of dignity to the interior of the lobby.

'Tis said that this theater is as perfect as it is possible for one to be, with hot and cold water in the dressing-room, fine acoustic properties, and, in fact, everything that makes for the enjoyment and comfort of both patrons and employees is to be found here.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

The Moral Film—A Personal Attack

By Leonard Donaldson

It is, I believe, the lot of every scribe to be forced, as it were, into the limelight at least once in the course of his career, and I have found, not once but many times, that I am no exception.

In the issue of the "News" of December 23 appears a criticism of my writings on the "moral" film from the pen of a confrére, to wit., Mr. Edward W. Murphy, of Canton, Mass. In the course of a lengthy epistle to our editor, Mr. Murphy has endeavored to analize the statements made by myself in the "News" of December 9 annent the ethics of the photoplay that attempts to portray life as it is, and as all the world knows it to be. My remarks have apparently evoked the wrath of my friend of Canton, and were it not for the fact that my theories have been totally misconstrued and that Mr. Murphy's remarks are, in the main, based upon pure assumption, I should have justification in being very ashamed of myself and Mr. Murphy would have undoubtedly scored a glorious victory. I will not say that such is not the case; I am certainly guilty until I can prove my innocence, and this I shall, with your kind forbearance, dear reader, attempt to do straightway.

At the commencement of your letter, Mr. Murphy, you state that you have only just made the acquaintance of the "News," and your letter is dated December 12. You have then only just made my acquaintance. You know of nothing that has gone before. It is lamentable to think of the many controversies of which the "News" has been deprived through your ignorance of its existence. Had you met me in previous issues, friend, I venture to say (and I like not egotism in any shape) you certainly would not have supposed that I should support the type of film you quote.

No sir; in assuming that, I had in mind that particular product of the Rex Company to which you refer when planning my article on the moral film and, moreover, basing your entire criticism of my remarks upon this assumption, has been the means of your losing the verdict. It is always so hazardous to suppose; it is invariably speculating to lose. The particular film to which you refer had not reached my country when writing this article which has been the cause of such annoyance to you. Now, Mr. Murphy, a fair question. Did you find any humor in the film you mention as an example of the "undesirable variety"? I am sure I should not, reprobate that I appear. You say I "cited the Rex film especially because I thought it might be the one to which Mr. Donaldson referred as a perfect film, with pathos, humor and temptation." Do you suppose, sir, that I, or anyone else for a matter of that, possessing a scintilla of purity in their nature, would associate humor with human nature's vilest sin! No sir! Your letter, in many instances, becomes something a great deal more serious than a criticism of my views of the moral film—it in many ways assumes the form of a direct and foolish attack upon my personal character!

However, the pages of the "News" are not a battle-ground where individuals—much less persons unbeknown to each other—may wage war, one with the other. It is a journal, wherein everything bearing upon or tending to promote the welfare of cinematography finds place. As you are a newcomer to the ranks of its readers you will, of course, pardon my offering this explanation.

Your criticism, if it may be termed as such, is based upon a word or phrase appearing in my article, which, when standing alone loose their true and intended significance. This procedure is similar to passing judgment upon an individual one has seen once but does not know. What admirable phrases are those of mine for treatment of this kind. "The impassioned longing of twin souls"—is this debasing? And again, "Life as it always will be"—is this derogatory? Quoted, as you quote, sir, they become utterly meaningless as, obviously, you intend them to become!

You ask if I refer to the portrayal of "love," or the "baser passions," when I say "impassioned longing." Would you suppose that I should deem the latter anything else but debasing and derogatory? Obviously, one word has only one significance to your mind. A half an hour in the company of a "Wuttall" or a "Webster" would work many surprises.

The old adage, "Familiarity breeds contempt," Mr. Murphy, was never so true as when applied to the visual means of gaining familiarity. This the picture play is doing for us in many and various ways. Please don't suppose that I suggest that this should be done indiscriminately. Nothing is further from my contentions. When I stated that the cinematograph was performing a valuable service by presenting to the masses photoplays of a moral character and portraying life as it is, in all its ramifications, it was as an exemplification of the good achieved by this form of amusement. You, obviously, would have it otherwise. Further explanation on this point is quite unnecessary. One other question in your epistle, although not entirely devoid of inquisitiveness, calls for a reply. You ask me if I would not have any compunction in taking any person near or dear to me to witness films of the "debasing" order. Should you have said of the "moral" order, my answer would have been emphatically in the negative. Do you suppose, sir, that it would afford me any gratification to taint the young, impressionable mind with matters that all too soon present themselves to human nature?

The ethics of any age have always to a great measure been influenced by the writers and thespians. Human nature seeks the interpretation of life in the book or on the stage. In our own era the picture theater has unquestionably achieved a great work, not only in "holding the mirror up to nature" but in teaching and preaching moral lessons and giving expression to moral truths.

Furthermore, I think you will agree that the great and growing popularity of the picture theater instead of being, as has been suggested by a certain class of bigoted persons (perhaps I am no longer of this variety in your estimation), a sign of decadence; a hankering after a lower form of entertainment, is, on the contrary, symptomatic of a healthy revolt against the banalities of the legitimate stage and the vulgarities of a certain class of vaudeville, a desire to revert to realities; a disgust with futilities!

Now, Mr. Murphy, having, I trust, your pardon for conducting my own case, I await the pleasure of my editor and my readers to pass upon me what judgment they will.

LEONARD DONALDSON.

With Reference to the Above

With reference to the attitude taken by Mr. Leonard Donaldson in his reply to Mr. Murphy's criticism in an earlier issue of statements made by Mr. Donaldson on the "moral film," we would say that, although both parties have a perfect right to an opinion, we think that Mr. Donaldson has gone perhaps a little to the opposite extreme, and his unwillingness to accept criticism in other than the argumentative spirit lays him open to criticism in another direction. And now that both Miss MacDonald, who, by the way, also came under the fire of Mr. Murphy's criticism, and Mr. Donaldson have had their say, we will give Mr. Murphy the privilege of the "summing up."

Salt Lake City, Utah.—J. Howard Garrett and G. S. Holmes, stockholders in the local Orpheum Company, have issued bonds to the amount of $200,000 for the erection of a new Orpheum theater here.

Manning, La.—Fred Dethlefts will open a moving picture show house.

Brighton, Ia.—T. Thompson will erect a moving picture theater.

Louisville, Ky.—The directors of the Colonial Amusement Co. have decided to establish a string of moving picture theaters in nearly all of the smaller cities and towns adjacent to Lexington. Among the places where the theaters will be established are Frankfort, Paris, Versailles, Nicholasville and probably Richmond.

Peoria, Ill.—E. L. Harris, owning three-fourths of the interest in the Columbia Theater, has bought out the entire share from S. A. Oakley. He will make it the best equipped exclusive moving picture theater here.

ARE YOU A LIVE WIRE?

A good live exhibitor readily realizes the necessity of good advertising and is prompt to take advantage of something that will increase his receipts. A great many exhibitors are afraid to make any changes in their business for fear it will interfere with some old fogy notion, pertaining to that particular thing, which has been handed down through ages and is a part of ancient history.

FINE GAUMONT RELEASES FOR THE COMING WEEK

The Split-reel containing "The Waterman's Bride" and "The Red Mountains of Esterel," we release Saturday, February 10, are exceptionally fine subjects. "The Waterman's Bride" is described by us in a previous issue as being one of the most beautiful films in regard to color, choice of location, action and photography that is on the market today. "The Red Mountains of Esterel" is a beautiful scenic subject characteristic of the Gaumont discrimination in choice of scenes.

"The Cripple's Courtship" for release Tuesday, February 6, is an excellent comedy subject showing the strategy used by two lovers, one of whom had been seriously injured, and who is obliged to go on crutches for some time, the other with only a slight injury, to deceive the parents and thereby lengthen the sojourn of the young man in the house of his sweetheart, where he has been confined since the accident. Many funny situations occur in this comedy.

Harlan, Ky.—The Edisonia Theater has been opened as a moving picture.

Athens, Tenn.—The Picture Theater at this place has been completely destroyed.

Valley City, N. D.—F. E. Nemec, formerly of St. Cloud, Minn., will open a theater here.

Union, Iowa.—Mr. Moore, of Jamestown, N. Y., will conduct a moving picture theater here.

Estherville, Iowa.—Hank Graaf is building a new $15,000 brick building for a new moving picture theater.

Casper, Wyo.—Plans are ready for the new theater to be erected here to be used partly for moving pictures.

Winona, Minn.—Messrs. M. J. F. Glubka, 109 Chatfield street, and David Janikowski, 716 East Wabasha, will open a theater in the East End.

Fremont, Nebr.—P. H. Goldman and C. A. Lundsgaard, of Omaha, have leased the Bijou Theater from Nils Johnson and will open a moving picture show house soon.

SECOND REX A SENSATIONAL AND INSPIRING SUCCESS!

By telegraph, telephone, letter and that wireless which is communicated in the fervent and sincere handshake, the trade is paying its plural tribute to the Rex company for the instantaneous and startling success of its second release. From all over the country words of gratitude and felicity are pouring in to Rex, strongly significant of the granted fact that Rex will reign supreme. "The Defender of the Name," the first Rex second release of last Sunday, January 28th, more than defended the name. The title was a very apt one, and its appropriateness and reference to the occasion are evidenced in the unanimous verdict that the second Rex was strongly defended and the jury of exhibitors and public quickly convinced by the logic and appeal of the silent but eloquent pleader, the subject itself.

It is probably the first time in the annals of film production, that exhibitors have wired a producer commending the quality and tone of film. Such genuine elation and satisfaction on the part of exhibitors is unprecedented and illustrative of the popularity the Rex second release has already attained. It implies another unusual and eloquent feature of the occasion; exhibitors to deliberately wire a manufacturer to the effect that the first public appearance of his star under the present management resulted in such flattering success must have had a spur or an inspiration of some strong sort of source; and doubtless the motive for this unusual course derived from the pleasure and delight of the audiences who were privileged to glimpse "The Defender of the Name." Thus, it is practically the first time that the public has so directly expressed its endorsement of a product to the manufacturer, and it is a significant truth that the course pursued by the exhibitors, from its inception to its culmination, was altogether deserved and justified.

Marion Leonard's work in the picture is what most contributed to the startling success of the first release in which this gifted star has appeared after her long and deplored absence from the screen. Her personality, sometimes pensive, sometimes piquant, sometimes pathetic and always pleasing, threw its magnetism from the screen into the hearts and minds of the audience. The realism which she imparts into her work, the tense and intense dramatic strength with which she embodies her role, the note of human weakness and strength which she instills into the portrayal of the character, grip the audience, hold it spell-bound, play with its heart-strings, bring the lump to the throat and the smile to the lips, grief to the heart and joy to the soul, in alternate and subtle manner. And with each emotion a thrill of realism, of the truth and logic of the situation portrayed, surges through the enraptured observers. Concisely and truthfully, art is personified in Marion Leonard, dramatic eloquence is apostrophized in the gleam of her eyes, the struggle of the world metaphored in the humanity and understanding of her pantomime.

The story of "The Defender of the Name" is a vigorous, virile vital tale of a great struggle twixt honor and disgrace, heroism and cowardice, with the battleground the heart of a girl. The locale and time of the story is the South at the outbreak of the Civil War. But unlike most war stories, though the inception, the climax and the denouement of the tale are woven about the war and depend upon it for its realism and atmosphere, there are no battle-scenes portrayed, no dashing cavalry or formidable phalanx of infantry, which have become the too common custom of war film productions. The only battle typified is the strife in a man's heart and a maid's, and the victory won is even more appealing and inspiring than the glory of victorious hosts on the field of battle. Another unique feature connected with the film is the unusual relationship of the hero and heroine. In this instance they are not the expected lovers, but brother and sister. This intimate tie lends a new interest to the film, and was commonly commended by exhibitors, who are eager for unusual incidents in the construction of the stories.

We feel certain that our readers will welcome the story in detail, though they may have already read the synopsis and advance references to the production. This film is said to enjoy the distinction of having had more advance comment and commendation than any other one production of any manufacturer before release date. So for the benefit of those who are not yet familiar with the thrilling details of the tale, as well as for those, and they are a goodly legion, who cannot tire of good film stories, the following:

John Potter is the son of one of the most distinguished families in old Virginia. As far back as the record of his ancestry is written, it is a story of courageous deeds, of true men and brave women. Never a stain has rested on the family escutcheon, and the family pride is strong in its honor.

The stirring news that Sumter has been fired upon volleys its pregnant purport into the homes of the South. Impulsively, and in the enthusiasm of the moment, John volunteers to serve.

The Union forces, moving from Washington, threaten the Confederate Army, and only a knowledge of their plans will save it. The mission to secure these plans is delicate and dangerous, and its accomplishment means signal honors and the gratitude of his people to the one who brings it about. John is assigned the perilous and paramount task.

In the red rays of the dying sun, disguised as a Union soldier, John starts on his mission with high hopes and a giant determination to succeed. As he steals through the Union lines he comes upon a squad of Union soldiers, and in their midst a Confederate, a spy. A sharp order and from the barrels of twelve guns the prisoner's punishment, or justice, or whatever in God's world man can call it, is meted out to him. Like a blow, it dawns upon John that, if detected, that would be his fate. His heart stops, the red of his determination pales into a white fear; the bravery, the honor, the sterling record of his line, his great mission and its hope of saving the army and the cause—all are forgotten; and he turns toward the Confederate lines, flying, a craven and a coward. He runs to his home and bursts in upon his sister, who alone is awake. A few brief words, and she knows the miserable truth. The boy, desperate in his shame, runs into another room; there is a muffled shot, a thin wreath of smoke tells its grim tale, and the girl realizes that the young life which within a few hours had come to such a miserable climax is ended.

In horror and desperation she thinks of the morrow, when her father and all the world would know the ignoble act of the weak boy. Then—her plan is formed. She knows the boy's mission and its end; she determines to accomplish it—and flies out into the night.

She succeeds. The plans in her possession, she is safe again in the home where her brother lies. With the strength given her by her dormant resolve to save the family honor, she drags the body of her brother to the outposts of the Confederate lines, and places the dead form where he will be found by the sentries, with the papers in his hands. Then, a weak woman again, she staggers off toward the old home.

The sentries find a Confederate spy who had been wounded to death in the Union lines, but had escaped to just within the Confederate posts before he fell dead. None have known, none will ever know. The boy is given a hero's burial and a hero's tributes. And only a girl ever sits, with a grave and meditative face, thinking of the secret dead with the dead!

It's a strong and compelling tale, but the mere printing of it in type cannot convey the dramatic and artistic heights which Miss Leonard attained in its portrayal. She and her capable support, by the sheer merit of their work and its overpowering suggestion, transport us to the time and place of the picture, and we seem to watch in real life the struggle of the weak boy and the heroic girl. We watch, and we seem to hear the beat of the drums, faint and far away, adding to the realism of the tale; but then we know that it is only our own heart-beats and the throb of our pulse, beating faster just because of Miss Leonard's acting.

Small wonder that the public is going to be strong for Rex. Such work is a final and convincing proof that the industry is truly industrious.

THE MERCHANT MAYOR OF INDIANAPOLIS

Champion Release

Here is a subject with a direct appeal to everybody, as it deals with present conditions—the high cost of living. In this instance the mayor's wife and daughter enter a workingman's home with a view to studying the situation of the poorer element. They find that he is hard hit, for foodstuffs being high, he is unable to provide more than a meagre fare for his table. With the approach of Thanksgiving, the produce and poultry interests combine and uphold their skyrocket prices, thus creating a hardship for the poor. The Mayor is apprised of this coalition and summons these big grafters before him. He pleads with them, but they laugh him to scorn. He then acts. The Mayor buys up great quantities of produce and poultry and calling the people together, sells them his supplies at a trifle above cost. What happens then? The Trust is given a black eye and prices start to tumble. Again we look into the workingman's home, and this time it is a home of plenty. Released February 19, 1912.

New York, N. Y.—A new theater to cost $250,000 will be erected at Houston & Chrystie streets.

A WIFE'S DISCOVERY

Champion Release

An amateur theatrical rehearsal excites a suspicious wife to attend it, and withal, investigate her husband's actions. What happens there is what you want to see. It's a sure-pop comedy. Released February 21, 1912.

Phoebus, Va.—Louis N. Mears, Hampton, Va., has been awarded contract to erect theater to replace burned American Theater at a cost of $8,000.

The accompanying cut was accidentally omitted from the article on the Misses Woods in the last issue.

These young ladies were school fellows of Miss Annette Kellermann in Australia, and have been, along with their mother, Miss Maud Fitz-Stubbs (composer and pianist), the guests of this talented and beautiful young woman a large portion of the time which they have spent in New York.

ONE of the most encouraging signs of the times in the Cinematographic World is the interest that has finally been aroused in religious and educational circles. Educators and clergy are sitting up and taking notice of the unbounded possibilities for good contained in the moving picture.

"It must be pleasing to such men as Saunders, of the News, to appreciate that unceasing agitation for the uplift of moving pictures is bearing such bountiful fruit," remarked a school superintendent to the writer recently. "The trouble with the enemies of the picture play is that they hearken to the bigoted and, until recently, have refused or neglected to investigate the subject for themselves," continued the educator. "I confess freely that I was one of the number. However, the time has come when the scholar and leader in the forward movement can no longer ignore the film age. I subscribed for the Moving Picture News, read its pages carefully every week, and am now numbered among those resolved to make cinematography a source of religious and educational inspiration.

"I find, upon investigation," continued the educator, "that the moving picture has practically girdled the globe in a decade! Think of it! Ten years ago the moving picture show was unknown; to-day, the veriest crossroads community is incomplete without a moving picture entertainment at least on Saturday evenings. It's high time progressive press, clergy and other instructors were recognizing this great industry and it is time they were assisting the manufacturers, the picture journals and others who have been endeavoring, in the face of discouragement, to uplift the business during the past few years.

"I have read the reports made to the Department of Commerce and Labor by the United States consuls in Europe, South Africa, Australia, Japan and many other parts of the globe, and these reports on the popularity of the moving picture are astonishing. In the past ten years, a vast business has grown up, both in producing and exhibiting the films. According to the reports, London has nearly 300 picture playhouses. There the prices of admission vary from 4 cents to 61 cents. Consul Griffiths also remarks upon the rapidity with which some English films are made. For example, the Grand National Steeplechase race, held at Liverpool, 200 miles from London, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, was photographed, pictures developed on a train en route to London, and the film shown at some of the music halls that very evening. The product of American manufacturers enjoys great popularity in Europe and the United Kingdom, and this should also be a source of pride to our patriotic countrymen.

"The American picture, faithfully presented, has greatly changed the sentiment of many foreigners toward our countrymen, I find. The better class of films have taught Europeans that the American is something besides a sharp-nosed 'Yankee,' in a constant rush for the dollar. The foreigner has been taught that the true American is polished, educated and refined, and that the age of chivalry has not passed with him. His attitude of respect toward the American gentlewoman is an object lesson that is said to have worked a revolution in certain sections of the Continent.

"The moving picture has come to stay. It is a modestly priced medium of entertainment in this day of high prices; I have reached the decision that the picture has been made a source of patriotism, a medium for teaching love of country, surpassing the public school in this regard; and that it will materially aid the education and elevation of our boys and girls, assisting in no small way to make them better men and women. With these facts in the minds of the thoughtful, is it any wonder that cinematography is becoming respected in the most dignified circles?"

It would be a mistake to class the Rev. Justin N. Green, pastor of the Evanston, Ohio, Church of Christ with the Shuberts, Klaw & Erlanger and other theatrical magnates, for the venture of the Evanston pastor is different in scope and principle from those of our noted amusement vendors. But it is a fact that Rev. Mr. Green has entered the amusement field via the first real moving picture show with a regular price of admission ever established in Ohio.

The opening performance of the Evanston church moving picture show took place the other evening, and the church auditorium was crowded. Members of the congregation who had not been to church on a prayer meeting night for years were recognized by the pastor. A considerable portion of the juvenile population of Evanston left the pool and club rooms and the streets, paused at the cashier's window, paid a nickel and saw "David Copperfield."

Rev. Green acted as general manager with the assistance of the church official board as ushers. The idea was so popular that picture entertainments will be given in the church every Tuesday and Friday evenings.

"Our idea in starting the venture is to provide the right sort of amusement for the people of our community," said Rev. Green. "I believe that the moving picture can be a great agency for good, both as regards amusement and education.

"We believe that by entering the amusement field in this way, we will perform one of the functions of the church by safeguarding young people from evil influences."

The money received through the church box office moving picture show is to be applied to the general fund of the church.

Cleveland, "the sixth city," has three-cent car fare, and it is to have three-cent electric light, and also three-cent moving picture shows, if plans now being considered materialize. A new big park may be purchased by the city, and it is planned to have three-cent picture shows among the entertainments to be supplied for the city's population.

While the civic spirit shown in the park purchasing venture is to be commended, in our opinion the further cheapening of the moving picture entertainment is to be condemned. It may cost much to the dignity of a source of entertainment now considered by many as a serious competitor to the legitimate theater. The sum of five cents is insufficient for the entertainments given in the majority of the picture play houses. Three reels of first-class pictures, and a musical program is worth from ten to twenty-five cents of any person's money. The proprietors of the picture theaters make no fortunes with ten cents general admission and the five-cent entrance fee; the pot is kept boiling, and that is all. While in many of the cities the tendency is to charge ten and twenty-five cents admission to the picture show, in the thousands of smaller cities and towns, the picture theater managers report that it seems impossible to charge over five cents admission and do business. Competition is somewhat to blame for this condition, and it is hoped that the managers of theaters in the smaller communities will get closer together for mutual benefit. The day of the three and five-reel picture play is rapidly approaching, and it will be impossible to make both ends meet if the managers do not loom ahead and accustom patrons to at least a ten-cent admission. The public play-park idea is all right, as is three-cent car fare, but the plan to institute three-cent picture shows, maybe for political capital, should be abandoned. The Exhibitors' League of Cleveland should combat the movement.

Three-cent picture theaters mean a three-cent entertainment, with ancient and questionable films and three-cent patronage. What is needed in cinematography is not the cheapening of the picture show, but the carrying out of plans that will add dignity and refinement to the industry. Much of the hard work of progressive manufacturers and editors on behalf of the uplift of the business will be hampered if the three-cent moving picture theater becomes popular.

The moving picture is being utilized in a new channel as a means of education. Throughout the West pictures of the Denver Fire Department in action are being shown before members of fire departments. Safety Director Cash, of Cincinnati, the other day, addressed the Fire Laddies of the Queen City on their duties and accompanied his address by moving pictures. The picture show was so profitable that it will be repeated until every man in the fire department in Cincinnati ses the pictures.

MISS MAE C. KENNEY

One of the most useful members of the motion picture trade is the subject of the above cut, Miss Mae C. Kenney.

Our attention was particularly drawn to her, upon a visit to the offices of the New York Motion Picture Company not long ago, in her quiet, unassuming manner of conducting the work which falls upon her as assistant secretary of that extensive firm, and as private secretary of Mr. Baumann, secretary of the concern.

Miss Kenney is an exceptionally bright young woman, and has been with this firm since its inception. She is one of those young women who intend to show the world what a valuable asset woman can be in the business world.

Sweet and charming in personality, with a keen intellect, and an apparent satisfaction that she is at least on an even break with the vicissitudes of life, there is a true ring to the womanly magnetism which one cannot help feeling when in her presence.

The rise of woman in the intellectual and business world is exemplified in Miss Kenney most forcibly, and we cannot but hope that there are to be found many such in the business world to-day, and we doubt not that there are many such hiding away in their lairs.

We wish Miss Kenney and all in her class the best of success in all undertakings.

POWERS CAMERAGRAPH FILMED

The recent motion picture of the workings of the latest model of the Powers projection machine before the Plaza was an enterprising scheme of Tom Moore, who operates a chain of theaters in the Capital City, the Plaza being his "pet." Of course, this attracted quite a crowd of spectators, despite the cold and wind; and when this is thrown upon the screen it will cause both interest and amusement. After showing the various operations of the Powers machine, an animated picture of the passing public was taken. Mr. Sweat, from the Powers firm; Guy Barrett, operator of the Plaza; House Manager Parsons, of this theater, and Tom Moore, director of the Moore Amusement Co., figure in this film, as does Mrs. Tom Moore, who, while "small," is of "large" consequence in her husband's enterprises. The accompanying pictures tell their own story.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., Jan. 21.—In moving picture circles this has been a week of special features. The Lyceum turned its lobby into a wild west melodrama house, first with the posters and three sheet stands of "Custer's Last Fight" and later with the same billing and an added banner of the "Black Hand," while down at the Photo Play Thanhouser's magnificent production of "She," by special request, again visited the "Valley of Vapors," and up at the pretty new Central Theater Selig's "Cinderella" was booked. Regarding the latter will have something to say later on in this communication.

"Custer's Last Fight" pleased the crowd, and it got the money. The pictures were not in the best of condition. They were scratched in places and in other parts blurred, while one section jumped and bucked like an untamed broncho. However, they were well handled and, considering that there seemed to be general approbation and that the receipts were boosted, let's let 'er go at that!

It was somewhat surprised to see that the "Black Hand" was really a most benevolent and charitable organization. The pictures gave this notorious society all the better of the argument. In fact, each and every individual member of that silent clique were heroes. It was a genuine surprise to all who looked at the pictures. There were certain features that were rather startling. The leap of the woman from the cliff into the water in an attempt to take her life, and the jump into the same pool by the loyal "Black Hand-er"—well, it brought forth exclamations of horror, and a little later on in the picture when the auto did the loop-the-loop over the cliff, one's consternation was complete.

Personally I do not approve of making martyrs out of cutthroats. This picture appealed to me just about the same way that the melodrama of "Tracy, the Outlaw" did when I was on the road and playing "Tracy." We always used it for a Saturday night "thriller," and, believe me, it served our purpose well. It wasn't a bad show of its kind, but the man who wrote the bill made Tracy a hero and the part simply played itself. The audience, by the time Tracy got through, was quite willing to come on the stage and lynch the officers who were responsible for his death. To the best of my recollection Tracy, with a Colt's .45, downed six men in the last act, and the last one to fall was the leading heavy who had dogged Tracy and been responsible for that character being an outlaw instead of a law-abiding citizen, and when Tracy plugged him the crowd tore the seats up. The "Black Hand" pictures were very much on the same order. Anyway, they didn't change the opinion that is well grounded on the minds of the majority of the American people regarding this organization. And here's a funny thing, too, I understand that "Custer's Last Fight" and the "Black Hand" reels were prohibited in Memphis, Little Rock and other cities. Who says Hot Springs is there with the liberality?

And now for "Cinderella." The new Central had booked this interesting Selig feature and had an agreement with the General Film Company of St. Louis to have the pictures in the theater on a certain date. Well, they didn't show up. They were to be exhibited on the day following. The management had advertised the reels in all of the papers, for if there is one thing that the new Central believes in it is advertising. The matinee was about due and still no "Cinderella" reels. It certainly was the limit. A wire to the St. Louis office brought forth the reply that the pictures had left that city on a certain train, and when the number of the train was known the non-arrival of the pictures was explained. You see, the train in question had the misfortune to leave the tracks somewhere between St. Louis and Hot Springs, spilling about forty of its passengers, and, no doubt, distributing "Cinderella" and her retinue, including her two naughty sisters, the gallant Prince and the slipper all over the tracks. At any rate there was some fine telegraphy put over between the St. Louis office, for the pictures were booked for Monday and had to be back there at a certain time. So far as I can learn the chase is still on up to the time this is written. Anyway, the "Cinderella" reels have been booked for a later date at the new Central, and all who came in anticipation of seeing the same last time announced received a "rain check," which entitled them to witness another show free of charge or to admission when the "Cinderella" pictures finally get here.

Had the pleasure of a few minutes' chat with Albert Russell, of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, Memphis. He was in Hot Springs for a conference with the management of the Photo Play theater, and he stated that the Independent cause is prospering wherever he goes. One thing that makes it successful, he said, was the fine quality of pictures that the Independent manufacturers were putting out. He claims that the Independents are gaining houses every week and that once secured, they stick, too.

I don't know what is getting wrong with the boys in charge of the Lyceum machine and booth, but they are either getting careless or have lost interest altogether in their work. The operators' booth at the Lyceum is in charge of Leo King and Fred Eazell, two good operators. Some one has a habit—and a very bad one, too—of flashing the title of a picture that follows the one being shown, with the result that the picture on the screen is spoiled by the title that appears. This is not done once but many, many times and it spoiled two pictures for me that I saw there this week. If the boys must do this they should wait until the picture is almost over. I don't believe they should attempt it at all, for if they haven't got the correct focus when the new picture starts that is a very easy thing to get. They keep flashing and flashing and flashing the title of the following picture while one is on and it has become disgusting.

I also noticed on the Lyceum one of the dirtiest, misspelled slides I have ever seen in any theater. This house announced the return of "Custer's Last Fight." The General's name was spelled "Custor" and exhibit was spelled "xihibited." There is no excuse for this and they are making their popular little manager's efforts look cheap. Eddie Gavrel is one of the best little men in the city and the boys in the booth should take more pride in their work than they have been doing lately. What they should do would be to pay a visit to the new Central and note the beautiful announcement slides that are run there.

The first boxing bout that has taken place in this city since the State Government killed the sport was pulled off on the quiet in Whittington Park, between Mose Ottenheimer, scout for the Baltimore Club of the Eastern League, and Battling Nelson. Doc Owens, manager of the park, was the referee. The bout lasted four rounds and was a "pippin." The newspapers got hold of it and had a great deal of fun, running the story under "scare heads." I was with Nelson the night of the bout when a deputy sheriff approached, flashed his badge and asked the Battler if he had engaged in a prize fight. He was a reform official, remember.

"What—me fight?" asked Nelson, surprised. "Me! Why, man, I'm no fighter. If I was I'd be champion. I don't know how to fight. Get that—see!"

His Deputyship "got it," laughed and walked away.

"Guess I ain't some diplomat," commented Nelson.

AMERICAN PRODUCES WESTERN COMEDIES

The American Film Manufacturing Co., while always appreciating the value of Western comedy, has never before announced so many offerings of a strictly laugh-provoking nature as at present.

The Western studios of the company are deserving of much praise for their success in corralling the elusive laugh, so much sought for and so dangerous from a producing standpoint. As in literature, the true comedy is a jewel and proportionately hard to get. The American, however, has been particularly fortunate in its selection of scenarios and promises a fine line of Western subjects for the future. "An Assisted Elopement," "From the Four Hundred to the Herd," "Society and Chaps," etc., are, as their titles indicate, essentially Western pictures, but containing that touch of the East which makes a combination highly desirable and difficult to secure.

A notable feature in these releases is the wonderful California backgrounds. With as fine a bit of natural scenery surrounding the studio in La Mesa, Calif., as exists anywhere, the producer has added here and there, glimpses of those magnificent winter homes, gardens, etc., that have made Southern California famous as a playground for the rich.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—A new moving picture theater will be erected here at a cost of $15,000 at 105 N. Trejon street by H. C. Goldstein.

IMP SCENARIO CONTEST

The interest in the Imp Scenario Contest, which was decided last week, has been phenomenal. First announced in November last the enthusiasm of scenario writers has been since stimulated by the Imp Films Company in every possible way.

Four prizes were offered for the best comedy subjects, viz.: $100, $75, $60 and $50

These prizes attracted competitive efforts from authors all over the United States, and from many parts of Europe.

Novelists, dramatists, newspaper men, actors, actresses, experienced scenario writers, novices, the college professor, the military captain, the society woman, yea, even the cook in the kitchen, competed for these prizes, demonstrating that the interest in the competition was world wide.

The entries came through the mail by the hundred, and the task of sifting the wheat from the chaff was a heavy one.

Three scenario editors eliminated the obviously unsuited subjects and in the final adjudication Mr. F. E. Woods, of the Dramatic Mirror; Mr. Johnson, of the Morning Telegraph, and Mr. Otis Turner, principal director of the Imp Films Company, were agreed on the awards.

The judges in the Imp Scenario Contest have made the following awards:

Miss Louise Carter, New York City; $100, "The Right Clue."

Mr. J. W. Culbertson, Indianapolis, Ind.; $75, "The Squnkville Fire Company."

Mr. Chas. Ade, Joplin, Mo.; $60, "The Home Strike Breakers."

Mr. C. B. Hoadley, Weehawken, N. J.; $50, "Chesty Buys Tags."

CHICAGO LETTER

The courtesy of the Chicago Sunday Tribune, shown toward the moving picture industry by printing the synopsis of photo plays, to which an entire page has been devoted weekly had for a number of issues the appearance of a one-sided favor, as only the synopsis of the two licensed film manufacturers here were printed. But owing to the successful efforts of Mr. Doud, manager of publicity of the American Film Manufacturing Company, independent exhibitors as well as licensed will profit through this act. The Chicago Sunday Tribune circulates strongly, not only in Chicago and suburbs, but through all of Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan, in which territory the moving picture industry will be greatly aided in gaining public approval and attention, through this paper.

The vigilance and superiority of the union operator over the non-union man is plainly shown in the excellent record of the union men last year, as of the sixteen film fires that occurred in 1911, the blame for only one of them has been laid at the union's door, which is surely an excellent record, as over three-fourths of the operators in Chicago are union men.

The serious and popular Mr. R. C. Lundgrem has been appointed general manager of the Chicago office of the Feature and Educational Film Company and claims he is very busy selling state rights for the Feature Film "Zigomar" and "Love and Aviation." The two features are being booked in Chicago by Mr. Lundgrem, who wishes to inform exhibitors that he is always on deck to welcome them in his office, in the Delaware Building, on the northeast corner of Dearborn and Randolph streets. Exhibitors here who have shown "Zigomar" all claim that it is a record-breaking attraction and many are so well pleased that they are asking for return dates to run this great sensational feature.

The Bowen Theater at 3021 East 92d street was entered by burglars sometime between midnight Sunday and the opening hour Monday afternoon and about $400, the day's proceeds of both the Bowen and Bessmer Theaters was taken from the safe. The window in the ticket office had been removed through which the burglars gained entrance to the theater, as the door to the ticket office was left open. The proceeds were larger than usual, as a big day's business was done at each theater. "Zigomar" being shown at the Bessmer, where Mr. Chelius, the manager, stated that he broke all records with this picture.

Mr. Carl Harthill of the Standard Film Exchange, has through faithful and excellent service, been promoted to chief aid to the general manager, the smiling and genial Mr. Hopp.

The Yale Theater at 336 West 63d street, has been remodeled and thoroughly decorated, both in the interior and exterior. A new curtain and new motiograph machine have been installed and add an immense improvement in the pictures shown. Mr. Lunn, manager of the Yale, stated that he was very well pleased with his new machine and that it certainly done all that was required of it. Mr. Lunn's opinion seems to be held by the most prominent exhibitors here as during my visits to them in the past month, wherever a new machine has been installed, the same was a Motiograph, which is rapidly gaining in its already large list of satisfied buyers.

The Alice Theater at 3056 Lincoln Avenue, which is situated in the midst of strong trust competition, seemed to be doing all the business in its territory last Thursday, when Thanhouser's feature, "She," was shown here. Manager Frank Ewald said that if it was not for the excellent feature subjects put out by the Independent manufacturers, he would have a hard battle beating his competitors. He was also high in his praise of the Bison and American companies' Western productions.

Mr. John Hayes, formerly with the United States Film Exchange, has accepted a position with the Swanson and Crawford people of St. Louis. Mr. Hayes left Chicago last week for French Lick Springs, Indiana, where he will visit for a few days, before going west to take up his new duties.

Last week at an entertainment given in the Gold Room in the Auditorium Hotel by the Michigan Society, moving pictures showing the trip from Chicago to the Michigan fruit lands, was the pleasing feature of the entertainment. Among those present was Governor Osborn, of Michigan, U.

WARNER KENNEDY.

London Office of the News,
8 Sherwood Street, W.

The formation of the "Kinematograph Club" advanced a stage this week, a meeting being held at the Holborn Restaurant under the chairmanship of Mr. E. T. Heron, proprietor of the Kinematograph Weekly, who has taken a leading part in the movement from the start, which adopted resolutions declaring the desirability of such a club being formed. It is proposed that the club, which possesses premises in every way suitable for the purposes of film men in Coventry street, and special advantages are extended by this organization to the first members of the Kine Club, who will be admitted without the usual £5/5 entrance fee. The subscription is, I believe, to be fixed at £5/5 per annum and this is the only weakness of the scheme, the amount being regarded as too large by many of what may be called the junior members of the trade. It is to be hoped, however, that all difficulties will be overcome and a really strong and representative club formed.

* * * *

I don't know if copies of John Bull ever reach New York. This weekly periodical, which is under the direction of Mr. Horatio Bottomley, M. P., appeals to the public, or to that section of it which likes its reading matter highly spiced, mainly on the strength of more or less sensational "exposures" of some person or organization. One week it is the Salvation Army, and this, a great insurance company. Mr. Bottomley has had to pay damages more than once, but his nose for scandal is as keen as ever and he has just recently found another mare's nest. He alleges that cinematograph shows of an immoral character are given in so-called "clubs" in London, regularly, and his article is full of details calculated to sharpen the curiosity of the nasty-minded section of the public. The only details he doesn't give are the addresses of the clubs, of which he apparently knows so much, and one cannot help wondering why he did not place his information at the disposal of the police if his real desire was to remove an evil rather than to keep up his circulation.

* * * *

One can never be sure, but most members of the trade are inclined to doubt very strongly whether shows of this kind, charging for admission more or less directly could be held in London without detection. That isolated shows of a doubtful character have been given is generally suspected, but they have in no case been shows given for money. A person who attempted to run a picture show of an immoral character for profit would almost inevitably be betrayed to the police. The whole question is an unpleasant one and there is a very strong feeling in film circles that the trade as a whole is unfairly reflected upon by such articles as those of John Bull. If the latter is really honest in its desire for purity of entertainments let its conductor place any facts he is possessed of before the leading members of the trade, and he will find them more than willing to co-operate with him.

* * * *

The Kine Weekly secured something of a "scoop" this week by publishing a letter from the London County Council stating the latter body's official attitude with regard to Non-Flam film. Mr. L. Gomme, clerk of the Council, stated that the Council's method of testing inflammability was to apply a flame to a portion of the film, and further, that the Council regarded as Non-Flam a film which would not support flame readily. He added, however, rather ominously, that in view of a recent decision of the Folkestone Magistrates in the opposite direction, a more stringent policy might be adopted in the near future, which looks as though trouble might be in store for the showman who relies upon the use of Non-Flam to get around the provisions of the Cinematograph Act.

* * * *

Mr. Urban is back, and with that useful knack which he has always possessed has been getting some fine "boosts" with regard to his "Kinemacolor" Durbar pictures, in the daily press. I hope to see the latter in the course of a day or two and to let "News" readers have an account of their quality.

HE INSISTED ON BEING A CASHIER

Gaumont Release

Harry Cower just longed to get a job as a bank cashier. But eccentric tramp that he was he had neither clothes nor experience to recommend him. His application was turned down most coldly, so he stole the President's pocketbook full of currency, just for spite and while being hotly pursued by bank employees hid it unseen in a hatrack bench. He is captured but refuses to reveal location of the stolen pocketbook. Sherlock Holmes is put on the job. He, in the guise of a fellow tramp prisoner, does focus the light to a head, only, however, after Cower has succeeded in obtaining the desired cashiership, in which capacity he cashes the check that gives Holmes the payment for his services rendered.

MR. LE BLACK LEARNS TO FLY

Mr. Le Black, an inventive genius enthusiastic to solve the problem of flight for man, exploits many a ludicrous theory only to learn that all fail miserably to advance him in his scientific pursuits. The difficulties that Le Black brings upon himself are those that could only befall such a whirlwind inventor.

THE SMUGGLER

Gaumont Release, February 24

A problem story, such as if dramatized for the legitimate theater, would fill a long run in some New York playhouse.

Two sisters and their father have taken up summer residence in a rural mountain cottage. They receive a visit from their brother and a friend, both customs officers. During the visit the sisters go off for a brisk mountain trot. While gathering wild flowers the younger sister falls into a deep abyss. You can see her dropping, dropping down the precipitous rocks, luckily to be caught in a cluster of protruding shrubbery, which holds her all unconscious until a volunteer mountaineer descends on rope to the depths below and carries the limp body to safety.

The event of her rescue is being duly celebrated at the homely hut, when two mountain officers bring in a long-sought smuggler as captive. The two custom officials arraign their prize until the two girls recognize him as the daring rescuer. They reveal the identity of their benefactor to the brother, who when alone offers his charge all the chances of escape only to be informed that the smuggler-hero steadfastly refuses to implicate the customs officer by escaping from his keeping. He awaits his punishment. What happens to him?

THE TALE OF A DOG

Fido loves his master—and he loves the dog equally as much. They are inseparable, so much so, in fact, that when Fido's master marries, his love for the canine quite sends his pretty young wife into fits of jealousy. This makes things so unbearable that she orders the cute little woolly poodle shot, in spite of the sorrow cast upon the husband.

She is now satisfied, until she notices that her husband often steals away from her most suspiciously. One day she resolves to follow him on his secret visits. After a long journey, she sees him enter a fashionable building. She prepares to tear her hair in frenzy as she peeps through the window, but desists in her madness, as she sees her husband fondle the dog she had had shot. Realizing that the beast had been cured of his wound and that her husband could not be separated from the Fido that he loved, she relents in her jealousy and promises to take the dog into their home and thereby all ends well.

HUMAN NATURE

Republic Release, February 17

REP A story full of laughs and pathos, that shows the failings as well as the virtues of human nature. An old father who has brought up a family of sons and daughters by hard work and loving kindness, finds himself in the way in his own household.

The sons and daughters whom he attended during their childish ailments, for whom he slaved and toiled, pass him as though he were a stranger and pay absolutely no attention to his wants. He is eventually shifted to a garret room without kith or kin near. Not being prosperous, his family forget him, almost entirely, and he is left to his garret and thoughts.

An old friend finds him in this condition and suggests a plan which will make his family pay closer attention to him and care for him as he deserves to be cared for in his old age. His friend starts a rumor that he is in possession of a large sum of money, which he is to give to the old man for a service that the old man had rendered to a millionaire in days of poverty.

Everything immediately changes, the old man is given the best room in the house, every attention is showered upon him, and he begins to enjoy the rest he justly earned in his old age. The old man finally gathers his family together and tells them that when he dies, everything will be left to his family to be equally divided. The attentions he has been showered with begin anew, and till his last days on earth, all the comforts and pleasures he deserves are his.

After the old man's death, his will is read by his friend and contains only the following item:

"I bequeath to my family all my riches, which consist of gratitude, for having made my last days on earth peaceful and happy."

THE GIRL WHO WAITED

Republic Release, February 18

George Benson, son of a rich lumber merchant, and John Dalroy, an employee of the lumber yard, are both in love with the same girl, Mary Moore. John obtains Mary's promise to become his wife.

When John draws the payroll from the bank George sees an opportunity to get even with his rival. He takes the money and the blame is placed on John, who is arrested in the girl's presence. Even though convicted, Mary assures him she believes in his innocence and that she will wait for him. After having served two years in prison, John is released and comes back to his home town.

On his way from the station he meets his old rival, George Benson—he is jeered at and mocked. John then realizes that if he goes back to Mary, he will only bring disgrace upon her, and decides for her sake to leave for the North. He writes to this effect and leaves. George sees John get on the train and is satisfied with the result of his plans. His pleasure is short-lived, however, as a severe cough that has been bothering him makes itself more pronounced, and shows that George is on the verge of consumption. Mary receives John's note and is heart-broken. George, coming on the scene, tries to console Mary, but her heart is with the boy who is going out of her life.

George finally succumbs to tuberculosis. He makes a confession of having taken the money and placing the blame on John; Mary insists that George's father do everything in his power to bring John back. He writes a letter to a friend in the North (a guide) giving the description of John and begging him to search the entire country for him. John, when he reaches the Northern country, buys a dog outfit and team off a guide and engages him to take him over the hills. The guide, desirous of getting the gold that John has in his possession, shoots John and escapes with the dog team. He is later killed by a fall over an embankment, the dog team falling on top of him.

The girl in the meantime prays for her sweetheart's return, and each moment seems to her an eternity. After the attack that the treacherous guide had made on him, John wanders through a blinding snowstorm, wounded and slowly freezing to death; he finally falls exhausted, and as he lays on the ground, the falling snow slowly covers the body until a blizzard finally buries him from sight. The guides, having located John's trail, finally come to his frozen body. They put him on the sled and slowly go over the hills. The girl who has been waiting for the return of her sweetheart little dreams that he will be brought home to her dead.

HONOR THY FATHER

Majestic Release, February 9

Left motherless at seventeen, Mary Fullner had quietly but firmly stepped into her mother's place as not only the head but support of the family.

Her father—heaven save the mark—had married beneath him and had been disowned by his aristocratic family for so doing, and the woman who felt that she had caused him to lose so much brought up her daughter with but one idea—that father's happiness and comfort were to be always the first consideration. The scion of aristocracy paid this devotion by sinking to depth after depth of ignominy until, at the time of his wife's death, his entire existence was spent in a cheap drinking place where long custom had established for him a certain amount of credit.

Mary, as her mother before her, toiled ten and twelve hours a day at back-breaking ironing in a nearby laundry that support money might be secured to keep a roof, however wretched, over her father and to feed his capricious appetite, which indeed craved almost entirely the liquid refreshments.

As the girl grew older, while never regardless of the injunction in her mother's Bible to "Honor thy Father," she could not but bitterly gaze at times when her father sprawled in drunken stupor upon his couch as she forced her weary little fingers to fasten her shabby cloak about her as she made ready for another day's toil.

She seemed doomed to a life of dull, joyless, body-breaking, spirit-crushing work with never a ray of sunshine to cast a high light upon the dull monotony of her existence.

Dame Fortune, however, in a whimsical moment, while seeming to plunge the child still further in despair, throws carelessly before the girl a prospect of happiness so great that Mary's little hands seek to still the choking beating of her young heart as she sits at night dreaming of the Prince Charming who has so unexpectedly entered her life.

John Hollister, a rising young attorney whose heart has kept singularly fancy free through twenty-six years, by the mischance of a ruined shirt, finds himself looking into the eyes of the first girl that ever caused him a second thought.

Jack soon constitutes himself Mary's escort from her work to the miserable tenement which sheltered so badly such a flower. A proposal, and that ever wonderful thing, an engagement ring, quickly followed and then, with the cup of happiness hurled at her very lips, it was dashed away by the rude hands of the man whom her well-thumbed Bible commanded her to honor—her father.

Her fiancé's introduction to her father took place under circumstances so terrible that the girl felt only one thing could be done—return Jack his ring and freedom and then once more wearily take up the burden of her former life, but Fortune again throws a careless trick upon the table and out of misery and tears Mary rises to her lover's heart.

ARRESTING FATHER

Majestic Release, February 11

Dick Remington receives the bump of his hitherto evenly joyous life, when, with a smiling confidence that he was far from feeling, he informed Ethel Milton's father that he was considering seriously presenting himself to the Milton family as a son-in-law. Randolph Milton, a man of affairs, decided views and irascible temperament, had ideas of his own as to his daughter's future, and strangely enough, Dick had no place among them, and when the young fellow rather heatedly insisted upon his merits and qualifications as a husband for Ethel, Milton ended the discussion by having the assurant young man thrown bodily from his office.

The old gentleman's triumph was soon nullified, however, by his daughter's love for the young man, regardless of the fact that he was unable to obtain her father's favor.

As the time went on and Milton was unable to engineer a break between the young couple, he began to conceive a wholesome respect for the young rascal, whose resources seemed to be limitless. Becoming desperate, he decides upon a plan that leads to his own undoing. He makes arrangements to take his daughter to California, and leave her in charge of an aunt, trusting that three thousand miles of United States soil will provide a wide enough barrier to balk even so determined a suitor as Dick.

The dread of the separation, however, induces Ethel to assent to Dick's pleadings for an elopement.

Everything is planned to a detail, but money opens up a breach in Dick's defence, and his plans are betrayed to Ethel's father, and Dick finds himself tied securely to the very ladder at whose foot he was waiting the fair Ethel.

Father, who has maneuvred the check, laughs to scorn the young fellow's tearful remonstrances, and half dragging his reluctant daughter, boards the train for the West.

Dick, however, with an ingenuity and strength that only love could have inspired, succeeds in freeing himself, and as the California train is leaving, rushes by the gate-keeper and swings on the last car.

With father in full charge of Ethel, Dick soon realizes his helplessness, and upon the train's arrival in Plattesville, his home town, he leaves the train without Ethel but with a scheme that fills him with hope and confidence.

His uncle is the town marshal of the little town, and hurriedly enlisting him in his support, a wire is sent to the next station at which the through train stops, to have a certain elderly party and a young girl passing under the name of Milton taken from the train and held under arrest, without permission to communicate with anyone until the arrival of the town marshal of Plattesville, who will arrive with a noted Chicago detective, to take the prisoners back to Chicago, where they are wanted for a series of confidence games that they have perpetrated.

Milton, wild with wrath at the uncalled-for outrage, is hauled from his expensive stateroom and deposited in a squalid cell in the village lock-up. Ethel, who had been placed in a separate cell, is, of course, equally indignant, and at a loss to understand the cause of their detention, but the eminent detective, accompanied by the Plattesville town marshal, arriving upon the scene, she readily consents after a private and personal interview with the detective, who puts her through the third degree, to accompany him to the village justice of the peace and make a sworn confession.

The confession is that she loves him, and while father, stormily indignant, is tied hand and foot to a chair in the cell, Ethel is quietly and speedily married to the detective, who relaxes his official dignity to the point of removing his whiskers for the ceremony.

Dick, the "dandy detective," then induces the village authorities to permit him to confront the male prisoner with the girl's confession, and Milton realizes that he is at last whipped and is forced to bargain for his freedom from Dick by a promise for forgiveness.

Dick never reveals his deception to the village authorities, and leaves them feeling extremely important that they have been an important feature in the running down of two desperate criminals.

Dick loads the criminals on the next train for their home town and father, gracefully surrendering, gives the young couple his blessing as they depart on their honeymoon.

JIMMIE'S ARTFUL DODGE

Gaumont Release, February 27

Jimmie did not like arithmetic, but he did like his nurse, Julie. But mamma and papa insisted that Jimmie get his lessons right or else go to bed without supper. On this occasion, Jimmie could not add a column of figures correctly, so, much against the protestation of the good, faithful Julie, Jimmie was put supperless to bed. The nurse, however, conspired to steal some food to Jimmie, but being caught in the act, was forthwith discharged. That was enough for Jimmie. He shammed a deathly sickness, rolled his eyes way back in his head, worked his mouth most feverishly, and soon had his fond parents worried to distraction. Nothing would revive him, and even the knowledge of the physician they consulted was balked. In the throes of seeming death, the cunning schoolboy asked for a paper and with all the ceremony, attendant to the writing of a will, penned the fact that he wanted to see Julie again. At first the latter steadfastly refused to return but relented in haste when she read the messages of her dear little charge. Needless to state, Jimmie acted perfectly healthy and happy when his Julie was reinstated.

Mrs. Gabber soon joins the chattering pair, and en masse they keep close tab on Mr. Joy. They see him buy the latest thing in Parisian opera cloaks, also a massive bouquet of choice flowers. Then they conclude that poor Mrs. Joy should know of her husband's misdoings.

The Joys are having a joyful time preparatory to going to the theater, when the three fates, Mrs. Tittle, Mrs. Tattle and Mrs. Gabber, put in an appearance. Mr. Joy has his fling and then unceremoniously shows the ladies the door.

Out in the street, both Mrs. Tattle and Mrs. Gabber fall upon Mrs. Tittle and give her rather a rough deal. Mrs. Tittle seems unable to understand the situation, for the poor soul exclaims, "I never said a word!"

TIGHTWAD PAYS FOR A DOG

Tightwad, after angering his wife by refusing to buy her a bull pup to which she has taken a fancy, feels that he is in danger of a midnight raid on his trouser pockets by his spouse. Knowing that his wife has a horror of firearms, he hides the money in the barrel of his shotgun. The new safety deposit scheme is a good one, for Mrs. T. is unable to command the courage necessary for her to remove the money from the gun.

Tightwad sleeps on, peacefully sure of the safety of the bank roll, until his slumbers are disturbed by the howling of a stray dog under his window. Tightwad arises in his wrath, and various missiles are thrown at the dog without effect. Tightwad gets the shotgun and turns loose both barrels at the dog with good results, as the canine runs away and the concert ends.

Tightwad's triumph is short-lived, for his wife, awakened by the report of the gun, reminds him that his money has been blown out of the weapon, and that at last Tightwad has blown himself, and for a dog, too!

WHITE CLOUD'S SECRET

Nestor Release, February 7

Standing Eagle, a young Indian, has just returned from an Indian college. His father, While Cloud, is dying. He calls his son and tells him he wishes to disclose a secret ere he dies. White Cloud takes out a silver watch in which there is a picture of a young miner, and under it the name, "John Meredith." The father also shows the son an old wallet, which bears the same name.

White Cloud then relates how, when he was young, he saw this miner coming from a supply store, and, with another Indian, followed him for plunder. The miner fired upon them, killing the other Indian, but White Cloud killed the miner, took his watch, wallet and gold; then, as he heard the horsemen coming, hastily ran off and hid the gold, putting the watch and wallet in his pocket. The horseman found the dead miner, but did not catch White Cloud. White Cloud returns to get hidden gold, but no sooner did he stoop to get it than he imagined he saw the miner in front of him with finger pointed. He ran off in terror, and never again went near the spot. After telling his son this story, the old Indian dies.

A few days later Standing Eagle starts out to get the gold. Being an educated Indian, he is not superstitious like his father. After a long, weary search, he finds the white man's gold. Standing Eagle puts it in a belt around his waist and starts to again cross the desert to his shack.

In the heart of the desert he meets an outlaw whose horse has died. He gives the man food and drink, only to have his horse taken from him with the rest of his supplies. After many days in the desert without food or water, Jack Meredith, son of the miner, John Meredith, rides on and takes the Indian to his shack. Jack and his wife nurse Standing Eagle through a fever, and then Jack goes away to his mine. The Indian has completely recovered when the miner returns. His wife has taken the fever; Jack has been unsuccessful, and now with a sick wife, he is out of both money and supplies.

Upon his return the Indian recognizes Jack from the picture in the watch. Waiting until the doctor has pronounced the wife out of danger, Standing Eagle writes Jack the following note: "Your father's gold is returned with a Red Man's gratitude" —and goes quietly out of their lives.

HOPKINS' DOG-GONED LUCK

Nestor Release, Febbuary 5, 1912

Mrs. Hasher, the boarding house keeper, notifies Hopkins that unless he settles his bill he shall no longer eat at her table nor sleep under her roof. Poor Hopkins is both hungry and flabbergasted. He enlists Mary's help.

Mary is the waitress and quite obliging. Mrs. Hasher, however, with her poodle, Tootsie, is omnipresent and Hopkins' plan for a feed fail. That aching void sharpens the man's wits, and in a jiffy Tootsie vanishes. Mrs. Hasher is inconsolable; she appeals to her boarders but gets neither sympathy nor aid. Hopkins alone is moved. He inserts an ad. in the local paper, and next day the missing dog is found. Mrs. Hasher gladly pays a reward of twenty-five dollars to Hopkins' envoy.

Like a conquering hero, Hopkins returns to the boarding-house, settles his bill, pays two weeks in advance, and is duly installed as the star boarder.

On the same reel:

THE NEW PRINCE OF THE CHURCH

Only official motion pictures of the new Prince of the Church, showing His Eminence, Cardinal Farley, on board the steamer Berlin, surrounded by a coterie of Church dignitaries and public men such as Monsignor Edwards, Charles Francis Murphy, Judge Dowling, etc. The distinguished prelate is also seen coming down the gangplank, arriving at the Battery and going through the crowded streets of New York. There are splendid views of the Rosedale, the reception committee boat, Fifth avenue, and St. Patrick's Cathedral jammed with school children, the clergy and thousands of enthusiastic people. The wonderful night illumination of the Cathedral makes a fitting climax to so impressive a picture.

REFLECTIONS FROM THE FIRELIGHT

Imp Release, February 12

Captain Raynor, a one-armed veteran of the Civil War, is seated in his lodgings pondering. He goes to a trunk and takes out a package of letters and gazes at one intently. It awakens memories that are dear to him and he reflects.

He receives a letter from an old sweetheart, Mrs. Dutton, informing him of the death of her husband and asking him to call on her, as she has returned to her native village, where she will reside in the future. He goes gladly and finds her a sweet old lady who is very gracious.

Over a cup of tea at the fireside they conjure up memories of the past. The effect is visualized, the scenes reverting to the old couple when finished in sequence. The story is of their youth—when they were happy lovers—having plighted their troth. The war between the North and the South breaks out and Captain Raynor, patriotic and filled with the spirit of adventure, enlists.

He is seen bidding adieu to his sweetheart and marching away to the front.

There is a battle scene in which he receives an apparently mortal wound. He loses an arm and is reported among the killed. With his sleeve empty, he returns home just in time to pass a church from which a wedding party is emerging. It is his sweetheart—married to another man. He goes his way and she does not know. He is heartbroken and never marries. She later learns that he is still living but remains true to her husband until his death.

When the story is finished the old couple is seen seated by the fireside, toying with their teacups. The woman smiles on the old veteran kindly and then shows him a necklace he gave her years ago. She has always kept it sacred. He is visibly affected and turns to go. To him their romance ended at the church when he saw her the wife of another, happy in the radiance of youth. She detains him and then the old love is awakened in her breast. She holds out her arms to him and he realizes she still loves him. Breathing a prayer of thankfulness, he goes to her and takes her in his arms—reunited after many years.

THROUGH THE FLAMES

Imp Release, February 15

A story of a heroic engineer, who rescues the inhabitants of a burning village, while his wife hovers between life and death.

The wife of Engineer John Allen is stricken while preparing a lunch for her husband, who is expected in, pulling the local with his engine. His small boy rushes for the doctor, who responds and discovers she is dangerously ill.

The boy is despatched to bring the father. Allen descends from the running board of his locomotive happy at seeing his son with the lunch. The boy hastily tells him of the illness of his mother and he abandons his engine and hurries home.

In the meantime a forest fire is approaching a small village out on the road, carrying destruction in its wake. The operator wires for assistance, staying at his key until the office catches fire and the telegraph poles burn down. At last the operator on the other end understands.

A train must be sent to rescue the inhabitants of the doomed town. Allen's engine is the only one in. The operator sprints for his house and tells him of the threatened hamlet. Allen hesitates between love and duty but finally consents to go. Kissing his wife, he dashes out and mans his engine.

at a high rate of speed is dangerous, but he orders his firemen to feed the furnace and his engine rocks and sways through the smoke, reaching the village just in time. The villagers are panic-stricken. They gather a few belongings and tumble into the box-cars, and Allen backs his engine through the flames to a haven of safety, carrying his precious freight.

Once home, he is overjoyed to find the crisis passed and his wife out of danger. A delegation of citizens call on him and he is congratulated on all sides for his bravery.

The race of the engine to the threatened village is one of the most realistic bits of effect imaginable.

PUSHMOBILE RACE IN SAVANNAH

Imp Release, February 17

Down in the Sunny South recently the youngsters had a pushmobile race. The little machines were assigned numbers and names, and the contest was entered in with the greatest possible spiritedness.

The race took place amidst delightfully umbrageous surroundings, and some fine effects of sunlight playing across the view are secured in the picture, which appeals to the junior members of the audience.

THE TABLES TURNED

Rose Despard saw her young husband holding an interesting conversation at his office with another young lady. Enough for her! Jealousy immediately began its pernicious work in her mind. Home she goes and confides her troubles to her maid. This shrewd young woman sees a chance of ingratiating herself with her mistress and making a few extra dollars on the side. So she advises Mrs. Despard to feign madness in order to bring hubby to his senses.

When Ralph Despard arrives home things wore a terrible aspect. Here is the maid's chance. She persuades the husband to feign insanity in return in order to cure his wife and is rewarded for the suggestion by Ralph, who then behaves so very madly that Mrs. Despard has him conveyed to a sanitarium, where he is so roughly handled that he nearly dies.

When poor Mrs. Despard learns the truth, she hurries off to the sanitarium, obtains the release of her husband, upon whom she has so completely turned the tables, and endeavors by her endearments to atone for her mistake.

King Baggot as the husband; William Shay as the Sanitarium Manager and Miss Cummins as Rose Despard keep the fun going fast and furious.

A LEAP-YEAR COMEDY

American Release, February 22

Peter Miller, a widower with a grown son and daughter, sees his new neighbor, the widow Bonnie, also the mother of a grown son and daughter, and falls in love with her.

The first intimation Peter's children have that their father is a victim of Cupid, is when his daughter Jessie finds him in Sunday best vainly trying to conceal from her a generous bouquet he has gathered apropos to calling on the widow. Jessie immediately informs her brother Jack, who instructs her to keep an eye on her father.

The widow's daughter Pearl comes upon her mother in gala attire and suspects that mother is receiving attentions, and when her brother Bob returns immediately informs him of the state of affairs. He instructs his sister to keep an eye on her mother.

So when Peter called to pay his respects to Mrs. Bonnie, Pearl made an unwelcome third party and courtship was at a standstill. Peter departed in a huff and Mrs. Bonnie scolded her daughter in her vexation.

Peter returned home and encountered his son Jack, and immediately becomes possessed of a bright idea. He would take Jack along to the widow's home, guessing rightly that the young people would be interested in each other and leave him alone with the widow. And his scheme worked fine—Jack met Pearl and they wandered away leaving Peter and the widow in silent happiness for a whole minute before the widow's son Bob came up and insisted on helping his mother entertain Mr. Miller.

Poor Peter found he could not shake Bob, and returned home. But the widow was resourceful and she liked Peter. So she decided to call at his home, ostensibly to meet his daughter Jessie, in reality to see Peter. Donning her very best she started out and met her son Bob, who insisted that he escort her as he wanted to see Jack anyway. They were received by Peter and Jessie and Mrs. Bonnie introduced her son Bob to Peter's daughter Jessie. The young people were interested in each other and wandered away together, leaving Peter and the widow blissfully happy for a whole minute, until Peter's son Jack came home and insisted on monopolizing the widow's attention by telling her what a sweet daughter she has, etc., and Peter found he could not get a word in edgewise. But Widow Bonnie was shrewd and planned a ruse of her own.

1912 is leap year and February 29 only comes once in four years. She invites the widower and his children to a lawn party on February 29, knowing that Jack will monopolize Pearl and that Bob will want to be alone with Jessie. Everybody comes and the plan works fine. Jack and Pearl wander off to a pretty spot, and assisted somewhat by Pearl, who reminds him of the date, they plan to spend the future together, and Bob and Jessie likewise seek a secluded spot and become engaged. Alone with the widow at last, Peter has his chance—and is speechless. The widow realizes they have no time to lose. It is strange when a woman on marriage bent can not sense a way to make a man declare himself. She takes a calendar and calls his attention to the unusual date, and at last she makes him understand. He suggests they elope, and Peter writes a note on the back of the calendar:

CHILDREN—We will see you in a week.
FATHER AND MOTHER.

Pearl and Jack wake up from their love dream to remember the old folks need watching. The same thought possesses Jessie and Bob and both couples make a simultaneous rush to where they have left their respective parents. All they find is a calendar with the date, Feb. 29, and Peter's note. It dawns on the girls it is leap year and they mockingly propose to their sweethearts.

READIN', 'RITIN', AND 'RITHMETIC

Rex Release, February 4

The trite and tried maxim, "Follow thy father's footsteps," may be too literally interpreted. Particularly, if the father has tripped himself into love. In such a case trouble is going to brew—and there are going to be a few hops. Of course, we see somebody's finish, but this is how it starts:

Petite, pretty, sweet, sunshiny (and these adjectives are all bona fide) Miss Parker, the schoolmarm of the village school, is forced to distribute a parcel of punishment to Hezekial Smithers, an unruly member of the class, to whom we can apply no better descriptive appellation than "boob." Man may rule the world, but it is the women who rule the rulers—and that's straight! In this instance the wooden rule is commissioned to uphold the Golden one. Hezekial runs crying to his father, a big, blunt blacksmith, who determines at once to call upon the domineering teacher and give her a piece of his mind, little as he could spare it. He comes to the school—and sees a vision he did not expect. To paraphrase Mr. J. Caesar, he came, he saw, he was conquered. And he concurred with Miss Parker's "ruling," and returns home to add an epilogue to the latter's work; only he used a different kind of a log; and it was almost an eclipse of the son.

As the days go by, Smither, Sr., confides to himself that he is falling in love with Miss Parker, argues the matter with, and finally convinces himself. Meantime, in the schoolroom, Miss Parker is diligently and delicately attempting to make something of her unpromising pupil. He is about as hopeless as despair, but Miss Parker perseveres—remember, she is a teacher. The boy is just foolish enough to misconstrue interest and determination for attention and affection, and he falls desperately in love with the little school miss. Father and son proceed to love her, while she, unfortunately, is unaware of her dangerous popularity and her duplex desirability.

One Sunday afternoon it comes to pass that father and son don their joy clothes, with the heroic determination to call on the teacher and press their suits—which, of course, they should have done in advance. Both covertly and curiously observe the other in his tonsorial efforts with a little wonder and a little jealousy, and their labors at last at an end, unknown to each other, they set out to capture the unanimous prize.

They meet each other—and their downfall—at the teacher's home. Amazed and amused at the twin proposal, she solves the dilemma of a decision by introducing her sweetheart to the panic-stricken Rummy-eos.

Sadder, but more foolish, they return to their home. Morose and melancholy they ruminate on the sad situation. And with the instinct of those with a common misery, they console each other in their grief.

THROUGH TWISTING LANES

Rex Release, February 11

That venerable and versatile expression, "Love will find a way," has been so overworked since some romantically optimistic person first foisted it that we really think it ought to be retired on a pension—or suspension. But in this particular instance our pen cannot shun it, because it is the most appropriate phrase in our language to describe the whys, wherefores and wherebys of the events in the story. There are many tears in the heart that never reach the eyes; and with this philosophical remark we proceed with the tale.

It is a day of sunshine and balm and roses and peace. Every leaf is a psalm, every stone a sermon of old earth's reiuvenescence, and the earth laughs with glee in its vernal prime. Spring is in the air, and spring is in the hearts of—two.

Fred Blair, the artist, hears the call of balmy out-doors, and with easel, brushes, palette and the season's inspiration, responds to the summons.

And this very spring day fair Marion fain would go a-walking. Wending her musing way along the country roadside, she comes across Fred assiduously violating Nature's copyright on one of her prettiest landscapes. The girl stands watching the industrious youth, absorbed in his colors, until—bold, blue eyes glance up to meet two that are shy with sweet modesty and filled with the wistful yearning and tender mystery of youth. The girl's eyes are quickly averted; but the blue as quickly note that they are bright and brown—as brown as the study he is in. We have said that spring's song was in the air, spring's laughter in the things of earth and youth's robust gaiety in the hearts of man and maid—so what if they do walk off together, chatting, laughing, with many covert glances one at the other?

Thereafter, they meet again. And thereafter, yet again. But what need to apologize for them? Not the first time that youth and youth have met and mated! The friendship graduates into intimacy, into sentiment, into a vast and vital love. Fred meets Marion's father, a headstrong farmer with respect only for those who dig for the things of the soil. He frowns upon their romance, tells Fred his daughter will marry a farmer, not a paint-mixing canvas decorator.

But know ye how love chooseth!—she ignores her father's stern edict, and goes away with the man she loves. Youth, and love, two fiery insurrectionists whose moods and mysteries ever the old forget. But sometimes love is more than red roses—cold steel and thorns and a tear in the heart.

She writes her father, but never an answer comes, and the brave heart of the little rebel is filled with sorrow and sighs, when Fred hits upon a plan! He goes to his father-in-law in the garb of a farm-hand, solicits and obtains work, and wins the good graces and friendship of the stern parent. Then Marion returns and tells her father she has left her husband to return to him and his love; and just as

THE BARGAIN

Rex Release, February 8

Before man asked the soil for more than crops, and dug into it for yellow gold and the things of hell, some folks were happy. The yellow lure tainted the hearts of man and his wife with its own sordid color, and made their hands a deeper hue. Cain was multiplied, malice was born, deceit and treason became more than words. All the creeds and edicts of man cannot compete with the tempting metal. To-day as in the beginning, to-morrow as to-day.

May Shirwood and Frank Black are in love—love as we read of it in novels. But May's sister, Bird, is herself secretly in love with Frank, and May's happiness is her own antithesis. The lovers know not the secret sorrow of Bird, and their happiness is complete. It may sound cynical, but complete happiness isn't a permanent institution. Therefore, the inevitable.

One George A. Thornton figures in this story, as he perhaps does by a different name in every other story of love simple and sincere—and the figure is a large one. Thornton is May's employer, a broker of wealth and social prestige, who suddenly takes it upon himself to observe that May is comely, coy and altogether desirable. One day, when May is detained late at the office, Thornton takes her home in his automobile, and stops at the house for a brief while. May's mother, being a mother, sees in Thornton's manner a suggestion of affection for May. She urges May to encourage her employer, pointing out the social and monetary advantages of an alliance with him. The girl, grief-stricken and stunned by her mother's urgings, rebels against her exhortations, until she can no longer tolerate their aggressive and aggrieved note. Out of filial duty, placing her mother's desires above her own, she dismisses Frank and accepts Thornton.

Frank, whose faithful love and sincerity could not balance with his wealthy rival's more material possessions, looks through the window of May's home, and sees her marriage to Thornton. In his desperate grief, he turns his footsteps sorrowfully away from the joyful scene, another soul to curse the idle idolatry of Mammon.

Again the inevitable. Thornton spends his evenings at clubs and cafes and invariably returns home in a drunken stupor. May, who has jewels, costly dresses and all the other idle items of feminine craving, is doomed to discover the sad truth that these do not make up for the great lack of tenderness and companionship. And one night—it happens. He returns home in a state of incoherent intoxication, and attempts to make love to her. Overcome with nausea at the repellent sight, she designs to leave the room, when her husband stops her egress, brutally takes hold of her and tells her she is his, his to do with as he sees fit, that he has bought her, that her jewels and her silken gowns are the price of her chosen slavery. And she decides to go home.

She comes to the house, looks through the window, and sees there a sight as on such a night another had seen—sees her sister being given in marriage to Frank. She realizes the bargain she has made, the cost she has paid for the velvet and gilt of wealth, and slowly wends her way back to the gilded cage.

THE TURNING POINT

Powers Release, February 13

His early life was one long battle against Fate. His mother was attacked by blindness, the result of hard work, and because of his poverty he was unable to provide the necessary treatment, which the physician said she required. His mother's total blindness, followed by her death, left him embittered against the entire world and filled him with one overwhelming desire—to accumulate wealth, the only power the world recognizes.

He succeeded, he became rich beyond expectations, but his heart remained hard, his nature unsympathetic and deaf to all appeals of a charitable nature. History repeats itself. He had a stenographer, who was supporting her mother. The time came when this mother was also attacked by blindness. When the poor girl was informed of the condition of affairs and that it would require a fee of five hundred dollars to restore her mother's sight, she was crushed with grief, for she did not have the money. The cashier, who cared for the stenographer, thought he saw his way clear to helping her by advancing the necessary sum out of the firm's cash, intending to replace it before pay-day. Unfortunately, the cashier was ordered to report for duty in South America and an auditor arrived who went over his accounts and discovered the shortage. The hard-hearted head of the concern was informed of the apparent theft of the money and ordered his cashier's immediate arrest. The stenographer went to him, explained matters most fully, and plead for forgiveness for the cashier, but without avail. The man was obdurate.

Then it was that he had a vision of his own past life, his own mother's need, and his inability to assist her. In a moment his heart was softened. His eyes were opened to a new view of life and he relented. The officer who came to lead the cashier to prison was sent away.

A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE

Powers Release, February 17

There are moments in the lives of all of us when we must make great sacrifices. Sometimes of name—sometimes of material value. Yet among all of us is the woman who struggles the longest against the circumstances that force her to humble herself. In this story, however, the exceptional woman stands out in bold relief with a background of intrigue and infidelity; the very people in comparison with whom her nobility shines overwhelmingly, brilliantly, are given the opportunity of pointing her out as the guilty one. Does she resent it, and turn upon the villainess even while she is denouncing her? Does she tell the misled husband the true state of affairs about that little midnight supper in the artist's studio?

NEW BUSINESS

And plenty of it this year for the

"HALLBERG ECONOMIZER"

But the most gratifying endorsement is that of exhibitors who have been using "THE HALLBERG" for years; when they open new theaters no other current saver will do. This tells the story. The "imitations" are cheaper only in first cost. You must pay a little more for the best, but you will soon be repaid by "THE HALLBERG" not only in saving on electric bills but in the brilliancy of your pictures and satisfaction to your patrons. If you have any doubts, write to me and I will give you the names of exhibitors in your neighborhood and you can soon convince yourself.

She might if it were a matter of only her own self, but the thought of an instant takes her to a little room above where two big blue eyes are closed in the peaceful slumbering childhood; then it is that the great spirit of sacrifice comes upon her and she accepts without remonstration the denunciation of the ill sinner.

And thus does she pass out of their lives—their savior, yet—a woman of no importance.

THE STOLEN LETTER

Reliance Release, February 7

RELIANCE.

John leaves his wealthy sweetheart, Belle, in the country and comes to the city to make good and secure enough money to start a home on. In the city he enters a contractor's office and is soon assigned to some strenuous building work. At the boarding house where he stops he meets May, a pretty little stenographer. They are mutually attracted and he is gradually weaned away from Belle. He makes good and feels in honor bound to write Belle and remind her of her promise. May learns of it and is heartbroken. When Belle's answer comes, May finds it first, and fearing lest Belle had written for him to come to her, she steals the letter. Later her conscience bothers her so that she goes to John and giving him the letter makes a confession of the wrong she has done him. She goes to her room and starts packing up, when John, opening the letter, finds it a polite note from Belle telling of her forthcoming marriage to another man. Seeking out May he tells her the good news and both find happiness in each other's arms.

BEDELIA'S BUSY MORNING

Reliance Release, February 10

Bedelia is the culinary authority of the Jones family and the scene opens with her emphatic protest against the cuckoo clock awakening her. The shoes she throws at that modest bird in an endeavor to submerge its morning call, fall shy a few feet and disappear out of the window to find lodgement upon the head of a passing policeman. After passing the time of day with that worthy gentleman, she leisurely dresses and repairs to the kitchen, arriving there a bit ahead of time through the medium of a cake of soap inadvertently placed upon the stairway. The stove blows up, from which she is saved by the milkman who is making violent love to her, and he finds himself enmeshed in the flour and dough Bedelia has prepared for a more thorough kneading. As the door opens, thinking it the milkman, Bedelia lets fly the remainder of the dough. This meeting the surprised countenance of the lady of the house, instead of the milkman, precipitates an argument in which Bedelia voices her protest by breaking the china and making a hasty but dignified departure.

Tony O'Sullivan is inimitable as Bedelia.

The Natural History Series, which completes this reel, consists of the method of catching deadly snakes, treating the poisonous bite and in showing how the Kind snake, the enemy of the deadly poisonous snake, sheds its skin.

A BURGLAR'S LOVE

Great Northern Release, February 10

Two men, one a typical housebreaker, and the other but a young fellow who looks as though adverse circumstances alone had led him into his present state of life, are seen in the privacy of their room preparing for a raid upon their more fortunate neighbors. Equipped with the necessary implements carefully concealed from the public gaze in a bag, they make their way to a field selected for their operations. Arriving at the large ornamental iron gates leading into the grounds, the elder tries, but without success, to unlock the fastening. There is nothing else left but for one of them to climb over, and this falls to the lot of the younger man. The bag is passed over to him, and while his confederate keeps guard, he cautiously creeps up to a window. Assuring himself that all is quiet, he climbs in and looks about for plunder. He opens a drawer and congratulates himself on finding a number of valuables which he calmly places in his bag. A slight stir startles him, and looking about, he finds that he is in the bedroom of the daughter of the house, and that she has moved in her sleep. He looks at her and is so struck with her beauty that he cannot find it in his heart to rob her. He turns back to his bag, and taking the trinkets out, replaces them in their former resting place. Gathering up his belongings, he once more bends over the girl, and then going to the window, jumps out. At the gates, he tosses the bag to his "pal," and following it, is eagerly asked the extent of the spoil. He replies that he has none, and not in a fit mood to talk to his mentor, shrugs his shoulders and walks on. The next day the young fellow longs so much to see the girl, that arrayed in his best, he waits at the gate of her house. Luck is on his side, for she comes out, and fumbling with the handle, happens to drop her handbag, whihc Jack immediately picks up and returns. A week later we see the young lady waiting on a seat for her lover, for such Jack has now become, and when the object of her thoughts walks up, and upon making her a small gift, is presented with her photo. Later, Jack calls upon her at her home, and, after speaking to her parents, who have no objection to his paying court to their daughter, takes the latter aside, proposes and is accepted. Returning to his room, Jack's happiness is marred by the sight of a communication addressed to him from his old confederate. It reads that next day the races will be held, and that there is every chance of doing good "business." The next day dawns and Jack feels compelled to answer the summons. At the races the two thieves get to work. Jack steals a lady's bag, unaware that behind him a cinematograph machine, pointed at the race course, is also registering his every action. Some time after, Jack takes his fiance to a picture show, and there to his horror and to his infinite disgust, sees himself stealing the bag. The girl, almost heartbroken, leaves him, and the next day, when he pleads with her, absolutely refuses to hold any further communication with him. Jack wanders to a seat by the roadside, and there sees a gentleman drop a wallet of notes. Honesty and dishonesty fight within him, but the thought of the girl decides him, and hurrying after the gentleman, he returns the notes and is given a substantial reward. At his lodging the other thief turns up and tries to get Jack to help at another robbery. The youngster refuses, and stares lovingly at the photo of the girl. The man, seeing this, snatches the likeness from his hand, and flings it on the floor. This is more than Jack can stand, and catching hold of the villain, he kicks him out of the room. Some time after, Jack is instrumental in saving his sweetheart's house from being robbed by his former companion, who, as he leaves the grounds, runs into the arms of a waiting policeman. Jack now having proved his worth, once more presents himself at the "Hall," and after pleading with the girl of his heart, their former sweet relations are resumed.

MRS. CRANSTON'S JEWELS

Solax Release, February 9

Good psychological stories are not only the most difficult to get, but are the most difficult to produce. While manufacturers are always only too willing to produce a "psychological," they are not always very certain whether they have succeeded in transmitting to the screen all there is in the story. It is very hard to show the working of a mind, or a number of minds, by a series of pictures.

In the Solax production of "Mrs. Cranston's Jewels," the release of Friday, February 9, we see two cultured and perhaps trained minds working along the same lines, and arriving at diametrically opposite results.

The husband of Mrs. Cranston is in tight quarters. He is caught both "short" in funds and in stock. In order that he may be able to cover up his margins, he decides to rob his wife's jewels. He zealously plans to do so, but his wife anticipates him and steals the jewels herself; she having reason to believe that he would attempt the crime in a moment of weakness.

The husband, when he finds that his wife's jewels are missing, raises a "hue and cry," and the police take up the case. After considerable investigation, the crime is traced to Mrs. Cranston. How do you think the story ends? Order the film and find out. It is released Friday, February 9.

LEND ME YOUR WIFE

Solax Release, February 11

Ah! Ha! Billy Quirk at his old game of forcing folks to split their ribs. Do you know Billy?

The inimitable Billy Quirk needs a wife in order to inherit his vociferous Western's uncle's fortune. Billy borrows his friend's wife. After a volcanic and side-splitting series of incidents, the breezy western uncle blows into town tagging with him a pretty stenographer. Well, you leave it to Billy. He gets rid of his borrowed wife in a hurry. And the uncle—what's the use! The story is as funny as a wooden leg would be on the Statue of Liberty.

A TERRIBLE LESSON

Solax Release, February 16

In our production of "A Terrible Lesson," which is to be released Friday, February 16, one of the most realistic gambling scenes is shown on the screen. The story involves a man who goes to a gambling den regardless of the protestations of his wife. He is extremely lucky, and his luck attracts attention. Strangers become friendly with him, and he, being a "good feller," "sets up" the crowd. After the night's playing, he is advised by the owner of the den that it would be hazardous for him to attempt going home alone with so much cash on his person. Chance decides to remain over night. He is shown to a room.

During the night, he not only finds that he has been trapped, but an attempt is made on his life. The panels on the wall disclose to him the eyes of a person, while his bed begins to sink gradually below the floor. Chance makes his escape, however.

The strong character of the plot made necessary a succession of incidents which would sustain the interest. The climax almost "takes one's breath away." The story is compelling and forceful. Indeed it is one of the strongest dramas from the Solax studios.

SURELOCK JONES, DETECTIVE

Thanhouser Release, February 16

A learned professor who lives in a small country town, and whose life has always been cast in the most peaceful surroundings, is secretly a student of criminology, and a profound believer in the deduction theory. The person he most admires is one Surelock Jones, a sleuth of renown, who has attained much notoriety by his bizarre methods.

The detective has seen and admired the professor's daughter, which is one reason why he accepts an invitation to visit the professor at his country home. For the girl is a problem. Surelock can prove to his satisfaction, by deduction, that she loves him, and he is anxious to demonstrate that his theory is correct.

The girl, however, loves another, a young man who is not a detective, and does not want to be one. All he desires is to win the girl of his choice, and she has told him that she will be his, which is much better than any deduction.

Surelock arrives in the country and finds that the father favors his suit. The girl, however, does not care for him, even though he tells her some of his wonderful cases, and proves them by newspaper clippings. And the young man of the girl's choice finds that he has a stormy time ahead, due to parental opposition.

So he decides to "show up" the detective. While the distinguished guest is a visitor in the country, two mysterious crimes are committed. There is first the "Mystery of the False Face," and second, "The Strange Case of the Vanished Heiress." These are the kind of crimes that he has always reveled in. Strange to say, he does not solve either.

Oddly enough, the girl's sweetheart, although absolutely devoid of detective standing, scores in each instance. He clears up "The Mystery of the False Face" by means of a Dachshund and a sausage, while "The Strange Case of the Missing Heiress" is unraveled by the aid of an old trunk and a party of merrymakers.

Surelock Jones goes back to town without the girl, wondering at his failure as a detective. He cannot explain it, but the girl and his sweetheart, who is now high in the father's favor, could. But they never did, because the father had always believed in deduction.

THE SILENT WITNESS

Thanhouser Release, February 13

The president of a state bank, who has become deeply involved through speculation, finds that the district attorney has evidence that will send him to jail. In a last effort to escape the consequences of his crime, the banker calls on the official of the law, and succeeds in bribing him to suppress the case.

Not only is the district attorney a grafter, but his secretary is of much the same calibre. He has been watching his chief for weeks, hoping to "get the goods on him," and he finally succeeds. During the conference between the district attorney and the banker, the dishonest secretary is hidden in an adjoining room, and unseen by the others, he takes a photograph over the transom just at the interesting moment when a considerable sum of money changes hands.

The secretary develops the picture, and finds that it is excellent. Whereupon he proceeds to blackmail his employer, and finds it impossible to live extravagantly without work. He laughs at the district attorney, and retains the evidence of the official's crimes, knowing that he is safe as long as he can place hands on it.

Among the friends of the secretary are a young couple, and the secretary, becoming idle and dissipated, proceeds to make love to the wife. He hides his passion until one evening when he finds the wife alone. Then he boldly tries to embrace her, and she struggles to escape.

The husband comes back at this moment, and makes a rush for the would-be despoiler of his home. A lamp, the only light in the room, is upset, and the place is dark. Then there is a flash and a shot, and the young blackmailer falls to the floor, dead.

The police are promptly on the scene, having heard the shot, and find the couple in the room with the body of their one time friend. The wife thinks the husband fired in anger, the husband believes the wife shot to protect herself. The woman faints, the man "confesses," and is led off to prison.

Neither they or the police suspect the district attorney, but he is the guilty man. Driven half mad by the constantly increasing demands of the blackmailer, he had followed him through the streets, determined to end his life of torment. At the house he saw his chance and took it.

The district attorney is called upon to prosecute a man he knows to be innocent. Then the situation is further complicated by the wife who, to save her husband, confesses that she is the guilty person. The district attorney, in his summing up, accuses them both. His speech is well under way when an unexpected witness appears at the last moment.

The slain man occupied a furnished room, and the place was being put in order for a new tenant. The maid, in the course of her work, discovered a packet, cunningly hidden, containing proofs of the district attorney's guilt, and the strong inference that he was the only person who was interested in putting the secretary out of the way. Suddenly confronted with this evidence, the prosecutor broke down and confessed. Husband and wife, each of whom had tried to take the consequence of a crime to save the other, find that both are guiltless, and are set free.

ROBERT G. FOWLER, TRANSCONTINENTAL AVIATOR

Champion Release, February 12

This picture represents the first successful attempt to photograph God's earth from a darting aeroplane. Robert G. Fowler is herein shown leaving San Francisco in his flying machine for his trans-continental flight to the Atlantic seaboard. What a furore was created by the daily papers all over the country when Fowler made his ascension from the Golden Gate, and how everybody did read and watch for the details of this daring feat. How much more pleasing, interesting and exhilarating to the sight to behold on the screen the actuality of the event! Therefore has the Champion Film Company embodied this treat in its release of February 12.

After witnessing about seventy-five feet of film showing Fowler's start from the Pacific Coast, we behold the beautiful Southwestern town of Beaumont, Texas, exactly as photographed by the camera men accompanying Fowler on his flight. This is a marvelous sight! The first of its kind. As you behold this picture, the sensation you experience is of one in the actual position of observer from the height at which it was taken. The picture is markedly educational, and none who witness it can fail to appreciate the danger attached to such an enterprise.

On the same reel:

MR. PIDDI REBELS

Mr. Piddie is a small man. His wife is a militant suffragist, and is large, robust and beautiful. We behold poor Piddie compelled to do the chores, feed the cat, and to prepare the meal against his wife's return. Piddie has been habituated to this submissive routine, but to-day we find him in the role of a rebel. It all happens when Piddie's old college chum, Charley Parsons, arrives.

As Parsons enters Piddie slams the oven door, unconsciously closing in the kitten, which had crawled in. Parsons takes in the situation of Piddie's servility, and outlines a plan of rebellion. War is declared, and the two friends prepare to concoct a nice dish for Mrs. Piddie's dinner. Flour, salt, soap, vinegar, lard, coffee-grounds, and last but not least, a piece of dish-rag. Ye gods and little sardines! Was there ever such a concoction? Parsons then takes his leave in a wildly hilarious manner, and Piddie excitedly awaits the coming of his wife. She does come, she sees, but does not conquer! Greatly absorbed in her thoughts, she swallows some of the vile stuff before she is aware of it; her stomach rebels. Piddie looks on in convulsive quietness.' While she performs the ejectment act, he flings defiance in her face, and also with it her pet cat, done brown in the oven.

FOR HER FATHER'S SAKE

Champion Release, February 14

Harold Mordaunt loves Bess Darrell. Harold is a splendid fellow, well worthy the charming girl who has plighted him her troth. The father of Bess is a broker, a man of splendid poise and aristocratic bearing, and he is glad to welcome young Mordaunt as his daughter's fiance; and so the young people are happy. George Parker has been doing business with Mr. Darrell, and in the course of his relations with the father he would fain establish closer ones with the daughter, would she but encourage him. But there is only one man in all the world for her, and that man is Harold Mordaunt.

One day the father of Bess finds himself hopelessly in the power,—in a financial way,—of Parker. He cannot meet his obligations with the bright, young lawyer, and cannot see a way out of his terrible dilemma. He is heartbroken! The amount involved is very large and means his utter financial ruin if not met. At this juncture Parker offeres a solution,—the hand of Bess can wipe out the obligation. Darrell resents and spurns the offer, like the high-minded man he is. Bess divines the true state of affairs. She sees the impending calamity, and in return for her father's life-long goodness to her, consents to marry Parker to save her father; albeit it is heartbreaking to her to dismiss Harold.

Realizing that his poverty was the cause of his undoing, Harold determinedly set himself to work, fighting with brains and brawn. By dint of sheer progressiveness he succeeded. It is as a horse-trader in the far West that Harold wins his fortune, and thus we see him when a letter from Bess comes to him, telling him of her unhappiness. She does not know of his success, but the thought of her approaching wedding torments her, and so she sends him a long, last, despairing letter. In this letter he learns of the cause of it all.

And so it comes about that we see Mordaunt walk in and upset all the nice arrangements of Parker on that blissful day he has been long anticipating. It is satisfying to all who behold it. Mordaunt does the thing in so masterful a way that one feels exceedingly glad. Every one is happy of course, but Parker.

THE PATRIOTIC SONS

Eclair Release, February 13

Granddad was telling the boys tales of long ago, when war was in the air, and shot and shell flew thick and fast. He told about the tempestuous times of '76, and turned to an old history to show the inspired youngsters an appropriate illustration of the mer Boy of Shiloh," as he concluded. Then, presumably, off for school they ran but, attracted by a man tacking handbills they stopped to read of them. It told of the Great Parade at Asbury Park, New Jersey's famous resort, and of the wonderful prizes offered for the most attractive float. Then, what do you suppose they did, this daring trio? Nothing but hurry back home, break open their savings banks, rush off to a friendly costumer with the contents, hire three uniforms with part of the money, and then depart for Asbury Park. How these 'chips of the old block," succeeded in building a float, through the assistance of a dozen other lads of tender years and subsequently captured the Prize Cup is best told by film. Their anxious grandfather searched high and low for the truants, and finally found them, in the height of their triumph, with thousands cheering as they passed the judges' stand, and received the official token of victory.

IMPORTANT VICTORY FOR THE SALES COMPANY

THE United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Judge Learned Hand) has just filed an opinion directing that the Bill of Complaint be dismissed with costs in the case of the Motion Picture Patents Company, Complainant, against the Independent Moving Picture Company of America, Defendant. This suit was begun on February 10th, 1910, for infringement of Letters Patent of the United States No. 707934, issued August 26th, 1902, to Woodville Latham, for Projecting Kinetoscopes. The Motion Picture Patents Company claimed that this patent dominated and controlled all the projecting machines employed by the Independent exhibitors throughout the country, and all the cameras employed by the Independent manufacturers. This claim was denied by the Independents. The suit, which has just been decided in favor of the Independents, was accepted by both sides as a test case and a large amount of testimony was taken, beginning in May, 1910, and ending in August, 1911. Altogether upwards of 2,000 printed pages of testimony and exhibits were presented to the Court when the case was argued at final hearing on November 22d and 23d, 1911.

The case was argued on behalf of the Complainant by Mr. Parker W. Page, of counsel, on the brief of Messrs. Kerr, Page, Cooper & Hayward, solicitors and of counsel for the Complainant; and by Mr. Wm. Houston Kenyon and Mr. Richard Eyre, of counsel for Defendant, upon the brief of Messrs. Kenyon & Kenyon, solicitors and of counsel for Defendant.

The opinion of Judge Hand, which directs that the Bill of Complainant be dismissed, is based upon the finding that the Defendant has not infringed the patent. The Defendant used a camera having feed mechanism claimed by the Complainant to be the invention of Latham, and to infringe claims 1, 3, 5 and 8 of Letters Patent No. 707934.

The Complainant argued that the Latham invention was as applicable to a camera as to a projecting mechine, and that it was first embodied by Latham in a camera. This argument was essential to its case, because Armat and Jenkins (and not Latham) were the first to embody the feeding mechanism in a successful projecting machine.

The Court in a carefully considered opinion holds that the patent does not cover cameras, and applies that holding to the question of infringement, going no further than at because that was sufficient to dispose of the case. t the holding leads equally to the conclusion that the ent being for a projecting machine is anticipated by nat and Jenkins and consequently wholly invalid.

The Court says:

"In spite of the many questions which this case raises there is only one that I shall consider, because it seems to me quite fatal to this suit, although it does not, directly at any rate, affect the validity of the patent itself. I mean the point that the patent does not cover a camera, which is the only infringing device in evidence."

After discussing the Patent Office Interference between Latham and Armat and Casler, in which the final decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, filed on January 8th, 1901, was in favor of Armat "upon the especial ground that Latham had not perfected his machine as a projecting machine in the spring of 1895," the Court proceeds:

"After that decision it was, therefore, conclusively settled that Latham could never get a patent for a projecting machine which covered the substance of the issue which had been framed. While it was open to him, therefore, upon his prior application to get a patent for anything not covered by the interference, nothing else was open to him."

And again:

"Hard cases should not make bad law, and a patentee who has had the whole field to choose from cannot justly complain if he be held to his choice. Out of all of the discussion which this subject has called forth, I can see nothing that finally remains except that a court should on the one hand try sympathetically and intelligently to understand what the inventor meant by the words he used, and on the other, should hold him to that meaning, or candidly avow that his patent is not the measure of his rights.

"Now, when the patentee says that his invention consists of an apparatus for projecting pictures, he is speaking not of a single disclosure, used for purposes of illustration, but of what the 'invention' is, and the 'invention' is to be found in his claims. It is precisely equivalent to saying: 'What is to be found in my claims is an apparatus,' etc. Any ordinary intelligent man reading that preamble and then reading the claims would surely think that the claims were only for a projector. This is especially evident when one looks at Latham's patent for a camera and a projector filed six months later, which shows that he distinguished between projector and camera, and that when he thought a machine capable of both he said so clearly. In view of this application filed after the application for the patent in suit, but before these amendments were made, and with it, as it were, staring the patentee in the face, can there really be any ground for insisting that the patent should now be allowed to cover cameras?"

And again:

"Therefore, I insist that the whole proceedings show from the outset a continual purpose to cover only projectors, starting expressly with that purpose, and changing only with another purpose in mind, at least avowedly. It is not, therefore, a narrow or technical construction of the patent; it is a construction which tries to understand the proceedings as a whole, and really to interpret them. It is rather the complainant which, seizing upon words of general applicability and neglecting to read them in their history, is really twisting them beyond their proper scope through the invocation of liberal canons which have here no application."

And again:

"So much for the argument drawn from the formal change in the claims; but the vice goes to the essence. In his second patent, which, as I have said, he made expressly applicable to cameras and projectors, etc., etc."

And again:

"I am now assuming for argument that the changed claims now cover cameras which before they did not. If so, then the Complainant's dilemma is this: In so far as the 'invention' resides now in the 'positive feed' feature it is a complete abandonment of his position for nearly six years after the application was filed: in so far as it resides in the 'rest' feature, it completely ignores the interference litigation as though it had never occurred. As to the former, I think I have already shown it in enough detail; there was no suggestion anywhere of it till the date I mention; there was repudiation of its accuracy in the second patent. The means to secure the rest were of consequence only in so far as they actually did assure the period of rest. If the patent abandons that, and substitutes the 'positive feed' as the patent, it has become a 'new invention' in every sense.

"Moreover there are more important considerations than the mere lapse of time. Armat and Casler had machines which in respect to 'positive feed,' as the complainant now understands it, infringe his present claims. Furthermore, in respect to that feature probably his camera use is sufficient to antedate them. By his change of front he has included those whom before he did not expect by the original feature of his claims upon which he was beaten, and this by the selection of a feature he had originally abandoned. Now, the policy of the statute was to prevent that very thing; it was to prevent a man's gambling upon his ingenuity, avoiding the expense of a patent till his invention proved successful, and then, after others had acted upon his inaction, getting a monopoly for the full period of seventeen years. If Latham had waited so long without filing any application he could not have succeeded, and the rule against allowing him to amend is designed to prevent his doing by indirection what he could not do directly.

"Coming now to the 'rest' feature, the Complainant's case is even worse, for his attorney quite naively got those claims upon the theory that the interference issue was in part a radical departure from the invention, after necessary to determine how far the issue was correct and how far 'pause and illumination' have anything to do with 'rest.' It may be that Latham suffered by the reduction of his claims, though I think it quite clear that he did not, but he fought it out upon that issue for nearly five years, and it is really rather too hardy a position to take in a court, however it may be before an examiner, that such an assent does not estop him. While Latham's attorney conceded that Armat got the benefit of the interference, yet, since he denied that Latham's claims were embodied at all in the issue, it is hard to see what Armat did get. The matter is indeed quite confused, for the only relevant claim Latham then had was original claim ten, and that was a very special one. However, it said nothing of 'illumination' as distinct from 'rest' and the patent was throughout based on the supposition that the 'illumination' and the 'rest' occupied the same period. The courts did not deny that the patents so intended, but they did deny that the use in the spring of 1895 reduced that feature to practice, though Latham's attorney seems to have supposed that the courts had confused the two. To reinstate the 'rest' claims, of which claim eight in suit is one, was really a most extraordinary vagary of the lay mind, as it seems to me, and deprived Armat of not only the substance of his success, as did the substitution of the 'positive feed' claims, but even of the semblance of any fruits of victory whatever. It cannot be necessary to show that the Patent Office is not the place in which to play fast and loose like that.

"Much of the last argument goes beyond the question of whether the claims cover a camera, but I mean to decide nothing else. My point is that if they do include a camera, they were brought in by an amendment which was in part a radical departure from the invention, after six years and when others had secured rights with much expense upon the faith of the application as it was; in remainder, a mere disregard of all the proceedings theretofore had in the Patent Office. What the effect of this may be upon the claims for any other purpose, I leave to be decided when it may arise.

"The bill will be dismissed for non-infringement with costs."

The Court thus holds that the claims of the Latham Patent 707934 do not cover cameras. The suit being directed against a camera, the Court finds non-infringement and stops there because that ends that suit. However, the next logical step (in case the patent is asserted against a projector) is that the patent is wholly invalid because anticipated by Armat and Jenkins. If the use of a camera after the patent does not infringe, then the making of a camera before it cannot give date to the invention or support the patent.

THE DIME NOVEL

An Indiana youth confessed the other day that he sandbagged a merchant into unconsciousness and robbed him of $5: No, Hortense the moving picture show was not the cause. The boy's imagination was fired by reading dime novels. It is a mystery to us why so-called "Reformers" are willing to blame every act of lawlessness upon cinematography and ignore the fact that newsstands the country over are flooded with yellow-backed literature which is calculated to give our youth a false impression of life and to teach him to become a desperado. Parents, encourage your boy to visit the picture show and when you discover him reading "Dare Devil Dick" behind the barn apply the rod where it will do the most good.

A JUST ORDINANCE

Members of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union of Toledo want an ordinance passed to govern persons engaged in that line of employment. The union men say that young boys and girls are employed in some of the picture houses to run the machines. They want a law which provides that all operators must be over twenty-one years of age and must pass an examination before they can secure employment. Such an ordinance should be quickly passed because the operator has the lives of his patrons in his hands to a certain extent and the employment of children or others not familiar with electricity places lives in danger.

THE MOVING PICTURE JOURNAL

Aeronautics, moving pictures and Esperanto are responsible for new lists of 200 special journals compiled by the American Newspaper Annual and Directory for 1911. The Directory indicates that multiplication of newspapers in the United States has come to a standstill.

The increase in cinematography literature is another indication of the hold the industry has on the people. We are pleased and proud to state that the moving picture journals in this country, with few exceptions, are filled from cover to cover with articles intended to add dignity and uplift to cinematography. Not the least among these journals is the MOVING PICTURE NEWS. Not to throw boquets, we are naturally proud of the fact that the rapidly increasing number of readers of the NEWS indicates that the educational and uplift policy, long since inaugurated by Editor Saunders, is bearing good fruit. The trade journal is cutting no small figure in the advancement of the worth of the moving picture and this fact seems to be appreciated and to satisfy as is proven by the figures of the Newspaper Directory.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
Southern District of New York
In the Matter of Proceedings to punish William Steiner and others for contempt.

This cause comes here upon a hearing on return of an attachment against William Steiner, Herbert L. Miles, Joseph R. Miles, Charles V. Henkle and Leon Wagner. The acts charged to have been committed and which it is contended constituted a contempt are:

1. That each and all of the five persons above named swore to affidavits which contained statements material to issues before the court which were false and known to them to be false when they swore to them.

2. That four of these five persons, being defendants, subsequently caused these affidavits to be presented to the court in opposition to a motion, which was being heard in a suit against the Yankee Film Company and themselves.

3. That the same four persons disobeyed an order of the court which required them to deliver to their counsel all infringing cameras in their possession or under their control, to be kept in the care and custody of said counsel unused until the further order of the court.

For Prosecution—Henry A. Wise, U. S. Attorney; J. Neville Boyle, Assistant Attorney.

For Respondent—Abram J. Rose.

Lacombe, C. J.

Motion is made to dismiss the proceedings upon several grounds:

1. That the alleged contempt was committed, if at all, in the circuit court and these proceedings were begun in that court prior to December 31st, 1911. It is contended that punishment therefor cannot be imposed by the district court. Reliance is had upon authorities, such as ex parte Bradley, 74 U. S., 364, which hold that only the court whose authority is contemned has the right to punish for the offence.

When the Judiciary Act of March 3d, 1911, abolished the circuit courts it carefully undertook to preserve all acts, rights, suits and proceedings and also to provide for the prosecution of all offences and for all penalties, forfeitures or liabilities incurred prior to the taking effect of the new act. Secs. 299, 300. The relevant phrase of the latter section is: "All offences committed may be prosecuted and punished in the district courts, in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed." If the "act had not been passed" the circuit court would still be sitting in this district with power to punish for a contempt committed in such court. The plain meaning of the act is that for the purposes enumerated the district court acts as if it were the circuit court, merely with its name changed. Touching all pending matters the court is continuous; it is one court only from the beginning of the proceeding to its conclusion. The situation is not such as we find in removed causes where a case is transferred from one court to another, the original court still continuing in existence as a court independent of the other. The proceeding and the court both pass over. Any construction such as that here contended for would lead to the absurd result that all the orders and decrees, injunctive or mandatory, of the old circuit court were practically abrogated on January 1st, 1912, because if such an order or decree cannot be enforced it becomes mere waste paper. Congress certainly did not contemplate such an absurd result, and there is nothing in the language of the sections which would require its acceptance.

2. It is contended that the proceedings should be dismissed because the defendants ultimately prevailed in the suits in which it is alleged that contempt was committed. This suggestion is not found persuasive; while an order stands it should be obeyed and the court which makes it should not be contemned; appeal, not disobedience, is the remedy if a party thinks his adversary is not entitled to the order. This is not a proceeding on the civil side, but an independent proceeding on the criminal side of the court.

3. That defendants have concededly complied with the order directing the impounding of the cameras.

Nothing of the sort is conceded. Some cameras were turned over to counsel, but this proceeding is concerned with a certain other camera which was never turned over, which it is alleged was an infringing machine and about which it is alleged false statements were incorporated in the affidavits.

4. Because the court was without power to make an order pendente lite impounding the cameras.

The converse is well-settled law in this circuit (Underwood Typewriter Company v. Elliot Fisher Company, 156 F. R., 588), and no authority is cited to support defendant's proposition.

5. Because the proceedings should have been begun by rule to show cause and not by warrant of attachment. It is manifest upon examination of the authorities cited by both sides that it is a matter of discretion with the court which method it will follow in proceedings of this sort.

6. Because the principal charge is that perjury was committed, and it is contended that perjury cannot constitute a contempt. Upon the argument it was suggested that the same act could not be punished twice. This suggestion is not found in the brief; it is not persuasive. If by the same act two distinct offences are committed it is difficult to see why the penalty for each offence should not be imposed. If a person should commit an assault in the court room upon the marshal with a deadly weapon in order to effect the release of a prisoner while his trial was going on, he would be summarily committed for contempt, but such commitment would be no defence to a prosecution for assault with intent to kill.

It is thought that perjury upon the witness stand in the presence of the court may well be considered a contempt; it is misbehavior of such a sort as "to obstruct the administration of justice." The New York authorities cited on the brief are not persuasive, the language of the State statute being different from that of Section 725 U. S. Rev. Stat. (now Section 268 Judicial Code). There seems to be no good reason for confining contempts to boisterous disturbances in the court room.

It is, however, essential that the offence be committed in the presence of the court, and for that reason the present prosecution for alleged false swearing must fail. The testimony was not given on the witness stand, but was embodied in affidavits verified elsewhere, before some notary public.

Nor is it thought that the prosecution can be sustained on the theory that the subsequent presentation of affidavits known to contain false statements was in the presence of the court. That presentation was not made by the persons here proceeded against, but by the counsel of some of them. It was not their personal act. In Chicago Directory Company v. U. S. Directory Company, 123 F. R., 194, the fabricated exhibit which the witness had prepared was brought by himself into the court room and by him presented to the court.

Nor can the prosecution be sustained on the theory of a conspiracy to obstruct the administration of justice by causing false affidavits to be presented. Such a conspiracy might constitute a contempt, but it certainly was not entered into in the court room.

These conclusions dispose finally of the proceedings as to Wagner, and as to the others leave only the count charging disobedience of the order to turn over infringing cameras. It is understood that there is only one such camera which it is alleged was an infringing instrument and which was not turned over. It is not known what testimony the U. S. Attorney may have to show not only that this was an infringing camera but that it was within the control of the defendants so that they could turn it over. That officer will have to decide whether the testimony is sufficient to call for further proceedings on that branch of the case, now that the more serious charges have been disposed of by this decision. If he wishes to proceed further a day will be fixed to suit engagements of counsel.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF OHIO

Cincinnati, Ohio, February 6th, 1912.

Mr. A. H. Saunders,
Editor Moving Picture News,
30 West Thirteenth street, New York.

Dear Sir:

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of Ohio will hold a convention at the National Cash Register Hall, March 26th and 27th. O. B. Weaver and Clem Kerr, members of the league, have been appointed by M. A. Neff, president of the league, to co-operate with the Board of Trade and the management of The Cash Register Company. This will be the biggest meeting ever held in the State of Ohio by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. All bona fide exhibitors are invited to attend whether they are members of the league or not. The first day, March 26th, will be given over to pleasure and a trip through the Cash Register works. The second day will be for the members of the league only. Now is the time to make your arrangements to attend this splendid social, business, and educational convention.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors of West Virginia will meet in Parkersburg, W. Va., Wednesday, February 28th. Arrangements for hall, music, and entertainment have already been made. The committee on arrangements is P. W. Barett, Star Theatre, and F. L. Harris, Bijou Theatre. The Board of Trade will co-operate with the committee on arrangements. Headquarters have been established at the Blannerhassett Hotel. Every West Virginia exhibitor is not only invited but urged to attend this the first State convention. A permanent organization will be effected, a president, first vice-president, second vice-president, secretary and treasurer will be elected. A State censor, legislative committee and insurance committee will also be elected. Every exhibitor is requested to communicate with either the committee or the president, M. A. Neff, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, 1003 Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

M. A. NEFF,

RELIANCE "BEDELIA" SERIES

The "Bedelia" pictures promise to be some of the funniest comedy pictures ever shown on the screen. The Reliance Company is again displaying splendid judgment and discrimination in choice of subject and cast, Mr. Tony O. Sullivan playing the principal part of Bedelia. Mr. Sullivan's former reputation on the legitimate stage as a funny man will doubtless be maintained in the "Bedelia" pictures.

For release on Wednesday, February 21st, will be "Key West," the celebration attending the completion of the railway running over 156 miles of salt water into Key West, and which is one of the most stupendous engineering feats of the century, on the same reel with "Bedelia and Mrs. Busybody," the first of the "Bedelia" series.

WILL VAUDEVILLE'S SALARY UPLIFT ITSELF IN PICTUREDOM

By Robert Grau

THE advent of Bernhardt and Reane into the field of the silent drama means much to all of you ladies and gentlemen who had the foresight to intrench yourselves in the industry of the mechanical and photographic theatre.

Do you realize what it means?

The movement inaugurated by the French American Film Co. is merely the avant courier for the biggest stampede of stars and celebrities of the speaking stage that the world has ever known. It means also that the film manufacturers are face to face with the problem of meeting the increased demand for a better output from their clients; must meet the issue—and this issue is one that the exhibitor has to meet with his patronage, which can only be held fast in this era of great competition by bringing into the theatre of cinematography the stars of the regular stage, so that the precedent established by Bernhardt and Rejane will quickly be followed by a galaxy of potent stars whose names will prove so compelling that the movement will result in that "new era of the picture play" so often predicted by the present writer.

Not only are we to have the leading Broadway favorites capitulating to the gold-laden silent drama, but the extraordinary activity of the Milano Film Company and its American confrere, the Monopol Company, means that after all it will be left to the moving picture to perpetuate the great masterpieces of Sophocles, Homer and also those of Moliere, Sardou and Dumas. There is no other school to-day for preserving the art of the old masters. Have we not seen in "Sumurun" the influence of the moving picture in reviving a nearly lost art, that of pantomime?

Moreover it is the intimate relation between the audience and the picture play that has created the "intimate theatre" movement now spreading all over the world.

Twenty years ago the highest weekly salary paid in a vaudeville theatre was $300. Ten years later it had reached $700. Five years ago $1,500 a week was found in the pay envelope of several stars who effected vaudeville debuts. Then it reached $3,000 with Lillian Russell's advent. To-day the limit is $4,000 a week, though there is much talk that a retrograde movement is likely. Are we to see such salaries in cinematography? Yes and no.

The demand for stars will show several methods of procedure to satisfy it. Instead of so much a week the star will receive so many thousands for each production she or he appears in before the camera.

But the big salary movement will come to picturedom in another way: Instead of the stars who merely give temporary service, the great boom will come to the prominent leading players who will be available as "stock stars," and for these salaries will be paid that would to-day sound like the imaginative raving of a wild dreamer.

But this is not all; the day is not far off when instead of the Frohmans and the Erlangers and the Shuberts controlling the new plays of the famous writers of to-day these important factors in the scheme of theatricals will be signed up by the large capitalized film manufacturers, and this will mean that the three-reel photo-play will predominate, and it won't be called a feature film—just an ordinary release, under new conditions created by the vogue of the splendid productions that are to come in the next few months.

In conclusion, the writer believes that the erection of new theatres for film productions of the highest grade will involve millions and bring into the field of the silent drama a class of investor who has never been available to the theatrical manager, but who will quickly demonstrate that the theatre of to-morrow is the theatre of science and artifice, which, having as an asset nature's own vast resources, will appeal to the amusement and art loving public for generations to come as the medium of expression for players and playwrights alike.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

Will the Cinematograph Solve the Problem of the Universe?

By Leonard Donaldson

That the motion picture is proving of inestimable value to the study of biology and undoubtedly is helping to unravel the secrets of life, has been proved to the world in the past few years in a very convincing manner. Would that Darwin or William Owen, or anyone else, for the matter of that, who has laid bare a few of the mysteries of creation were with us now to view the wonders of the cinematograph. The unerring, exacting eye of the camera has shown us that there are truths which master minds of the last decade have told us. We could have no more convincing proof than that which is given us in the motion picture—it is visual evidence of the very greatest importance. Many of the strange and interesting features of biology discovered through the microscope have been presented with realistic effect by means of the cinematograph. Quite recently I have witnessed in England a number of films depicting various experiments with the hearts of rabbits and frogs (which remain beating some time after their removal) showing the manner of recording the heart's movements, and the action upon it of chloroform and adrenalin. The reflex movements of a frog from which the brain had been removed included the drawing up of either leg when touched; other efforts of the frog to free itself from a small piece of paper which was chemically treated. The excised heart of a tortoise, beating on glass, indicated that the secret of the heart's rhythmic action was within its own walls. The movements of the lungs of a dead rabbit—artificially expanded by air as in breathing—showed their elastic, expanding action. Various films illustrated the starfish's method of righting itself when turned upon its back. Another series of pictures showed the movements in flight of a dragon fly and blue bottle, slowed down by the cinematograph so that the movements of the wings could be easily observed. Another film depicted the movements of the gullet, stomach and intestines of a frog, as seen by the X rays. The muscular waves passing along a snail's body in the process of crawling, the movements of the snail in progress, throwing its feelers and the arms carrying the eyes, and the graceful action of the body as it passed along a rough surface were also shown. A series of microscopic films showed the blood circulation in a frog's foot, the individual corpuscles being seen seeking their way through the capillaries and a vein with flowing blood being fed by a capillary.

The development of the egg of a sea urchin, with the process of subdivision and growth, was shown and the serpent-like animalcular germs of sleeping sickness were displayed in their activity amongst the blood corpuscles of an infected animal. Another set of pictures, to which I made passing reference in a previous article, showed the germination of a seed (in which the timing had been greatly accelerated by the cinematograph); the roots pushing downward and the shoots upward to the light; the action of pollen on the stigma of a plant; the growth and expansion of flowers and the circulation of protoplasm in the plant system.

By means of these films life is indeed shown in motion. Pause a moment, reader, and think of the illimitable possibilities of the motion picture in this direction. One is so apt to regard cinematograph only in its amusement phase and not, as it has always been the endeavor of the NEWS and its writers to show, as one of the greatest benefits the genius of man has ever bequeathed to his fellow creatures.

THE BIRTH OF A NEW ERA FOR THE MOVING PICTURE

By Margaret I. MacDonald

THE "To be or not to be" period of the moving picture has passed, leaving in the mind of even the most incredulous observer no doubt as to its permanency, not merely as a fad but as a substantial aid to education in all branches. It is without a doubt the future exponent of knowledge. Like Esperanto, it is the language of all races, breaking down the barrier of the confusion of tongues, opening wide the door of knowledge to the Eskimo and to the Hindoo alike, making up for that diversity of expression with which language confuses in the photographing of emotion, motive, cause and effect, individual and custom, location and condition.

The new era of the moving picture is based upon the awakening of the populace to its educational value. From its former association with the common, cheap joint it has evolved to its present position as an educator, recognized as such by the most intellectual and learned men and women of the day. This condition of affairs is just beginning to dawn on the manufacturer. He is not yet absolutely certain where he stands, hence the still tender leaning displayed by a number of them toward melodramatic subjects.

All of the human side of creation loves a picture. They love to see that of which perhaps they have only dreamed or read in books. On the screen appear the men and women of their dreams, scenes of which they some day hope to know in reality—scenes which they have hopes of creating for themselves in material shape through the intake of dollars and cents. The day has come, whether the manufacturer realizes it or not, when the intellect as well as the senses must be fed.

To tear away the physical were to make marble statues out of men and women. To mingle that which appeals to the intellect with that which appeals to the purely physical is not only to ameliorate the physical side but to so intermingle the twain as to eventually create one perfect whole, instead of an overbalanced quantity of both physical and mental.

Children know no wrong that has not first been shown them by adults. Also children suspect no wrong until the adult places the prohibitive label on the article. Nature is simple as a child; artifice is subtle in its intricacy. The perfectly natural in a picture, just as the perfectly natural in everyday life, has no evil effect on the child mind Do not misunderstand me, friends. There has been a deal of controversy over the admittance of the children into the moving picture theatre—the little ones have been crying at the doors of the show houses. Prohibition is not the way to rectify matters—elimination and readjustment are the cures. Elimination of what is suggestive of evil, and the insertion in its place of the perfectly natural, the beautiful, or the educative.

To gamble is not natural; it is the result indirectly of the cursed money system. To steal or rob is not natural; it is another of the many results of the money system. To deliberately take the life of your fellowman is unnatural, either under our present civilization or under the laws of our primitive ancestors, save in self-defense.

I am well aware that many would stand me down on this last assertion, yet I will continue to insist that man's first instinct was not to kill. Vice is merely the result of conditions; and until civilization sees fit to commence a readjustment of constitution, both social and civic, vice will not only exist but increase.

In the new era of the moving picture, society will demand the elimination of the vicious from the picture. What satisfied yesterday will not entirely saitsfy tomorrow; there must be a building up as well as an elimination. There has been started a foundation for much good, as well as a necessity for a weeding-out process.

Just as the drama had its foundation in beginnings small and crude, developing in the course of time to the finished art of to-day, so will the quality of the moving picture grow and develop. Even now it is well into the second span of the race.

A WORD FOR THE WIZARD

By Lindsay Bancroft.

How many times has the General Film Company told us it was quite ready and able to supply educational films whenever there should be a demand?

One might be led to believe that the two great factors in the producing field, the Patents Company and the Sales Company, had really something "up their respective sleeves," something that was really worth while in the line of educational moving pictures. One at least infers that from the oft-repeated hints of the General Film Company. There is this much to be said for the Sales Company's producers, they do not state they are trying for the educational demand, so no one is misled by them.

Just how the "licensed" producers are going to meet the demand which is certainly coming is not quite clear. If they have no better laid plans than those outlined in Harper's Weekly, from which Mr. Wright quoted in the Moving Picture News, they had better leave the field to others.

Mr. Edison is quoted as telling just how it is going to be done and illustrating his point by reference to a "wonderful" (that is a stock Edison press term) film showing the way atmospheric pressure works the common pump.

That Mr. Edison is a genius even his detractors admit. By dint of one of the most magnificent publicity systems the world has ever known, coupled to the fact that Mr. Edison has really invented some things of inestimable value to the world, that easy going atom of humanity yclept the American citizen has been convinced beyond a doubt that if Mr. Edison says it, it's so.

It seems to me I have read at regular intervals during the past twenty years the certain assurance from this same "press gang" that the much-to-be-desired storage battery was just about ready for the market.

* * * *

Now to come back to the "pump" story. Such a film as he describes was made years ago and exhibited in Manchester, England, and a few other things were also illustrated by M. P. films, too, that perhaps Mr. Edison has been either too busy or too self-centered to see.

The fact is, it doesn't need Mr. Edison to show the American people how to educate its youth. Every American worth the name respects the great inventor for what he has done, not for what he has said nor for what he is going to do.

After all, there are too few Edisons in the world, and it is painful to think of thwarting the inventor's usefulness in his declining years by dragging him into the moving picture business, which, as Europe has taught us, can get along very well without him.

Mr. Edison is an inventor and a busines man, but he is no more an educator than Mr. Morgan or Mr. Carnegie. Honestly, we need the remainder of Mr. Edison's life to be devoted to that scientific research that gave him the term of "Wizard." Let him give to the world new electrical and mechanical contrivances to rank with the Tesla Turbine and other things; let him tell us some more about that wonderful cement house, and let him above all stop his press agents from making him apparently "blow his own trumpet."

Then shall the remaining years of one of the greatest men of the age be crowned with glory and usefulness.

Carrollton, Mo.—I. C. Bon, of Marceline, has leased the Star Theater in this city.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

THE tide of motion picture traffic has turned, according to Carl Laemmle, president of the Laemmle Film Service Company, who visited the Minneapolis office of his company yesterday. American films, he said, were beginning to gain a noticeable foothold in England and on the continent. A few years ago a large majority of films that crossed the ocean came to America.

Mr. Laemmle declared that by far the most noticeable change in the motion picture business was the growing tendency to manufacture films dealing in educational subjects. "We have to fight to put them in the houses, though," he declared. "People don't want to take them.

"The trouble with the educational business is that it is the people that do not patronize motion picture theatres that are asking for the higher class films. Those who do patronize the theatres are very well satisfied with what is being offered, or has been offered in the past."

So says Mr. Laemmle, according to the Minneapolis Tribune.

Arthur B. Empie, recently of Washington, D. C., has purchased the Hippodrome Theatre in Binghamton. Mr. Empie has held the position of tenor soloist at St. John's P. E. Church, of Washington.

* * * *

Governor William Spry, of Utah, one of the pillars of the Mormon Church, has threatened to bar Mormon films in Utah.

* * * *

Moving pictures to advertise both cities and states are evidently gaining in favor—even Washington, D. C., is entering into the game.

* * * *

Mr. Harbeck has just arrived in town from Seattle with some excellent films of Alaska. Some of these depict operations on the wonderful Alaskan oil fields.

* * * *

Moving picture photographers were engaged in getting pictures of the operations connected with ice harvesting at the Scott icehouse, Newton Hook, recently.

* * * *

The management of the new moving picture theatre, Meriden, Conn., to be known as the Bright Theatre, will give a masque ball on the eve of February 15th.

* * * *

To carry on public shows by moving pictures or otherwise in the Borough of Knoxville, Allegheny County, Pa., the Hill Top Amusement Company, of Pittsburgh, has been incorporated under the laws of this State. The company has an authorized capital stock of $5,000 and the incorporators are Al. M. Rahe, Alex. V. Miller, Walter S. Meyer, Welby H. Hudson and William A. Hudson, Jr., of Pittsburgh.

Operators of moving picture machines have formed a union in Utica, N. Y., which will be affiliated directly with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees of the United States and Canada and indirectly with the American Federation of Labor. The officers of the new organization are: President, H. L. Clark; vice president, D. Harke; treasurer, C. H. Skinner; secretary, Charles Gore; sergeant-at-arms, G. H. Gadsby.

One of the latest and most improved methods of teaching children in the public schools the difference between right and wrong has been devised by Milton Fairchild, a Massachusetts educator, and is being given a trial. Profs. George F. Moore and James H. Ropes, both of Harvard, are Mr. Fairchild's collaborators in the scheme. Photographs are made of actual happenings, showing the right and wrong side of everyday child life, such as fights between boys, squabbles among girls, playing games fairly, etc. These are thrown on a sheet and during their display are lectured on by the instructor. For his "horrible examples" Mr. Fairchild has photographed many incidents in life, the subjects having no idea that they were being photographed.

Mrs. W. S. Simeral, Treasurer of the Simeral Amusement Company of Clarksburg, W. Va., and owner of several large theatres in the South, stopped over in New York to visit her son, H. C. Simeral, sales manager of Champion Films. Mr. H. C. left New York Tuesday night for Ohio with a goodly batch of Champion forthcoming releases under his right arm, for the benefit of Exchanges and exhibitors of the Buckeye State. Among these reels of film is the initial release of "Sherlocko and Watso" in a picture entitled, "The Robbery at the Railroad Station."

Moving pictures of microscopic life are among the most notable of recent achievements. Successive photographs of living objects in rapid motion, magnified 600 to 1,000 times, have been taken by M. Comandon, a French scientist, at the rate of several thousand per minute, and the many cinematograph films prepared have been used by the firm of Pathe Freres for some marvelous exhibitions on the screen.

In making the pictures the ultra-microscope was used, the objects being illuminated by powerful rays of light from one side. Among the most interesting films are those of the blood, as it circulates, with its normal and abnormal contents, the tail of a tadpole showing a number of little blood vessels—each 1-2500th of an inch in diameter—through which the red corpuscles pass with the circulation, while the colorless cells, or leucocytes, change about with an independent motion of their own.

In some films these leucocytes, now known to be the blood's scavengers, are seen in the act of seizing and absorbing foreign matter, such as diseased cells or microbes. Such pictures as these are reproduced on the screen much less rapidly than they are taken, thus bringing to the eye's perception the quick darting about of the organisms that swarm in the blood in certain diseases; but another class—like those of growing plants—are taken very slowly and exhibited at a rate quickened to make the motion visible.

Not long ago a moving picture theatre manager, Detroit, Mich., undertook the censorship of his own films, putting a ban on an oversensational film which had by accident floated into his theatre. This picture had three or four violent deaths portrayed in vivid manner and is a "grand finale." The villain of the play cuts a luscious peach into pieces, places poison on each half, and by this process kills both himself and the beautiful heroine.

This exhibitor surely displayed good judgment and common sense, and we are glad to learn that even one exhibitor among the legion feels the responsibility of his position enough to use discrimination in the choice of films to his patrons.

At the entertainment of the Eclectic Club at the Waldorf on the afternoon of January 31st moving pictures were shown of the Southern Railway, depicting phases of life in North and South Carolina. This was the first time these pictures had been shown. Mrs. Simon Baruch, who is a native of South Carolina, made explanatory remarks.

On Sunday night, February 4th, films obtained by John C. Hemment, the recent hunting expedition of Paul J. Raney in British East Africa, were displayed before a large gathering of members of the Lambs Club. Mr. Raney, who had promised the club to be present at the nominal entertainment, was unable to do so. His place, however, was ably filled by Mr. J. C. Hemment.

Invitations for what is termed a "moving picture party" have been issued by Mrs. Frank Lawrence Stratton, of 158 West Fifty-eighth Street, for her débutante daughter, Miss Helen Blagden Rich, for the evening of February 17. A buffet supper and informal dancing will follow the entertainment to be arranged by Mrs. Stratton.

Good, wholesome comedy pictures, pictures that illustrate the world, views of the country and foreign lands are always interesting and instructive.

Some of the best-known actors of the stage are now engaged in presenting plays for the moving picture houses. Both Eleanor Duse and Sarah Bernhardt can now be seen in the film shows. Lillian Russell, Marshall P. Wilder and others are posing in this country.

Plans were filed for a three-story studio building to be erected on a plot 80x123.1, on the north side of 175th Street, 147 feet west of Marion Avenue. The Biograph Company will use the structure for taking moving pictures and manufacturing films.

Snare & Triest, the architects, estimate the cost at $90,000. The Edison Company has a similar studio at the corner of Decatur Avenue and 199th Street.

"Fire!" yelled Michale Pisana, aged fifteen, when he saw the engines dash along on a Chicago moving picture screen. A panic followed. "I forgot it was a picture and got scared," explained Michael later.

The Bureau of Trade Relation has issued a pamphlet on moving pictures abroad, where these have as much vogue as in America. The business is conducted with such dispatch in England that important and popular events are shown on the same day, which is certainly one advance on the American way of doing things. For instance, the grand steeplechase race at Liverpool at 3 p. m. was shown in moving pictures at London that evening. The films were developed on the train.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

Hot Springs, Ark., February 7.—How true it is that "it's a long lane that has no turning point!" Also, "the worm may flop"; likewise "it's an ill-wind that doesn't blow good," and a score of other axioms that might have, if one cared to think of them, some bearing on present local conditions, which is a prelude to the statement that the amusement managers are going to dabble in the great American game of politics.

Remember some months ago when the feature of these letters was the account that Prosecuting Attorney J. B. Wood was making on the picture houses? Recall how I endeavored to paint a word picture of his Sunday visitation? How he was followed by loud crowds who condemned his crusade against the Sunday picture show, and how he would "pinch" first one house and then another, creating more excitement and disorder than if the shows had been permitted to run?

Well, arrests were made, carried to the Circuit Court—and the managers lost. But, ye faithful of the moving picture industry, that was moons and moons ago, and the time is now here when J. B. Wood is a candidate for renomination to the office of prosecuting attorney, and now the theatre and motion picture managers have their inning. They took it this week, and they went on record, by resolutions that were strong and emphatic, that they did not approve of the candidacy of J. B. Wood, and, although there were four others in the race, three of whom were from Hot Springs, they gave their hearty endorsement to Gip Witt, candidate from Montgomery County, who is so far removed from Hot Springs, and such a kind, good-natured, benevolent, thoughtful and perfectly understood old gentleman, that they believed their best interests would be served by having him elected, so they endorsed his candidacy unanimously.

They stated in their resolutions that they knew J. B. Wood had "been guilty of the most flagrant discrimination" and furthermore had enacted the role of "persecutor and not prosecutor," so they concluded that it was time the official steam roller moved gently but firmly over the said official and flattened him out on Central avenue.

The endorsement of Mr. Witt followed that given the same candidate by the Hotel Men's Association, and it begins to look as if the united effort being made by the business interests of the city will bring the result desired. A great and powerful faction is back of Witt's candidacy here. They believe that he will not interfere with the city in the management of its affairs. In fact, he stated publicly that he would not interfere with local conditions, and it has been the ceaseless activity of Judge Wood and his reform sheriff, who, by the way, is a deacon in Judge Wood's church, the First Baptist, that has caused the "Lid"to be so firmly clamped down, and the action of the amusement interests in getting behind Witt is but another indication of the general demand that there be more liberality in the interpretation of the law in this city. If Witt is elected, it means that the town will be able to offer visitors who desire to gamble a pleasant session at the palatial clubs; that the picture shows will be open on Sunday and that visitors on that day will not be compelled to walk the streets and wonder what has hit the place. It means, in brief, a real live health and pleasure resort and not a city with the air of a sanitarium, which it now has.

Among those who signed the resolutions to support Witt were J. Frank Head, manager of Head's Airdome and the Princess Theatre; Sidney M. Nutt, of the Central Theatre; Eddie Gavrel, Lyceum; Harry H. Hale, Lyric; G. A. Benasso, Majestic; E. D. Davis, Grand. And, take it from the "Man in the Baths," friends, that's "going some."

Well, after many trials, troubles and tribulations, "Cinderella" has finally paid her long expected visit to Hot Springs. The little lady received a great welcome, for notwithstanding the fact that "Everywoman" was at the Auditorium, it seemed that every woman was also at the new Central. There was a universal demand to see this Selig feature, and I am not exaggerating matters in the least when I state that from 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when the matinee started, until 5 o'clock at least 1,800 men, women and children saw Miss Taliaferro in this charming nursery romance. The pictures were excellent, and as a special medium for making them more enjoyable

Chemically Treated Film Last Longest--

And We Can Prove It

We wouldn't make a statement that we couldn't back up. If "AMERICAN" film didn't LAST LONGER AND WEAR BETTER than any other make of picture, we would hardly dare advertise that fact publicly.

If you want PROOF we can furnish it. Many exchanges have written us that AMERICAN film can go through more machines, be rented to more theatres and still retain its brilliance.

there was appropriate music for each and every reel. It was thought that the films had been damaged in the Iron Mountain wreck, but this must have been a new series, for they were as clear as the hot waters that come gushing out of the ground and as steady as the foundation of the theatre.

The Moose Lodge is endeavoring to arrange with one of the local theatres for a special production of the pictures taken when the Grand Lodge convention was held in Detroit. These are said to be the most remarkable motion pictures of their kind in the United States, and they are recommended highly to the local lodge by those subordinate branches that have featured them. Sidney M. Nutt is corresponding with the General Film Company in an effort to get special permission to show the pictures in that theatre, but what success he will meet with remains to be seen. Possibly we will know when next week comes around.

"Everywoman" scored one of the greatest successes ever achieved by a single production in the history of the Auditorium Theatre. Society, visiting and local, turned out at the matinee and evening performance and put their stamp of approbation on Walter Browne's masterpiece. It was a great play, they thought, and Frederick Warde, the venerable actor, came in for a great many of the honors.

Have you heard in the East what Memphis in the South is doing to its picture houses and theatres? It appears that the News-Scimitar, of that city, concluded that some of them needed a little publicity and it detailed a delegation of reporters to visit many of them and report conditions as they found them, and the stories that were printed caused a sensation. Some of them are classed as "dives of the lowest type," and as soon as the glad tidings were shouted about and around Memphis, the good city fathers immediately awakened to a bet that they were overlooking. The club women there, however, beat them to it, took the matter up and now poor Memphis is surcharged with the ginger of a crusade on the motion picture shows. For my part, if a house is rotten I believe in cutting out the cancer. It acts only as a weapon to use against motion photography in general, and that industry is too uplifting in its meaning to be a part of places that are not up to the standards of decency and morality. It will mean better high-class houses for Memphis, so let the crusade go on. Those who are hurt, if guilty, deserve adverse publicity, and those whose houses are above reproach, as all should be, will be only that much higher in the estimation of Memphis' vast army of moving picture patrons.

William Faversham makes his initial visit to Hot Springs on February 12th, so, you see, Lincoln's natal day will be memorable in more ways than one. He produces here "The Faun," and society is already much interested in the handsome "Billy's" three-sheet posters that are being placed about town. It is more than likely that an effort will be made to have him lecture before one of the women's clubs—either he or Miss Julia Opp, his wife, who is with him.

And, speaking of notables, Andrew Carnegie is due here next month. We will wear kilts on that day and are already busy rehearsing "Hoot, mon!" in order to make Uncle Andy feel at home.

THE H. A. MACKIE COMPANY IN NEW QUARTERS

H. A. MACKIE COMPANY, INC.

Recently, as most of our readers know, the H. A. Mackie Company removed from 853 Broadway to 21 East Fourteenth street. Only the other day one of our staff visited the firm in their new quarters, and was duly impressed with the wisdom displayed by the firm in its choice of location, which is not only central, but affords ample room for display on a level with the street.

H. A. Mackie made his début in his present business some ten years ago. About a year ago he opened at 853 Broadway, moving to his present well adapted quarters at above address, a couple of weeks ago.

For several years previous to his entry into a business of his own Mr. Mackie was with Thomas A. Edison in the experimental department of the Edison plant.

The H. A. Mackie, Inc., as most of our readers know, is one of the most reliable moving picture supply companies in the country. In fact it goes without saying that if any moving picture theatre, studio or plant, is equipped by the H. A. Mackie Company, the equipment is the best and most up-to-date that money can buy, and is also properly installed.

The H. A. Mackie quarters on Fourteenth street consist of a suite of four or five offices and a spacious general sales room, the back end of which is being fitted up as a machine shop. There are twelve men employed there altogether. Among these are S. A. Howard and L. Adler, outside salesmen; C. A. MacPherson, who has charge of the bookkeeping and credit department; Mr. McJames, in the order department, and Mr. Wm. Wylie, in the shipping department. Apart from these must not be forgotten Samuel Rubble, office boy, and as Mr. Mackie says, "general manager of most things about the office." Samuel Rubble very evidently does his part to make things buzz at the busy Mackie establishment, it can all be attended to with the utmost expediency, and to their satisfaction by this reliable supply company.

The H. A. Mackie Company, Inc., is such a well-known name that it seems almost unnecessary to attempt to enlarge upon the acknowledged merits of the firm. Motion picture people know that when there is a new bit of machinery required, or a bit of jobbing to be done

Ere very many months have gone by, we understand, that branches of the parent company will have been started in many other large cities, extending the fame of Mackie to the uttermost parts of the Union.

VICTORY—VICTORY—VICTORY

Latham Loop Beaten

On another page of the Moving Picture News will be found the Judge's decision in the celebrated Latham loop case, and we would like our readers to pay careful attention to the reading of the finish of this litigation. It is well known that exhibitors all over the country were flurried with threatened injunction suits to prevent them using a projection machine in their house, in spite of the fact that this machine was purchased and paid for, and licensed by the Patents Company. We then said that there was no value in the Latham loop as a patent, that the Pross shutter and the perforations of the film were antiquated long before the patents were issued, and that the rising and falling of the film gate and framing device is also covered by patents, prior to the Smith application, and we now see the beginning of the end to all the harassing troubles with which the exhibitors were beset. It is very gratifying to us who have advocated full freedom for the art of cinematography in America as it is in Europe. Many new manufacturers are springing up all over the country. What their ultimate success will be we cannot prophesy, but the features of an educational nature that they are manufacturing will certainly be something that the public will want and demand, and who is to supply these demands, is the question that each manufacturer will have to answer himself.

The question often arose, after having manufactured the film, how was it to be projected? Owing to the litigation on the Latham loop and its allied appliances, serious trouble arose, but all this is now cleared away by the decision rendered this week, of which the following is a brief statement:

Judge Hand, of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, has just decided in favor of the Independent Moving Picture Company an important patent suit, Motion Picture Patents Company vs. Independent Moving Pictures Company of America, Carl Laemmle. The suit was begun on February, 1910, and was for alleged infringement of the Latham patent No. 707934, granted August 26, 1902, to Woodville Latham, for "Projecting Kinetoscope." It had been claimed by the Motion Picture Patents Company that the Latham patent covered and controlled, not only all the projectors employed by the independent exhibitors throughout the country, but also all the cameras employed by the Independent film manufacturers. This claim was denied by the Moving Picture News and the members of the Sales Company. The case just decided was made a test case by both sides. Upwards of two thousand pages of testimony and exhibits were presented to the Court, the testimony beginning May, 1910, and concluding in August, 1911. The case was argued November 22d and 23d, 1911, and has just been decided by Judge Hand, who dismisses the bill of complaint on the ground of non-infringement, with costs.

After reading the above and the full decision on another page, our readers will be able to breathe a little more freely and be able to go about their business with a certain amount of confidence and zest.

THE WAGNER CAMERA

We want also to call attention to another important decision rendered by Judge Lacombe on Saturday, Feb. 3rd, which will be found on another page, and will be equally as far reaching as is the Latham loop. It is very gratifying to us to know that Messrs. H. & J. Miles, Wm. Steiner, J. Henkel, and A. Wagner are free from the charge of perjury and have come out so honorably and cleanly, as the decision of Judge Lacombe shows.

To sum up and give greater publicity to the words of the Judge we quote what the Court has to say:

"These conclusions dispose finally of the proceedings as to Wagner, and as to the others leave only the count charging disobedience of the order to turn over infringing cameras. It is understood that there is only one such camera, which, it is alleged, was an infringing instrument and which was not turned over. It is not known what testimony the U. S. Attorney may have to show not only that this was an infringing camera but that it was within the control of the defendants so that they could turn it over. The officer will have to decide whether the testimony is sufficient to call for further proceedings on that branch of the case, now that the more serious charges have been disposed of by this decision. If he wishes to proceed further a day will be fixed to suit engagements of counsel."

The practical result seems to us to be the final disposal of this matter, unless the United States District Attorney shall be so purposeful to pursue this matter to its ultimate conclusion as to disregard what seems to us to be an intimation by the Court that he may well drop the proceedings if he seems so disposed.

FILMING THE HORRIBLES

The unpleasant circumstances in life are best passed over in a hurry—a glance, a restitution, if possible, and a forgetting or setting out of visionary reach of the world the disagreeable object or circumstance. This is all that can be done where neither elimination or total readjustment can be accomplished.

Not long ago there came to our notice a film depicting the horrors of an insane asylum. The film came from one of our best manufactories. It was posed for by first class actors and actresses—the production was excellent in every instance save one, and that a very important one, the subject.

What could there have been that was either amusing or elevating in a picture which demonstrated the frenzy of a maniac, whose mental displacement centered around an ever-increasing desire to strangle beautiful women? The whole thing was horrible and gruesome in the extreme, with capabilities for mentally unbalancing a weak-minded individual.

This film has absolutely no excuse for its existence. Put it away, friends—put it away out of sight. This is all we ask.

A DISGRACE TO MOVING PICTURES

Sunday, February 4th, a visit to the Riverside Theatre, Ninety-sixth street, belonging to the William Fox Amusement Company, gave us the horrors. This is supposed to be a high-class, tip-top and elite house. What was our astonishment to observe on the screen four films three and four months old, poor subjects, and all as full of rain as the various April showers as it is possible to imagine, with parts of the film cut out and stories disconnected. The expressions of the audience were such that it augurs very illy for the future prosperity of the house. Why not put the latest clean films in instead of these old commercial?

Gaffney, S. C.—A. Louis Wood and J. K. Wood have announced that they will establish a new moving picture theatre here.

IT is not for the Moving Picture News to make comment upon the pending litigation between the Motion Picture Patents Company and the Chicago Film Exchange. The litigation is for the courts to decide, and probably final decision between the arguments of the contending parties will not have been reached until the final tribunal of the land reviews the contentions. Until that time it will be the policy of every journal having the good of the moving picture industry at heart to make no statements as to the merits of the case. It is solely a question for the courts of justice to decide.

However, in justice to News readers who have made inquires as to the situation, it is fair to give a brief resumé of the contentions of the plaintiff and the defense.

Thomas A. Edison has been successful in the first step of the litigation against the Chicago Film Exchange, an Independent. In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia the presiding justice notified the Motion Picture Patents Company and the Chicago Film Exchange, which had been sued for alleged infringement of the Edison patent, that he would give a verdict for the plaintiff. No opinion was handed down. An appeal was taken, and the case will undoubtedly go to the United States Supreme Court for final review.

Mr. Edison claims patents on perforated film, and if he wins he will be enabled to prohibit any picture house or manufacturer from using perforated film without paying him a royalty on his patent.

Counsel for the Chicago concern argues that it was Louis Ducos, a Frenchman, who really originated the film now used, and that he was granted a patent nearly 50 years ago, and that it was from the Ducos patent that Mr. Edison was instructed how to make the film he now claims to have invented.

After reposing three months in an impromptu jewel case in the form of a chicken's gizzard, a three-quarter carat diamond, belonging to F. M. Reel (appropriate name, that), a motion picture machine operator of Spokane, was restored to its owner recently. Reel lost the gem, valued at $75, from a setting in a ring he wore last September while working in the yard at his residence. The chicken, then a young Rhode Island Red rooster, seized upon it as a choice morsel and swallowed it. His digestive qualifications were too slight for proper disintegration, and the diamond lodged in the gizzard. In the meantime Reel realized his loss was real and devoted himself to reeling to the theatre to reel reels. A few days ago he went to the hen house and killed the rooster for dinner. Mrs. Reel was dressing the fowl when she found the Reel diamond, and now claims the stone really belongs to the whole Reel family. Reel's solace was i nthe form of choice realities of the chicken after it was cooked.

THE INSIDE FACTS

"THAT was some 'swell stunt,' th' Gem press agent put over th' other day, wasn't it," remarked the Picture Play Philosopher as he blew into the News office this morning.

"You didn't hear th' real facts in th' case, did you?" asked the P. P. P., over his shoulder. He had borrowed a stogie and was sitting at our desk writing a letter on News stationery.

"Now I have dashed off a little couplet on the affair that I thing is great; I'll just read it to you," said the Philosopher as he wheeled around in our perfectly good swivel chair.

"Never mind; never mind," we said hastily.

"Well, it was like this," continued the Picture Play Philosopher, never heeding, "th' 'movies' put it over on Cap. Hogemann of th' Cecile different from you've heard. I was there an' I know."

The P. P. P. then jauntily flipped the ashes from his stogie onto our expensive Turkish rug, and was perfectly oblivious to the stern eye we centered upon the ashes.

"Eight of the 'movies' stayed on board until the vessel had passed th' Battery an' was well out to sea. Then they appealed to th' Cap. 'Verdammt,' said Cap, or words meanin' th' same. When th' four ladies knelt to him in beseechin' attitudes, Cap fairly danced with rage. He gave 'em a North German Lloyd panning.

"Then Cap saw a big white light. At a little distance was th' man with th' camera turning th' crank for dear life, and wearin' an' expression of pleased expectancy. Here was th' aristocratic Capt'n of a North Lloyd steamer posin' fer moving pictures! Cap made a get-away; th' show was over. Then th' tug Dalzelline came bustlin' up an' took th' actor an' actorines off. Then Cap bobbed out of th' cabin an' had his revenge.

"Get out th' accommodation 'ladder,' he ordered.

"One goes down th' accommodation ladder conservatively—no Jacob's ladder with pretty galls swingin' in mid-air. Nit.

"Th' bunch pleaded against th' accommodation ladder, but Cap was bull-headed. 'There shall be no lanchery shows on th' Cecile, py cracious,' he said. An' there wasn't."

"I composed a few lines on th' situation as I rode down in the subway this morning," continued the Picture Play Philosopher. "You better hold that last form and get 'em in this week—because the Outlook staff will cry when they hear they've missed 'em."

Then the Philosopher handed us the verses and went away:

"It was the good ship Cecile that sailed the wintry sea,
And the Skipper had taken the 'movies' along to bear him company.
Blue were their noses from wintry blasts, their cheeks were cracked with cold,
As they gathered upon the quarter deck and besieged the Captain bold.

"O Captain, dear," cried the ladies fair,
"O Skipper listen here!"
And on faces of the outward bound were froze many a salty tear.
"We were only putting on a show; it's back to New York for us!"
"It's Europe for yours," the Captain cried with many a growl and cuss.

"Didn't ye hear th' 'All Ashore,' th' ring of th' farewell bell?
"Th' clankin' of th' anchor chains, and' th' officers' warning yell?
"D'ye think this ship's a picture show, an' I'm takin' a leadin' part?
"It's dear ole Lunnon fer you an' yours; you've already made a start!"

Then from far across the briny deep came the sound of a whistle hoarse.
The monster ship was halted; the Captain had changed the course!
The 'movies' down the gangway went, were transferred to a tug.
"It's a good free ad fer th' whole dinged bunch," said the Captain with a shrug.

The manufacturers propose to devote more attention to the educational release in 1912. Not that some good work was not accomplished during the past year, but it is more and more realized that educational films are desired, and that frequent releases on educational subjects open markets undreamed of a few years ago. We venture to predict that in five years from now not a school building of any consequence in the United States but what will possess one or more moving picture machines. The Boards of Education will look to the manufacturers for appropriate subjects not only for high-class entertainments for the children, but subjects strictly educational to be utilized in the classrooms. It is believed that many of the studies now taught by the text-book method will in a short time be impressed upon the student by means of the moving picture machine. History, both ancient and modern, physiology, literature—all of these are among the studies easily made more entertaining and impressive by means of the motion picture than the text-book and recitation plans now so universal. Charts are now used in many schools for the teaching of that important study, physiology. How much better would the animated picture impress the laws of health and the care of the body upon the young mind? Subjects taken from real life, not charts; pictures showing the digestive organs at work, the effect of alcohol upon the human system, etc., could be more convincingly portrayed in the moving picture. In many States the W. C. T. U. demands temperance instruction in the schools. A good educational film on temperance would be more beneficial to the student than all the tracts and temperance text-books ever published. We are confident of seeing great strides in these and other educational lines by means of the moving picture.

The Plain Dealer bard sings:

Old winter was a season drear,
But that was years ago;
The nipping frosts brought merry cheer
About the crackling glow.
We watch the tube with furrowed brow,
Unmoved by frosty sheens;
We'd rather take our winters now
In moving picture scenes!

Recently, in commenting upon the coming centenary of Charles Dickens, we mentioned some of the great author's work that, in our opinion, should be added to the other delightful films which have done so much to foster a love for Dickens in the hearts and minds of the younger generation somewhat prone to forget Dickens and his living characterizations for the swashbuckler. While on the subject of standard literature, we cannot resist pointing to other ideas which might prove of value to enterprising producers. Wouldn't Scott's "Ivanhoe" make a great feature film—say, a three-reel subject! The possibilites of that great story of English feudal days are unboundless. The characters of "Ivanhoe," the Black Knight," "Wamba, son of Witless, "Gurth, the Swineherd," "Romena," the "Knight Templar, Boise Guilbert," and others are immortal.

Then there is Scott's "Quentin Durward," every bit as good a story as Dumas' "Three Guardsmen." Thackeray's "Henry Esmond" is another good tale for the films. Vitagraph seems to have caught the idea, for nothing too complimentary can be said anent their great production of Trackeray's "Vanity Fair." A great story and a great film, which will do much to enhance the dignity of cinematography.

Mr. Kent—we believe that is the director's name who staged "Vanity Fair"—has caught the spirit of Trackeray's greatest novel. His cast, too, is well selected. There is that unprincipled little adventuress, Becky Sharp, enacted to the life; the glutton. Joseph Sedley; the good-natured, blundering guardsman, Rawdon Crawley; the precise, the timid Sir Pitt Crawley, and the forbidding Lord Stein—they are all there, just as Thackeray drew them so many years ago. It's a delight and an education to view such films. Let Vitagraph continue the good work so auspiciously started and let other manufacturers take like action and give us more of Dickens, Thackeray, Scott Collins, Lever and the other writers of that halcyon period of English literature.

There cannot be a superabundance of these adaptations. They will live in the history of cinematography, just as the books will live as long as the world lasts.

BACK TO THE WOODS

A Harrowing Tale—With a Moral

By Horace Vinton

"Well, it is the prevailing custom to give these matters all possible publicity. Everyone does so!"

"Quite true!" answered Baxter. "Then why all this show of feeling when the poor misguided employee loses his head and becomes unruly? Why, these two people actually called my attention to the fact that they are the most talked of people in the moving picture industry. They showed me clippings and pictures from the various papers, and even labored under the impression that the papers paid for the privilege of printing all this fulsome rot!"

At this show of frankness on the part of Baxter, Webb sat silent and thoughtful for a brief interval, then continued:

"I was just wondering if their retirement will hurt us!"

"Absurd! How many companies were they with before they come to you?"

"I really don't know. Several, I believe."

"Did any one of them fail, when Owens and his wife left?" slowly remarked Baxter.

"No failures were recorded!" laughed Webb.

"Then remember this. For every public idol who vanishes from the realms of popularity, ten others peep over the horizon looking for their places. Don't advertise individuals in your employ. Confine your efforts to exploiting your company entire. The individual will advertise himself, or herself, in every instance so far as their efficiency and popularity will permit. Make your product the best in the market by putting forth every effort to obtain interesting and consistent stories. And above all, encourage the universally neglected scenario writer by giving prominence to his, or her name, on the screen and in the papers, for 'The play's the thing,' and a tense, gripping, dramatic story, or a sparkling comedy will go farther to please than all the fine photography ever shown, in a weak, uninteresting theme, no matter how clearly defined. Employ an expert camera man, one who understands the optical and artistic possibilities, who can take his camera apart and put it together again without the aid of a mechanician. Eliminate the expert (?) who can tell all about a subject the moment he sees the negative. The scenario editor, or editress (more particularly), who does not find material available, because it is submitted 'long hand,' or has an unknown name appended, for remember more genius has starved and died in garrets than ever appeared to enlighten the world with their brilliancy. The 'Oracle' has spoken," laughed Baxter, rising. "I might suggest a lot more 'don'ts,' but what's the use. Anything new for next week?" asked he.

"You might announce the fact that Maurice Owens and little Myrtle have retired permanently from the Dormant Company and have been replaced by——" here Webb hesitated. "No! I've changed my mind!"

"Then you don't want to announce the names of their successors?"

"Simply say, two well-known people recruited from the ranks of the drama. Let their work speak for itself."

"'By their deeds shall ye know them!'" laughingly quoted Baxter, as he closed the door behind him.

The next day the new leading man and woman left by the limited to assume their duties.

Subsequent transpirings make it essential to note the fact that Susie Corrigan, true to her word, resigned her position as stenographer with the avowed intention of becoming an actress in motion pictures.

Only a brief trial was necessary to convince the executives of the Dormant Company, as well as the Exchange man and exhibitors, that this retirement of Owens and his wife had not made any material difference, for their successors proved themselves more than efficient, and in a short time had earned a reputation and popularity superior to their predecessors, and a balance on the credit side of the ledger for the succeeding year of more than ten thousand dollars difference in salary.

Maurice Owens and little Myrtle, his wife, remained in New York. For a long time they gave little attention to seeking another engagement, for as Maurice often remarked: "Oh, they know where to find us!"

This spirit of affected independence soon gave way to anxiety as the family purse began to show signs of depletion. Thrust into the limelight of popularity, more through circumstances than real ability, like all parvenus, money had no value, and the more they received, the greater their extravagance; it was not long, therefore, until their savings were entirely exhausted. Then they began to haunt the studios of the various manufacturers in quest of positions, and were greatly surprised that in each instance their record for unreliability had preceded them and they were unsuccessful. Time waned, and Maurice Owens and little Myrtle disappeared entirely, and were swallowed up in the "flotsam and jetsam" of cinematography.

An interval of several years elapsed.

With novel and interesting stories, superb photography and acting beyond criticism, the Dormant Company, under Webb's administration, advanced and their business grew to such wonderful proportions that it became necessary to organize two other companies, one of which they sent to the land of flowers and perpetual sunshine, Southern California, and the other to the Northwest Coast, in quest of marine environment.

Webb transferred his headquarters to San Diego, where they built a modern plant.

About this time the name of Gwendolyn Bancroft was becoming prominent, for the cleverness of her work and exquisite beauty. Some imaginative promoter of publicity once referred to her as: "The miniature Juno, with the midnight eyes."

Webb, in quest of a leading woman whose personality answered the descriptive type, made inquiries, and the reports being in every way favorable, he put himself into communication with Miss Bancroft, and shortly after engaged her for his Southern company.

The ensuing correspondence seemed to occasion that young woman no end of merriment, and when the contract came she signed it with a flourish and began preparations for her journey.

Two weeks later she walked into the presence of Gilbert Webb.

"Mr. Webb?" asked she.

"Yes!" answered Webb, half turning, with a preoccupied air.

"I am Gwendolyn Bancroft!" and raising her expensive chiffon veil, she disclosed a face of marvelous beauty. Oval and well rounded; large, melting eyes, veritable pools of blackness, curtained with silken lashes, eyebrows formed with the precision and accuracy of a bow, tapering as they approached the delicately chiseled nose. Just such features which inspire the artist to create fanciful figures that appear to the observer beautiful in conception and drawing, yet improbable from the material side.

Webb for the moment was struck dumb with admiration, wonder and amazement.

"Susie Corrigan!" exclaimed he, when he recovered his power of articulation. Then involuntarily: "How beautiful you have grown!"

"No! Only better groomed and better fed!" laughed Susie modestly.

Webb gazed at her long and doubtfully, until Susie recalled him by asking:

"What's the trouble, do you still think I won't do?"

"Oh, no! no!" answered Webb, in a perfunctory tone.

"Well, don't worry," said Susie, rising. "What time tomorrow?"

"Ten o'clock at the studio." And Webb turned toward his desk.

"I'll make good!" were Susie's parting words. And she more than realized her promise.

Susie slept but little that night, and arrived at the studio far in advance of the others the morning following her interview with Webb.

The first person to greet her was Buck McCann, who had been advanced to the important position of shipping clerk. When he discovered the identity of Gwendolyn Bancroft, he uttered: "Hully gee!" in a modified form.

Lack of space forbids a record of the interview, which was a classic.

Affairs soon settled down and Susie proved herself tractable, earnest and efficient beyond criticism. Her tact, modesty and irresistible charm won the hearts of all.

Several weeks later, during the lunch hour, while the entire company were seated around the well-dressed table in the studio, Buck rushed in and laid out a three-sheet poster on the floor. As he arranged the sheets, the following descriptive matter appeared:

HIST! HERE COMES SURELOCK JONES!

The greatest Hawkshaw that ever came down the pike is presented by Thanhouser, Friday, February 16th, in an elongated gentleman known as "Surelock Jones, Detective." Surelock, it is announced, is no slouch. What he does, and what he forgets to do, is a caution! He rarely misses anything. He is so clever he could find a fighting Irishman in a Hebrew synagogue. He can tell Limburger by its smell. How can a man be so bright and live, you ask? Well, let it be said that "Surelock Jones, Detective" will not live long if the Evildoers Trust can get a knife to him—or if he continues in his refusal to join Scotland Yard!

MILDRED HOLLAND AND POWERS

The time has arrived when the most prominent stars of the theatrical firmament, realizing the wonderful possibilities presented them for the displaying of their ability upon the moving picture screen, are rapidly joining the ranks of the photo-players. The latest arrival in the moving picture field is Mildred Holland, who will make her initial bow in her greatest success, "The Power Behind the Throne" in a film of the Powers Motion Picture Company.

Miss Holland and her powerful drama are too well known in every city throughout this country to need an introduction, but the adaptation of this production with all its original accessories to the moving picture stage is certainly worth seeing, it being another triumph of the cinematographic art.

RICH G. HOLLAMAN

Demonstrates Educational Feasibility of Films to Women's Clubs at Eden Musee

Says Mrs. Mary Lawton Metcalfe, a leader in Women's Clubs, and movements for the general advancement of civilization, "Mr. Hollaman is the first man in the business who has recognized the uplift movement among women's clubs."

On Wednesday evening, February 7th, an entertainment was tendered Mrs. Metcalfe, President of the Educational Department of the Gotham Club, by Mr. Rich G. Hollaman, at the Eden Musee, of which he is president, for the purpose of demonstrating the efficiency of the educational film for use as a supplement to the text book in the schools. In an interview with Mr. Hollaman prior to the entertainment he said, "We are prepared to demonstrate that the moving picture can be made supplementary to the text book in connection with every subject which it staught in the schools except algebra and arithmetic."

As chairman of the Gotham Club, and as member of the D. A. R. and other prominent clubs, Mrs. Metcalfe requested that representatives from the women's clubs of the five boroughs be allowed to view the demonstration, which request was gladly granted by Mr. Hollaman. Representatives from the Knickerbocker Club, the Minerva Club, the Illuminati Club, the Staten Island branch of the D. A. R., teachers and others were present.

The program was the same with one or two exceptions as that shown to the Board of Education some three weeks or so ago, consisting of films treating of the following subjects: Science, geography, natural history, chemistry, literature, history, drama, etc.

Mrs. Metcalfe was assisted in receiving the guest of the evening by Mrs. A. A. Brooks, President of the Gotham Club, Miss Josephine Walton, Mrs. A. A. Cloud, Mrs Minnie Baer, Miss Marie Baer, Mrs. Wm. H. Lock, Mrs. James G. Blaine and Mrs. J. E. Palmer.

The demonstration was voted a huge success by all those present; and it goes without saying that the women's clubs, after the wonderful examples set forth upon the screen by Mr. Hollaman will leave no stone unturned in order to make education by moving pictures a universal thing.

We may further add, Mr. Hollaman said that such an exhibition has never been given in the history of cinematography in the City of New York as was given on this occasion at the Eden Musee. Mr. Hollaman as the oldest exhibitor in New York should know whereof he speaks.

GAUMONT WEEKLY

On February 22d the Gaumont Weekly is scheduled to make its initial appearance and will appear regularly on each Thursday thereafter. This go-ahead concern whose American plant and offices are located at Flushing, N. Y., is utilizing every avenue to make the Gaumont Weekly the par excellence motion picture newspaper in the world. With this object in view operators have been stationed at central points in the United States and Canada in order that the entire continent shall be thoroughly covered. The French Gaumont will contribute regularly a pictorial review of all important European events, thus making the Gaumont Weekly an animated epitome of the Old and New Worlds. A wonderful panorama of ever-shifting scenes telling the life story of all parts of the globe. The manager of the Gaumont Company declares that nothing approaching the Gaumont Weekly in splendid variety and artistic completeness has ever before been attempted. It is significant that the new Graphic Weekly will be widely exhibited and its projectors believe will instantly become tremendously interesting with the exhibitors. This film will be shipped on the day and date of issue, which will make the Gaumont Weekly available in the East on Thursday and in Chicago on Friday, and within the next few days in all the West. That is all copies will be shipped on the Sunday and the change will have the right to exhibit it immediately on receipt. This new arrangement is made with a view to saving time and making this weekly as up to date as possible.

CHICAGO LETTER

Mr. A. W. Wylie, President of the Sunlight Metallic Cloth Curtain Company, reports a big increase in business during the past few months and also reports that owing to the installation of the large number of his screens in Chicago and suburbs he has discontinued the use of his demonstrating room at the factory. With the discontinuing of the demonstrating room a circular having a list of over fifty scattered theatres in Chicago was mailed to every exhibitor in order to acquaint them with the address of a theatre in their immediate neighborhood where they could go and view the Sunlight Metallic Cloth screen and see the advantages in actual operation and see the advantages and qualities of such a screen. Mr. Wylie has received inquiries for representation of his screens from Africa, Brazil, Cuba, Porto Rico, Australia, Philippine Islands and from many other corners of the earth, which shows the immense scope of the screen business and how it is gradually branching out all over the world. The firm of Pierce & Scheck, of Baltimore, having installed the Sunlight screens in their own theatres and understanding their merit thoroughly, have taken the agency for them in Baltimore.

In my visitation of the suburban theatres during the past month I was indeed surprised to note the improvement of the majority of these theatres and also the efforts of the operator to produce as clear a picture as possible under the trying circumstances that are usually encountered in the outlying theatres. At a theatre in Hegewisch, Illinois, a town about 21 miles out from Chicago, it is but just to say that the operator there shows a better picture than the majority seen in the city. The picture is bright and clear, and the faintest facial expression can easily be seen from the front of the theatre. The operator, Jack Wolfberg, is to be complimented upon the success of his efforts.

Mr. Louis Noto, who has been with the large licensed film company here, since its origin has accepted a position with the Standard Film Exchange, where he is busy greeting his many friends.

Mr. George M. Hoke, of the Hoke Supply Company, is contemplating an Eastern trip to investigate and visit different Eastern manufacturers and their factories in order to note the improvements in his special line made in that part of the country. During Mr. Hoke's absence the care of the business of the company will be in the hands of the popular general manager, Dick Lawrence. Dick is enthusiastic over the amount of business at the present time and stated that plans are already under way to enlarge the repair department of the firm, which is considered the best in the country.

Mr. Abe Stern, Manager of the Illinois Exhibiting Company, is spending the week at French Lick, Indiana.

Mr. Streckman and Mr. Bernstein, representatives of the New York Motion Picture Company and the Republic Film Company, respectively, were in the city last week with advance reels that certainly surprised us on their quality and the excellence of the pictures.

GREAT NORTHERN FEATURE FILM COMPANY

The success of this company has been phenomenal and augurs well for future prosperity. The special feature film recently released by this company entitled "A Victim of the Mormons," we understand has met with large success, and the big publicity man, Charlie Abrams, wears a smile that won't come off, if we may be permitted to use a slang term. We understand from his secretive manner of speaking that he has something of a big scoop up his sleeve. We couldn't wheedle it out of him, and even when we suggested the popping of a cork, it would not draw him, so we had to let it go. He informed us that the other release, "The Nihilist's Conspiracy," is to be an even finer production than the first, while it is not so long a subject as the Mormon film. The acting is unexcelled. The program of future releases shown to us exhibits some very fine productions in the near future.

We understand the company will release two feature films each month, which is a gigantic proposition. The lobby display and the line of paper sent out to advertise the films are a great attraction in themselves.

NOVEL SCHEME FOR CREATING INTEREST IN THE ODYSSEY

Cash Prize for Essay

Over a thousand students throughout the country have entered a cash prize essay competition espoused by the Monopol Film Company, the subject being Homer's "Odyssey."

Early last December the following letter was mailed to every school superintendent of towns having a population over two thousand. The answers poured in by the hundreds. Here is the letter:

Respected Sir:

How many students have you in the Greek classes? Would they care to enter in a prize essay competition, subject—Homer's "Odyssey?"

We desire a good, snappy story on the "Odyssey" a summary translation, one that explains simply and clearly the plot of the work.

For the best essay submitted to us on or before February 15th, at 10 p. m., we will pay a cash prize of one hundred dollars. The competition is open to any and all school children; award will be made on merit.

We are espousing a cinematographic reproduction of the "Odyssey," a film costing $200,000 in the making, requiring two years for its completion.

The Milano-Films Company of Italy, makers of Dante's "Inferno," that wonderful specimen of photo-play now being shown throughout this country, also produced the "Odyssey," a bigger, better, more elegant and interesting subject.

The essay is not to exceed two thousand words, must be typewritten on one side of paper only.

We will appreciate your calling this competition to the attention of your class. Ten thousand similar letters are being written to school principals throughout America and Canada. Later announcements will be made in the papers. The name of winner will be published along with his or her photograph and name of the school, in the daily papers of the winner's home town.

We will on request send blank forms and addressed envelopes, a synopsis of the "Odyssey," which could be used as a base for the story.

This competition should stimulate an interest in your classes—at the same time serve our purpose of securing a good story, for which we are willing to pay $100.

Will you inform us how many schools are under your control? We will gladly send by prepaid express blanks, rules of competition, and full instructions, etc., etc.

Cordially yours.

Monopol Film Company,
145 West Forty-fifth street,
New York, N. Y.

In less than two weeks six hundred manuscripts had been submitted and each day's mail brings more. The contest will be decided by the Rev. Doctor Stockton. The contest is open to one and all, the rules for entering are but few—they follow:

Rules Concerning Contest

1. Any pupil or student of any educational institution is eligible to enter the competition.
2. Essay to be confined to 1,000 words.
3. Must be written on one side of paper only—preferably typewritten or pen and ink.
4. The essay must be in story form, relating briefly the incidents of the "Odyssey."
5. This form must be signed by principal or superintendent with statement that as far as may be known the essay was actually written by the student.
6. No money shall be sent with MSS. for any purpose whatever. A self-addressed stamped envelope will secure return of rejected MSS.
7. Send MSS. as soon as possible, as in event of close decision, post-mark on envelope will be used in determining winner.

FRENCH-AMERICAN FILM CO. BRING BERNHARDT AND REJANE

The highest price ever paid to any one individual for posing before the moving picture camera was $30,000. This was the amount paid to Sarah Bernhardt for an afternoon's work, when she posed in "Camille."

Nor is the "Divine Sarah" alone in the field of great actresses posing for motion pictures, for has not Rejane lent her greatness to the brilliancy of the industry?

It has been left for the French-American Film Company, 403. Times Building, New York, to pilot these wonderful productions to the American continent. This firm is one of the largest and most extensive concerns of the kind in this country, handling state rights of some of the finest films on the market. In fact, everything that is new, artistic, and thoroughly up-to-date, in the way of the feature film, is handled by the French-American Film Company.

The greatest triumph the moving picture has yet had is demonstrated in the fact that actresses of such unequalled ability and temperament, such world-wide fame, have condescended to pose before the moving picture camera. No greater bequest could be left for future generations by these truly great women than these living, moving photographs of themselves, demonstrating to the world of to-morrow their wonderful talents.

Rejane appears in "Sans Gene," one of her greatest successes. Both of these dramas were of necessity revised to suit the requirements of the moving picture.

The films are each about 5,000 feet in length, and either one is long enough for an evening's entertainment, and will be used as such.

Mr. Anderson, of the French-American Film Co., made a special trip to Europe during the summer in order to investi the actual occurrence, and to make arrangements for handling same.

Mr. H. E. Hetteberg, of the Central Film Exchange, Cincinnati, is a strong Rex booster. He takes such an interest in the Rex productions that recently he became inspired to write a symposium of that company's releases up to a late date. The following is the clever result of aforementioned inspiration:

GOD DISPOSES (SOLAX)

Charles Knight, Jr.....Mace Greenleaf
Charles Knight, his father.....Darwin Karr
Mrs Charles Knight, Jr.....Blanche Cornwall
Gladys, her baby.....The Solax Kid
Stage Johnnies, etc.

Like the realm of journalism, stageland has a certain attraction for the ordinary prosaic person. The interesting people of the stage fascinate by their atmosphere of mystery which surrounds their activities.

Society and the stage have had many differences. These differences become somewhat strained and emphasized when a person of social position marries an actress. Many romances and stories of fiction have been written with the stage as the central theme. All these stories are interesting.

In the Solax production of "God Disposes," the release of February 23d, the basic theme is the marriage of a young man of high social position, who sacrifices his home and family for a girl of the stage. Cast off by his family, the young man finds that he is not qualified to earn his living. In the meanwhile his wife grows ill, a child is born, and several years after, the man finds himself in narrow straits. So much has, perhaps, been told in other stories, but the novelty of this production begins with a steady degeneration of the youth, until he is finally forced to go out and steal. He prepares to go out and burglarize a place. His child enters when he leaves his revolver on the table. The child plays with it as with a toy, and then innocently removes the bullets. The father comes back and takes the revolver and goes out.

Accidentally, the son breaks into his own father's office. The father happens to be working late that night. The son breaks in, tries to shoot his own father. By the intervention of God, the son is saved from becoming a parricide.

The film is elaborately staged, and the photography and light effects are superb. The scenes are gripping, and the interest never drags. Every foot is live stuff.

THANHOUSER'S WASHINGTON FILM

Tuesday, February 20.—Two days before the big Birthday Thanhouser releases their George Washington story, to wit, "Washington in Danger." This is a tale that is said to be based on fact, occurring in the vicinity of West Point while the Continental Army was encamped there. The great commander became acquainted with a landowner who was very profuse in his expressions of patriotism. Finally, the landowner invited Washington to visit him. Graciously, The Father of this Country accepted.

The sympathies of the landowner, though, were really with King George, and he planned to turn the American commander over to some royal troops who would lay in wait. And the plan succeeded—almost.

The film gives you the details and they are bedecked, we learn, in pretty winter settings.

IMP COMPANY ALWAYS IN THE LEAD

Not long ago a visit was made by one of our staff to the factory and studio of the Imp Company. The report came in to our office that everything was booming. While sitting in the anteroom awaiting the pleasure of Mr. Sterne, the genial manager of that portion of the concern, loud screams and a general hubbub startled our reporter, sending him to his feet with a rush that caused office staff, elevator boy (by-the-way the elevator was on the ascent) and all within the radius of that anteroom a great deal of amusement. It was rather disappointing to find out after all that it was only a row between the big fat laundry woman in the picture play and one of her fun making contemporaries.

Yes, things are going ahead at the Imp all right. Mr. Turner, the able producer, who hailed from a big trust concern to lend his abilities to the production of the Independent end of the industry reports wonderful results to glimmer among the laurels of the Imp ere long. Mr. Turner is a man of wide experience, and evidently knows whereof he speaks, and when he opens his mouth to speak he usually says something. In his opinion Europe has us beaten on the moving picture question. "In Europe," says Mr. Turner, "the people and not the exhibitor or the manufacturer have the 'say so,' as regards the nature and quality of the picture. You have to give European audiences good pictures—if you don't they simply go to the box office and demand their money back." In Mr. Turner's opinion too much attention is pand to the quantity, and not enough to quality in this country. And Mr. Turner is not a European either, but one of our own people blessed with plenty of good common sense as well as artistic ability.

A couple of good pictures were run off on this occasion. "The Right Clue," an excellent comedy showing fine work in the preparation and production of the story, and "A Modern Highwayman," for release February 19th.

The studio and factory are well equipped, nothing apparently being left undone to make the Imp film a success. The one topmost thing reported from a visit there is the bustle and go about the place significant of the tremendous amount of business being done by this company both at home and abroad.

Other excellent releases come from the Californian studio. The first of the Californian releases fixed for Thursday, February 29th is "The Rancho Rose." It is a story of Southern California in the early forties—a tale of a young official from Washington who is beloved by Dona Rosa Carrillo, daughter of Don Enrique Carillo, who after a series of stirring adventures succeeds in carrying off the girl like young Lochinvar of Scottish history. The settings of this story are picturesque in the extreme, and the photography exceptionally fine.

"The Immigrant's Violin" is another drama of idstinction constituting an early Imp release. It is a story of a young Italian girl lost on her arrival in this country. She becomes a great artist and is finally united to the man of her choice.

AMERICAN BACKGROUNDS ATTRACT ATTENTION

Samuel S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Manufacturing Company, returned to Chicago on Monday, after two weeks with the Western company in La Mesa. Mr. Hutchinson was delighted with conditions in the Western studio and expressed himself as highly pleased with the line of subjects emanating from the fertile mind of his producer, who has secured Southern California for backgrounds for his pictures.

The recent releases and those booked for the near future show the results of this careful canvass. Ranch scenes are staged mostly on the estates of famous Americans who possess vast ranches in and around La Mesa. Where "dress-suit" backgrounds are desired, The American is particularly fortunate, having within easy access, some of the most superb hotels in the world. For instance, a coming picture entitled "From the Four Hundred to the Herd," is a delightful combination of these essentials. The early scenes are staged throughout the grounds of the famous United States Hotel, while the latter scenes have been produced on the ranch owned by Historian Bancroft. American backgrounds are attracting much favorable comment in the trade.

GAUMONT RELEASES TWO MORE EXCELLENT FILMS

"Zigoto, Calino and Boarders," to be released by the Gaumont Company, Tuesday, February 13th, is a rattling good comedy and fills the bill for a laugh in great shape. A unique feature of this film is the comedy obtained through the escape of a number of lions which are unwittingly released by the maid from numerous wicker hampers where they have been kept captive by their master, an African explorer. The explorer, who has just returned from his travels, has stored his boxes, hampers, etc., in the attic of the boarding house, where he eventually runs up a board bill. To obtain amount for same the landlord is obliged to seek in the luggage for the explorer's purse, sending the maid to do so. What ensued can easily be imagined. The unsuspecting lions cause a deal of confusion and destruction consequent to the fear created in the occupants of the boarding house on account of their inopportune presence.

"Fire at the Mine" for Saturday, February 17th, is a drama of intense interest, with authentic settings, and is filled with pathos and tense situations. It is a picture splendidly put on and of educational as well as recreative interest.

Both of these releases should strongly recommend themselves to the exhibitor.

LATEST FROM LONDON

London Office of the News,
8 Sherwood St., W.

"Flying A's" Santa Catalina picture has received a degree of attention from the press of this country which must be very gratifying to Mr. Hutchinson and those who, with him, were instrumental in securing this remarkable picture of the ocean bed. Mr. W. C. Scott, London manager of the American Company, had visits from representatives of all the chief London papers, and among these the Morning Post and the Star devoted a large space to a detailed description of the wonders of the ocean-bed as revealed by the film. The Morning Post probably ranks second only to the Times in standing in this country, and its enthusiastically expressed opinion will undoubtedly excite a very keen desire to see the film in the minds of a very desirable section of the public. Moreover the whole trade benefits by such powerful testimony to the educative value of the film—testimony all the more valuable in view of the numerous sensational and ill-informed attacks made upon the living picture by notoriety-loving clergymen and papers of indifferent reputation.

The "Kinemacolor" Durbar picture is all that was expected of it, and in face of the almost universal bad quality of the black and white pictures, its quality stands out all the more prominently. All the wonderful colors of the gorgeous Eastern ceremonial, the hues of the robes of the Eastern princes, and the brilliancy of the Indian landscape, are there with a vividness and exactness which brings home to all more than any words could the wealth and beauty of our Indian empire. It is perfect cinematography, and Mr. Urban is more than repaid for the endless pains he took to secure a picture that should set up a new record for his process. It is a record which I do not suppose will be upset until "Kinemacolor" finds another occasion which gives it, if anything can give it, even greater opportunities than the Durbar. Certainly the old difficulty of the Scala management to find room for their audience will be removed in an accentuated form during the next few months.

These are the days of combination in the cinematograph trade. We have a manufacturers' association—we have always had such an association, in fact, but just now it is stronger than ever—a renters' association, and an agreement between these two bodies, and now we are to have a national exhibitors' league. The meeting, which was held at the Holborn restaurant this week, to launch the latter organization was, I think it may be safely said, prompted in the first place by a certain distrust of the agreement between the renters and manufacturers' associations. It is notorious that more than one prominent exhibitor feared that that agreement might lead to steps being taken inimical to the showmen. Whether such fears were or were not likely to prove well founded, the exhibitors can do themselves nothing but good by combining, for, as was found out at the meeting, there have been many instances where legal decisions have been recorded against individual showmen, which might have been reversed had a powerful organization existed to fight cases of general importance. Moreover, if every section of the trade is well organized there will be little fear of one section taking action opposed to the interests of the others.

I notice that a Manchester pressman, writing in the English trade paper, disagrees with my remarks as to the paucity of cinematograph theatres in that important centre of things commercial, intellectual and electrical, and I must admit that the shortage is rapidly being remedied. The mere fact, however, that so many shows have been opening comparatively recently goes to prove the correctness of my statement at the time it was written, a month before it appeared in type in this country. I can quite believe that shows are becoming more numerous, for there was undoubtedly room for them at the time of my last visit, when in the centre of the town there was only one "all-picture" show of a kind which would be called first-class in London, although there was an excellent and well-established picture and variety house. Considering that Manchester is ahead of London as regards theatrical matter, and possesses an excellent repertoire theatre of its own, I have wondered why picture promoters passed it by. Now they are giving it a living, I hope they will make good. But it must be a good show to stand a chance against Manchester's many counter attractions.

A TESTIMONY TO THANHOUSER

Mobile, Ala., February 4th, 1912.

Editor Moving Picture News,
New York.

Dear Sir:

Herewith I inclose copy of a letter we received, in regard to the Thanhouser picture, "The Passing"

The letter speaks for itself and it is not necessary for us to attempt to explain how we have got 'em trained in this neck of the woods.

We are yours respectfully,

Crown Theatre,
J. H. King, Mgr.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Mandrell
Evangelists Home Mission Field, Barker Cotton Mills
Pritchard, Alabama.

Messrs. King Bros., Mobile, Ala.

Dear Sirs: "The Passing," an animated picture film by the Thanhouser Film Company, recently shown in this city at the Crown Theatre, is worthy of more than passing notice, and to the impressive and spiritual natures bespeaks a pleasant and powerful application of the law of supply and demand in its psychic portrayal of spiritual truths in this advancing day of psychology and metaphysics.

In the opening chapters of Camille Flammarion's great work "Unknown," dealing respectively on "credulity" and "incredulity," there is portrayed more nearly perhaps than in any other work, the general mental attitude toward those facts that seem miraculous or phenomenal when not understood.

The writer viewed with much pleasure and gratitude the above film entitled "The Passing," and realized that the heavenly forces are using every avenue that can be used in order that the teachings of our beloved Christ Jesus may be understood and personally enjoyed.

The last thing to be overcome is death, saith the "Master," and in leading up to this sublime ultimate the successive and progressive generations have continually lifted the dividing veil between the physical and spiritual world until now when we see, by the sure sign of the carrying of the gospel of truth, in its vitalizing aspect, into the uttermost parts of the earth, that the end of ignorance, etc., draweth near, and that spiritual thinking and spiritual living must beget for the oncoming generations a spiritualized and better developed nature that can overcome the physical limitations and enjoy the spirit and spiritualized activities of the (at present unseen) universe in its absoluteness, realizing Drummond's vision of the natural law in the spiritual world—also harmonizing with the Lord Christ's statement: "There is no death" to the soul born of and to truth.

The writer, for the sake of many interested in the active truth, asks the management to please run the film again for the sake of the great moral uplift and spiritual joy afforded to those who suffer through lack of vision and knowledge.

Thanking the authors of the Reliance and Thanhouser films that have dealt particularly along these strong moral and spiritual lines, and hoping the public taste may so demand cleaner, spiritual and educational features in the picture theatres that the supply in future may be one of the most instructive avenues in assisting to mould the really great nature of the future American.

Sincerely,

(Signed) FRANK MANDRELL.

GENERAL FILM PUBLICITY & SALES CO. GOING AHEAD

The General Film Publicity & Sales Company are reported as going ahead in fine style. They have under way the production of several industrial subjects—specially fine, and suited to school work. They have already closed four or five contracts on these highly interesting industrial subjects. The above mentioned films will be sent out by the regular channel, the interested companies supplying lecturers to accompany the pictures.

The General Film Publicity & Sales Co. will release through the open market. Affiliated with them in this are four or five other manufacturers. The main object in selling under organization is to maintain the C. O. D. basis as well as an established price.

MOVING PICTURES OF SOUTHERN ALASKA

On Wednesday afternoon, February 7th, there were shown at the Eden Musee, some excellent and interesting moving pictures of Southern Alaska.

Alaska is a portion of the Union but little understood except by the meagre few who have thought well enough of this rich Northern possession to explore its inner recesses, and one or two large capitalists who are quietly gripping the throat of the country, and who are endeavoring to crush out of existence the small enterprise.

Mr. Harbeck, of Seattle, to whom we are indebted for this animated pictorial display, explained step by step the story of beauty and virgin wealth set forth upon the screen. Only one thing Mr. Harbeck neglected to impress upon the minds of unitiated Easterners, in Alaska, although half of the year darkness prevails with the exception of a short time each day, the other half has perpetual sunshine, and Alaska is not by any means the land of ice and snow which Easterners are inclined to think it is. As was demonstrated not long ago at the land show at Madison Square Garden, some of the finest agricultural produce that was exhibited there was grown in Alaska.

Nevertheless, Mr. Harbeck's remarks on Alaska were intensely interesting, and the films shown, of exceptional beauty and true to life. The scenes along the Copper River Railroad, the mountains and glaciers, mining operations, the only oil refinery in Alaska, and many other scenes of interest.

A unique manner of describing the topography of the Katalla and Controller Bay district, showing the location of the coal lands over which there has been so much controversy. Previous to the Alaskan display an interesting film was shown demonstrating the beauty of the scenery through which the Canadian Pacific R. R. passes.

Perhaps one of the most interesting films among Mr. Harbeck's collection is the one giving illustrations of the fishing industry in Alaska. In this film one of the interesting points is the return of fish up stream after an absence of considerable length where they actually make ascents in the river by jumping upward distances of several feet. The fishing industry is one of the largest in Alaska and is capable of creating intense interest in the film.

THE DURBAR IN "KINEMACOLOR"

Mr. Charles Urban, who had previously announced Monday, February 5th, as the date on which he would present at the Scala Theatre the magnificent "Kinemacolor" record of the whole leading ceremonies, processions and pageants in connection with their Majesties' visit to Bombay, Delhi and Calcutta, including intimate and exclusive scenes of the Coronation Durbar, has progressed so well with his preparations that he is now able to fix definitely the evening of Friday, February 2d, for the first representation. Subsequently, the full series will be divided into two parts: Part I (including the State Entry into Delhi, the King and Queen receiving the native princes, the presentation of colors, the point-to-point races, the garden party, etc.) being shown at the morning performances, beginning on Saturday, February 3d; and Part II (comprising the Coronation Durbar, the Royal Review, the State Departure, and the Calcutta Pageant, with some grand scenes within the elephant stockade) will begiven in the evening on and from the same date. Subsequently, this order of things will be reversed fortnightly.

Mr. Urban has just made an important engagement whereby Mr. Alfred E. Corrick will become general manager of the Kinemacolor-Scala Theatre, from the date of the above production. Mr. Corrick has for seventeen years been a prominent member of the managerial staff of the Alhambra Theater, and for several years past its treasurer. In his new appointment he will have the cordial good wishes of his brother managers and his myriad of personal friends.

RICHARDSON REFUSES TO BE BURIED

An undertaking establishment is located next door to the studio of the American Film Mfg. Co., at La Mesa, Cal. Along the wall in the rear of the undertaking house is a long row of pine boxes used to ship coffins in.

One day last week, Jack Richardson, the "heavy" man" of the American, came in from a most trying and tragic picture, feeling much depressed. He strolled into the rear of the building, and there, to his utter amazement and dismay, he found that some one had posted a placard on each box which read, "Jack Richardson." Did this cheer up the "Heavy Man?" It did not, according to other members of the Flying "A" Company. Richardson is said to be still searching, craftily and carefully, for some carelessly dropped word that would inform him as to the exact whereabouts of the gentleman or lady who conceived the joke.

POMEROY, OHIO, U.S.A.

Established 1819

Over 3000 Barckhoff Organs in use, which testify to their superiority and durability in construction, workmanship and sweetness of tone.

We make a specialty of Organ Chimes, made by no other builder.

You are dealing with the Manufacturer, no commission.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Los Angeles and vicinity have been sweltering during a week of the warmest weather we have had in some time. I know it is hard for you to believe this, dear reader, but nevertheless its the truth, and while you are hugging the stove, we have our coats off, and even then we are not comfortable.

Of course this fine weather brought every one out, and all the picture shows are thriving.

The "Art" Theatre, corner Fifth street and Broadway, has now been using Independent service for two weeks, and Mr. Geo. A. Church, the proprietor, informs me that on Saturday, January 13th, he broke all previous records for attendance at that house. Mr. Church has just recently taken over this theatre, and already many improvements have been made. Mr. Church expressed himself as being highly pleased with the service that he is receiving, and praises the manufacturers for the many improvements that have been made by them during the past year.

This sounds good, doesn't it? And with the fine projection put on at the "Art," together with the excellent pictures, it looks as if many more records will be broken.

It is almost a positive fact that all the public schools of Los Angeles will be equipped with moving picture outfits. The board of education, according to Supt. J. H. Francis, will soon be called upon to decide this important question.

Mr. Francis said, "The moving picture films offer several great advantages, and must sooner or later come into all of our schools. Pictures that depict geography, sociological problems, horticulture, and many other subjects are well adapted for use in the classrooms. Motion pictures have a special place in social center and evening work, and the pictures that are made in foreign countries are sure to impress the minds of children. The students must have some recreation, and the pictures will be most beneficial."

Mr. James A. Sciaroni and Mr. Earl Miles were in the city during last week. After looking over the situation very carefully, these gentlemen found that more releases were badly needed at the local exchange, and arrangements are being made to secure several more.

The added releases will include, two "Bisons," and either an Ambrosia or "Itala," and several others will be received later on.

Mr. Fred Dawes informs me that he has now made the sixth shipment of films to Mr. E. M. Burris at Matalazen, Mexico, and that business in that city is excellent. Mr. Burris has just recently opened the first legitimate picture show there, and already he has been forced to increase the seating capacity.

The "Princess" Theatre, San Diego, Cal., has installed two new Powers' six machines. This house is one of the best in San Diego, and business there is very good. Four reels of Independent pictures are shown, the programme changing twice a week. Service is supplied by Miles Bros. Exchange.

The "Alhambra," corner 18th and San Pedro streets, was broken into on Wednesday night, and one reel of film was stolen. The reel was Part I of Thanhouser's "David Copperfield." Nothing else was taken, though there were three reels of film in the operating-room at the time.

Mr. D. S. Markowitz, of the California Film Exchange, reports that the "Fox" Film Company, of which he is the manager, is working steadily, and that the company will start releasing about May 1st.

The "Fox" people now have three companies in the field, a western, dramatic, and a comedy company. The western forces are under the direction of Mr. Jack Russell, who is well known in local theatrical circles. The dramatic company is in charge of Mr. Chas. Giblin.

Mr. Markowitz also stated that the "Fox" Company has no connection with the "National" Film Company, as was reported in one of the trade papers. Mr. Markowitz will hereafter devote his entire time to the interests of the new company, and the local branch of the California film exchange will be in charge of Mr. D. Bershon, who will arrive shortly from San Francisco.

A Rex Story

"The Heiress," while on a visit to "Where the Shamrock Grows" met "The Vagabond" who for "Five Hours" regaled her with "The Story of the Prayer Rug" until "The Fall of (a) Knight," when, being "Called Back" by "Her Sister" she promised to meet him "By the Light of the Moon," despite the warnings of "The Colonel's Daughter" who was her step-sister. She had "Her Way," believing it was her "Fate" to be "An Exception to the Rule." After hovering "On the Brink" she made "The Ultimate Sacrifice," the "Realization" of which shattered her "Castles in the Air."

A year later, while on her way to "Picturesque Colorado," she was forced to tell her grandmother, who was "A Heroine of '76" of her "Lost Illusions."

After being brought back "From Death to Life" she found "The Little Major" and "A Daughter of the Revolution" were "The Twins."

The grandmother having "Faith" in "Sherlock Holmes, Jr.'s" ability in "Securing Evidence," asked him to hunt down the guilty party.

Although thinking it was like "Chasing the Rainbow" he discovered "A White Redman" engaged in "The Logging Industry in the Northwest" who, on being accused, pointed out "The Strangers," who proved to be "The Guardsman" and "The Artist Financier." They, while admitting it was "A Breach of Faith" thought it might only be "The Tale of a Cat."

WASHINGTON IN DANGER

Thanhouser Release, February 20

Among the many anecdotes told of George Washington is one of how he escaped capture at the hands of a treacherous host.

The American Army was encamped near West Point, the British forces being some distance away, and at the time there was a practical stoppage of hostilities. Many nearby landowners were patriots, and they delighted in a chance to entertain the gallant leader of the army of the people.

There was one man who was particularly profuse in his expressions of patriotism. He shall be nameless, for his descendants still reside in New York State, and are persons of standing and respectability. With this individual, whom Washington frankly trusted, he frequently dined, and to all appearances was the most welcome of visitors.

It was, therefore, with grief and incredulity that the general received word that his genial host was a traitor, and had plotted to betray Washington into the hands of the enemy. At that stage of the contest, the blow might have been fatal to the cause of liberty.

The General's informant was a little darkey boy, a slave in the employ of the traitor, who by a happy chance had been able to overhear his master dickering with a British officer. His story sounded correct, but the fair-minded Washington hesitated to act upon it, knowing that to denounce the man, even if he was innocent, meant his social ruin.

According to the darkey, Washington was to be invited to dine with the traitor at 2 p. m., and while he was at the table, a British force was to suddenly appear and capture him. Circumstantial proof came in the shape of the invitation, but still Washington hesitated, and at last decided to make a thorough test before he acted.

The General was on hand for his dinner engagement, but he was half an hour ahead of time, much to the surprise of his host. The latter detained Washintgon in conversation, waiting and watching for the soldiers of the King to appear. Finally to his joy, they marched in. He dropped his deferential manner, and turning to Washington, said with a sneer,

"General, you are my prisoner."

"I believe not," was Washington's stern reply. "But sir, I know that you are mine. Arrest this traitor, officer."

At the General's command, the "British" soldiers removed their military cloaks and the traitor saw to his horror that they were Continentals, of the Commander's bodyguard.

"I could not believe that he was a traitor," the General said afterward to some of his officers, "and I determined to give him opportunity to show that I was mistaken."

The General's ruse secured his safety, and the humble darkey, no longer a slave, lived many years, happy and well-to-do, and always commanded the high regard of the Father of his Country.

A MESSAGE FROM NIAGARA

Thanhouser Release, February 23

A widower and his only child, a daughter just budding into womanhood, lived at Niagara Falls. The man had retired from business with enough to live in comfort, but his lonely, purposeless life led him into evil habits and he became a drug fiend. He kept the secret from his daughter, and for a long time she did not suspect him. Then a chance meeting with the man who supplied him with the drug revealed everything to her, and she labored earnestly, but unsuccessfully, to reform her father.

About this time she met a young artist from New York, and he immediately fell in love with her. The girl liked him, but because of her sorrow and anxiety did not respond to his passion.

When the smuggler again appeared at her home, the girl refused to permit her father to have dealings with him. The old man stormed and raged, and in his weakened condition his emotion was fatal to him. Frantically endeavoring to reach the drug he craved, he staggered, and fell dead.

Over the body of her father the girl vowed vengeance on the man she blamed for his death, and swore she would bring him to justice, if not for the crime, at least for some other misdeed. Her sweetheart found her still obdurate, she declaring that no love could enter her life until justice had been done.

A chance encounter and an overheard conversation put the girl on her enemy's track, and she trailed him to a lonely hut on the river bank above the falls, where the smugglers had their rendezvous. Listening at a window she soon discovered their secret, and realized that she had the evidence to put her enemy and his pals in jail for long terms.

Unfortunately for her, one of the gang, arriving late, surprised and captured her. The smugglers locked her in an upper room of the hut intending to detain her until all danger to them was past.

The window was too small for her to escape, the room downstairs, the only other exit, was filled with her enemies. There was one chance to get word to the outside world and the girl took it.

She wrote a note telling where she was a captive, and put it in a bottle, corking it. She knew that a bottle might be overlooked, so tied her light hat to it. Then she hurled this unique message into the swiftly rushing river, knowing that it would be speedily carried away.

The message went down the upper river, over the Falls and through the rapids, and lodged against a rock in the placid water beyond. There it was found by the artist, who was out rowing, and aid came on without delay.

The smugglers, preparing to depart, were overpowered, and led away to prison, while the girl at last listened to the pleadings of her lover, who had come to her aid in response to a plea for help sent over Niagara Falls and through the Whirlpool Rapids.

HIS STEP-MOTHER

Majestic Release, February 16

Jack Morton, a sturdy American of twenty-eight, studying art in Paris, is disagreeably shocked by a cable from his respected but rather venerable father, to the effect that he has married a second time and that Jack is to come home at once and meet his step-mother. Before sailing, Jack receives a letter from his fiancee, Lucy Wordon, explaining matters and conveying the information that his step-mother is a girl of twenty-two. Lucy ends the letter by naively adding, "We might just as well get married ourselves right away."

The real reason for the marriage which little Lucy could not explain was an act of daughterly devotion on Madge Ferrell's part. Her father's death had left her the sole support of an aged and invalid mother and without pretence of love she had accepted the suit of Jack's father and promised only to be a loyal and faithful companion—"to honor and obey," if not to love her distinguished old husband, whose attitude and regard for the young girl was indeed more paternal than anything else.

Upon Jack's return to home and his fiancee, his fancied dislike or resentment toward his youthful step-mother soon disappeared and without effort on Madge's part the young man passed rapidly through the stages of toleration —respect — admiration — affection and finally, to his horror, on the occasion of the rehearsals of the holiday amateur theatricals—he awoke to the fact that his kindly regard and liking had grown into a love that threatened to wreck his entire life and crush and break the heart of Lucy, the little girl who had waited so many patient years for him.

It needed but the touch of jealousy to madden him beyond the power of self-control, and Madge, all innocent of the state of his feelings, found herself unable to stop his half insane avowal of his feelings, and indeed her own heart beat sickeningly fast at the thought of how welcome that avowal would be to her were she not in honor bound to another.

She realized at once the cause of Lucy's lately drooping spirits, for while the young girl had no suspicion of Jack's love for Madge, she had nevertheless felt keenly the difference in his demeanor to her since his return from abroad.

Madge realized that all were standing on the brink of a tragedy, and summoning every particle of womanly strength to the rescue, used her potent influence over her step-son to bring about a marriage at once with Lucy, feeling certain that a little separation and time would cure him of his infatuation and restore his love for the sweet girl he once loved so devotedly.

The marriage was quickly consummated and the young couple off on their honeymoon. Madge felt that at least Lucy's happiness was secured and then devoted herself to the care of her husband, striving by a stricter adherence to her marriage vows to forget that moment of unholy joy at the declaration of another man's love.

A year passed and Jack returned with his bride to his father's home. At the first look into his step-mother's eyes he realized that she had passed through the fire safely, but at the same moment realized that while his feeling for her had dulled to the point where control of its expansion was possible, the old love still lived.

However, a solution of the problem is impending, for direct from the source of all goodness comes the factor that once introduced into this tangle of twisted, aching but right doing hearts brings first peace, then content and finally happiness.

PETTICOAT PERFIDY
Majestic Release, February 18

General Wilmer Wilberford had maintained a consistent attitude since the close of the "late unpleasantness" as the Civil War is often referred to South of the Mason and Dixon line.

He was willing to acknowledge the "cause" as lost and that the conquerors and their descendants be treated with consideration, but his very nature rebelled at the thought of any real intimacy with those of the North.

He had been much perturbed during his daughter's last year at a "finishing school for young gentlewomen," by her letters relating a growing friendship between herself and Priscilla Waltham, a young girl whose people were prominent socially in Boston, and at the close of the school term, being laid up by an attack of rheumatism, he had given a grudging consent to his little Virginia spending a few weeks with Priscilla's family before returning home.

At the end of the visit Virginia found herself listening with beating heart to Jack Waltham's proposal of marriage and a wire to her father threw that gentleman into a fit of rage not equalled since '65.

He wired a sharp command to return home at once and as for husbands —he had one picked out for her in the person of her old childhood companion, whose father owned the neighboring plantation.

He also refused absolutely to allow Mr. Jack Waltham to enter his home or even to accompany his daughter on the journey to her home.

Jack's sister, Priscilla, while hurt by the attitude of Virginia's father to her brother, decided to accompany the little Southerner to her Virginia home, and Jack, driven to desperation at the thought of losing sight of Virginia, decided and won the girls over to a daring expedient by which he would at least be able to be near his sweetheart while she endeavored to win her father over to a union with the North.

Priscilla's clothes and a blonde wig and much torture of Jack's masculine, if slim figure, resulted in a young lady of rather alarming height and breadth, but none the less at least "passing fair."

Jack's stay at the Wilberford mansion was lengthened far beyond the original time planned and he and Virginia found themselves involved in one complication after another until at last fate intervened in a most striking manner and Virginia's father was won over.

INBAD, THE COUNT
Nestor Release, February 12

Count Percy is assiduously courting Ethel Wells, whose mother is delighted at the prospect of annexing a title. Father, however, is less pleased at this, but mother is boss. The old gentleman is delighted when the girl makes the acquaintance of Jack Greenleaf under circumstances which reflect much discredit upon the Count's marriage. Father invites Jack to call upon the family at their city home, and Jack loses no time in accepting the invitation.

During the call, Jack has a short brush with the Count, who is highly offended and leaves, much to the anger of the mother, who forbids Jack the house thereafter.

Jack and Ethel manage to exchange letters, and, in order to keep their correspondence secret, they use an old cannon, mounted in a nearby park, as a letter box. The spying Count learns this, and determines to intercept some of the letters. With this intention, he goes to the old cannon, reaches into it in search of a letter, and finds a lady's purse, which has just been hidden there by an escaping sneak thief. The officer from whom the thief has made his getaway returns as the Count finds the purse, and explanations are useless. The cop insists that the Count is the

HIS SIDE PARD

Nestor Release, February 14

Hal Jackson and Jim Wilson are partners of a mine, which they are working jointly. Hal takes some samples of ore to the assayer, James Padley, who writes the boys that the mine will only assay about eight dollars to the ton and will hardly pay them to work it.

The evening before Hal called at the Wilson shack, where Jim's mother and sister welcomed him. Hal is in love with Jim's sister, and each time that he comes remains until the mother falls asleep, and Jim frantically motions his sister to send Hal home.

After receiving the assayer's letter, Hal again calls at the shack, only to find Jim thoroughly downcast. He has received a letter from J. R. Braddock, which reads as follows: "Will be over to see you in the morning, and if your mine is all that you claim, will negotiate with you for purchase of same." Hal leaves early, and the women go to the kitchen to finish some work. Jim decides to salt the mine with gold which he has in a jar. He takes his shot gun into his room and charges it with gold, then with some quartz containing free gold, which he carries in a tin box, and which the young people were looking at in a previous scene, he slips out, mounts his horse and rides away to the mine. There he shoots the gold into the rocks and throws quartz around, dropping the box and forgetting it.

The next morning the would-be purchasers come to look at the mine. Jim sends the unsuspecting Hal to settle with them, and Hal is surprised to have the men at once give him a check for it. After they are gone, he looks at some pieces of quartz which he saw them examining, and sees the tin box. At once he realizes that the mine was salted and mounts his horse to Jim's shack to demand an explanation. Jim declares that Hal must have salted the mine, if it is salted, but Hal, with the aid of his gun, forces the truth from Jim and makes him write a confession.

In the meantime Jim's sister enters, and Jim realizes that he may yet escape the consequences of his deed. He begs Hal to let him go for his sister's sake. Hal agrees and tears up the note of confession, but Jim's mother has overheard and commands her son to tell the men at the mine. They, in the meanwhile, have discovered the mine was salted, and have ridden after Hal, leaving a couple of miners at the mine. These men dig a few inches deeper and strike a rich vein. They in turn ride after the purchasers and arrive just as they were about to take both Hal and Jim. The men tell of the rich strike, and all are glad to let the deal stand. Jim asks forgiveness.

BRANNIGAN'S PROMOTION

Nestor Release, February 17

Brannigan is big, fat and good-natured; he is also a policeman, that is, he has but lately joined the force. His brother officers are inclined to make fun of the "Greenhorn," and Roundsman McCarthy is more mischievous than the rest.

Banker Kelson and family are away on a pleasure trip. The "tip" makes the rounds of the underworld, and various sets of crooks independently plan to "clean out" the banker's home. Roundsman McCarthy sees the night prowlers at work, but, believing them to be planning a joke on him, he decides to shift the joke on Brannigan, who is about to relieve him.

In Kelson's home, the marauders hold each other up till recognition makes them fraternize in the most fraternal way. They eat, drink, smoke and make merry. Their merriment reaches Brannigan's ears, who quickly makes a tour of investigation. He 'phones headquarters for assistance, and then, single handed, he enters the banker's home. Just as he holds up the merrymakers, other policemen arrive and the entire outfit is taken to the station. For this "coup" the "Greenhorn" received a sergeant's stripes to the utter dismay of the wiser and sadder and older cops, particularly McCarthy.

TIGHTWAD GETS A BARGAIN

Mr. and Mrs. Tightwad have quite a spat over the ancient silk hat that the man refuses to shelve. He shall no longer disgrace her; so the Mrs. sallies forth and, without taking hubby into her confidence, buys him a new silk tile for which she pays ten dollars. At home, she embellishes the hat with hand-worked initials and puts it back into the box. Alas! a tramp has been watching her. He likes the hat and manages to separate it from the box. The hat eventually finds its way to a second-hand store. Here the proprietor marks it down to two dollars and expectantly rubs his Jewish hands.

Mr. Tightwad happens along; sees the hat, the price and the chance to satisfy the Mrs. He buys the hat and rushes home. The initials puzzle Mrs. Tightwad, who makes a dash for the box. It's empty but for the bill, which Tightwad reads, "Ten dollars." The shock crumples him into a heap; it also crumples the hat. To make matters worse, the Mrs. recites with emphasis the riot act.

THE TRAMP'S DOG

Lux Release, February 9

"A touch of fellow feeling makes one wondrous good and kind," is truly illustrated in the opening of this little story, when a friendless tramp befriends a lost dog. By sharing his food with the canine wanderer, the poor tramp gains a friend whose value he little dreams of. A farmer is overpowered by some footpads and robbed. The thieves decamp, leaving the farmer bound and senseless in the roadway, and to this unfortunate traveler is led the tramp by his new friend Pat. Whilst bending down to untie the ropes that bind the farmer, the tramp is seized by the police, and accused of the crime. Pat follows his new master to the station, but is not admitted. He then returns to the spot where the affair was committed, and his keen scent helps him to discern that there were other persons concerned in the affair. Following their trail, the dog traces them to a small, dilapidated cottage. The door being shut, the dog jumps through a hole in the window that has been covered with paper. When the thieves hear a noise and go to see what it is, the dog is nearly caught. Jumping through the window again, he climbs into a barrel outside, and hides there. The thieves find nobody and conclude that they were mistaken. They retire into the cottage again and proceed to examine the results of their crime. Returning homeward, the old farmer is surprised to find himself worried by the dog, and he finally understands what is expected of him and follows it. As a result of his visit to the cottage, he is able to bring the police to the true criminals, and is not slow in offering the tramp and his little friend a suitable recompense. A splendid illustration of the fidelity of our canine friends, this film will always prove a suitable tribute which the public are ever ready to pay to "our dumb friends."

BILL TUNES THE PIANO

Lux Release, February 16

This is, beyond all doubt, the most amusing film in which "Merry William" has yet appeared. Falling in love with a charming young thing, "Billy" follows in her dainty footsteps, and overhears her ordering the piano tuner to call that afternoon. He procures a disguise, goes to the home of his fair charmer, and seeks her company. Instead, however, of encountering his "Turtle Dove," he is met at the door by her fond papa. Hence the base deceiver is forced to continue his role. Bill certainly does not know much about a piano, but he soon succeeds in "disembowelling" the instrument, and making it look as though he knows what he is about. His investigations necessitate his presence in the interior of the piano, so he climbs in. The "Turtle Dove" is surprised to see her admirer emerge from the interior of her piano. The entrance of papa causes Bill to again seek refuge in the interior of the piano. Sometime later the true tuner arrives. He is shortsighted. It surprises him considerably to find that he can get no tune out of the instrument, but still he perseveres, and is further surprised to receive several sharp blows upon the head. Bill keeps bobbing his head up and down like a regular Jack-in-the-box, and the fun is fast and furious. The tuner becomes aware of the presence of somebody in the room, and, concluding that this is the person who taps him so gently upon the head, administers a good sound kicking to the person—no other than papa who has entered the room. The genuine tuner leaves the building by the window, and all ceremony is dispensed with in his exit. When papa leaves the room, the "Turtle Dove" enters, and Bill emerges from his hiding place. A sudden reentrance of papa causes Bill to be caught in the act of crawling back into the piano. Much trouble follows, but Bill, ever ready of tongue, successfully pleads his case, and is forgiven. The state of the piano at the finale leaves no room for doubting that a new piano will be needed to play at the wedding.

On the same reel:

BABY'S GHOST

Papa and mamma have seen their little baby to bed and gone out to a party. Jimmy and Jane, the servants, have seen their employers depart and also gone to a party. Bill and 'Enery, two members of the burglary profession, witness these departures and immediately force an entry into the house and endeavor to become closely acquainted with the contents of daddy's safe. Hearing a noise below, baby creeps downstairs and, peeping through the keyhole, sees the burglars at work. As she does not want those "naughty people to take daddy's money," the little lady thinks of a plan to frighten them away. Her clever little ruse will ring rounds and rounds of applause from every audience. The burglars are surprised by the entrance of a great white ghost, and immediately decamp, leaving the safe untouched.

KEEPING AN EYE ON FATHER

Eclair Release, February 15

The children of Joshua Hamilton, a man of sixty, are afraid of his marrying again. They keep a close watch on him, but he escapes on several occasions, and gets in the company of ladies. Always sure to arrive on the scene, however, he is tormented by their surveillance. He gets a letter from a sister in the West, a woman the children have never seen. She tells him she is coming on a visit. To get the best of his children, he proposes to meet her, and bring her home as his new wife. The plan works out all right and the children are filled with consternation. None of them, of course, will make up to the supposed new wife, and Mary, the daughter who lives with Joshua, leaves home. Joshua and his sister make love on the front porch, in daylight, and further shock his children. But the worst comes when Joshua's sister receives a wire from her grown-up son, saying he will visit her. Joshua meets the man at the station, and proposes that he act the part of lover. The young man agrees, proceeds to the porch, makes love to his mother, is seen by Joshua's children, who are tickled to report the facts to their

GONTRAN IS FOND OF ANIMALS
Eclair Release, February 18

Gontran is fond of animals. He loves a cabman who is good to his horse. He can't see chickens, ducks, or rabbits being shut up in a cage and always releases them. He sees a calf being led to the butcher, he buys it to save its life and brings it home. The janitor won't let him take it in and his wife and mother-in-law take after him.

Exasperated, Gontran is about to do something desperate when his eyes rest upon a notice "Be good to animals." He continues to be good to animals and receives as a reward a certificate of honor from the Humane Society.

On the same reel:

A CONGENIAL SON-IN-LAW

A certain young man takes a fancy to the daughter of a great actor. He wants to marry her, but the girl's mother makes this answer: "My daughter will only marry a man who has at least half as much talent as her father." An idea strikes his mind. He will play all the parts of a terrifying drama to the old man. Stealing into the latter's house, he wakes him up, ties him up as if he were a brigand and then a policeman rescues the old man, who at last discovers that the brigand and the policeman were but one person. The prospective son-in-law, after proving his ability to the satisfaction of all, obtains his reward and marries the girl he loves.

A MODERN HIGHWAYMAN
Imp Release, February 19

Old Noah Prescott was a mechanical genius, who had passed some of the most valuable years of his life in the employ of William Steele, who had made a reputation and amassed a fortune as a manufacturer of labor-saving devices. Noah's triumph—the effort that was to provide him with sufficient money to ease his old age—was the invention of a vacuum street cleaning machine. When the model was perfect, Steele agreed to form a partnership with Noah and to assure Noah patent protection at Washington. Shrewd and unscrupulous, Steele thus got the game in his own hands and it was not difficult for him to play double, to persuade the Washington authorities that Noah was not the real inventor and that he, Steele, was.

Unfortunately Steele was not so careful as he might have been of documentary evidence proving that Noah was the real inventor. These papers were lying about in Noah's humble home, whither he repaired after being dismissed by Steele.

To increase poor Noah's troubles a little boy and girl were sent him as a legacy. The kind-hearted fellow tended the little children with all a father's care and gratified tiny Ruth by stuffing her broken doll with some fragments of paper taken from a waste paper basket.

Steele got out his machine and was acclaimed by the press as a great inventor, but his clerk was suspicious of him and on a visit to Noah's home discovered that some paper which came out of the little girl's doll supplied sufficient evidence proving Mr. Steele to have been a purloiner of Noah's ideas.

Confronted with this evidence, therefore, the manufacturer was compelled to disgorge some of his profits to the tune of $100,000. So poor Noah and his young charges were made happy by the money.

The play gives opportunity to King Baggot as Noah, W. R. Daly as Steele, and William Shay as Steele's clerk, to get in some fine work. There is about it a certain freshness of theme which will make it a conspicuous Imp success. The device of making the little girl's doll the instrument of unmasking Steele's villany is an extremely adroit one. The acting is exceedingly fine throughout, the minor characters are well played, and altogether the story and its photographic treatment constitute another Imp success.

THE LIE
Imp Release, February 22

It is war time and the brave Northern captain, Robert Evans, goes away to take his place on the field. And before he does so he bids adieu to his pretty Southern sweetheart, Edith Hobson. As victory after victory attends the Northerners despair grows in the South. Lieutenant Hobson, Edith's brother, who is, of course, fighting on the Confederate side, is a fugitive from Grant's men. After many desperate wanderings and adventures he takes refuge in his own home. Thither come Captain Evans and his men in search of the fugitive. He is admitted to the room where the wounded man lies. Instantly he realizes the gravity of the problem. Shall he arrest the wounded brother of his fiancee, or shall he not?

He decides on the latter course, and returning to his men he tells them "he lie," viz., that the man whom they were pursuing was not in the house. So the poor hunted wretch escapes, presumably to recover and to interpose no barrier to the marriage of the victorious Northerner and his sister, Edith.

The story has a fine military atmosphere and various scenes on the field of arms are worked out with realism and conviction. King Baggot as the Northern captain acquits himself gallantly as the hero. There are convincing studies of military life and the secnic effects in the picture are charming.

ICE BOATING ON THE SHREWSBURY RIVER, N. J.
Imp Release, February 24

A delightful series of pictures depicting ice boating on the Shrewsbury River.

During the severe freeze of last January some races were arranged upon a frozen lake in Shrewsbury and we see these beautiful ice boats gliding across the smooth ice surface at great speed. There are also races between ice boats and automobiles. Also the lads brought out their miniature ice boats and had races among themselves.

Some exceedingly fine effects of the great white sails against the dull wintry sky and some remarkable studies in photography of ice and snow are shown.

There is a crispness and a sparkle in these ice-yachting pictures which are irresistibly attractive and convey the most delightful sensation of realism to those picture fans unable to participate in this novel and exciting sport.

Ice yacht racing is indigenous to the North American Continent; it is also known in Northern Europe; in warm climates a moving picture of such a subject will come as a striking novelty.

THE BROKEN LEASE
Imp Release, February 24

Mr. and Mrs. William Gleason, a young married couple, are residing in an apartment in which no dogs or children are allowed, and for which they signed a lease covering a period of three years.

Before the time expires Gleason is ordered by the firm, with which he has been connected for many years, to proceed to Australia to manage a branch office there.

Of course, the next move is a visit to the agent to ask to be allowed to break the lease. This the agent emphatically refuses to let Gleason do, and threatens if he moves to make him pay the full amount of rent for the three years.

Gleason returns home very much discouraged and sits down to think the matter over. What can he do to get himself peremptorily ordered to leave the apartment? A brilliant idea occurs to him and he hurriedly proceeds to carry it out. Walking through the streets he sees a number of children at play, and immediately invites them to his apartment for a real good time. This they have with a vengeance, dancing, singing and racing about to their heart's content. To this din is added the barking of dogs which are also brought along, a few being tied to the stair railing, to the terror of the other tenants, who in a body proceed to call at the Gleason apartment to ascertain the trouble.

In the meantime Mrs. Gleason has gone home to her mother to relate their predicament, and she returns at the height of the frolic. For a moment she believes her husband has become demented, but being told the scheme she is overcome with laughter.

The tenants, who are incensed, bring the agent on the scene, and he, to the Gleasons' great delight, orders them to vacate the apartment.

THE WISE WITCH OF FAIRY-LAND

Solax Release, February 18

Deepwater, an Indian maiden, is in love with Boldheart, an Indian hunter. Boldheart comes back from a long hunt and presents his sweetheart with a fox skin. Blackcloud is also in love with Deepwater, and when he comes to present her with a trophy of the hunt he finds her hugging Boldheart's trophy. Blackcloud is overpowering and physically forces the girl to accept his gift and discard Boldheart's.

When Boldheart learns of this he shuns Deepwater. In order to win back his love she consults a witch. This witch gives her a love potion. In the meanwhile Blackcloud, who has been following Deepwater, overhears what she is up to. When she leaves the witch he consults the hag and asks for a poison. The witch gives it to him, but, having an inkling of what the villain is about to do, she follows.

When Deepwater places the potion so that it may attract Boldheart, Blackcloud slouches along and exchanges his poison for the love potion. He sits down and begins to gloat over his victory, when the witch casts a spell over him and he falls asleep. She then changes the potions. Blackcloud finally dies when he drinks the poison, which he believes to be the love potion. The lovers are reunited.

SO SPEAKS THE HEART

Rex Release, February 18

Since the world opened for business the greatest mystery and secret of creation has been—love. All the fools and philosophers of all the ages have reflected and meditated upon, analyzed and dissected the greatest emotion of human kind, and have learned about it—less than knows every child. After centuries and ages of love, and wars and woes because of it; after the murder and malice, dishonor and death that came in its train, we know no more than the First Two. But when the mist is lifted and our eyes see, many a bruised and bleeding heart, many a seared soul and a crucified hope will be unveiled before our saddened vision. Of woman's devotion and man's deceit—a tale of yesterday and to-morrow.

How the accident happened no one could explain, but the lamp had exploded—and the girl was blind! In the first moment of that anguished realization, when the dreary knowledge that she would never again see the things of earth and the faces of loved ones emphasized its dismal portent on her fevered mind, when the joys of her past life seemed to laugh with hollow mirth and mock at her youth and its sudden blight—she thought of Rob, and she sent for him.

He came. Sadly she told him what had happened, and, horror-stricken, he recoiled from her. There was something repellent to him in her blind groping for his face, something in her hopeless despair gruesome and repulsive. Her love, its labor, her tender promises, still could not cancel the grim work fate had accomplished. And that moment he decided—decided to go away.

When he told her he was going West, that he would soon return to her, she clung to him as often we cling to a last lone hope. But he comforted her with deceit, soothed her with untruth, and went out of the house, putting her out of his life.

Out West in barroom, café and gay temple of revelry, in halls and haunts of spurious and wanton joy, he amused himself with the travesty and parody of love, nor did he hear the longing, lonesome sob, nor feel the throb of the girl's eager, yearning dreams. She was forgotten.

She asked for letters, for letters from him, and the mother, reluctant to impart the miserable truth, gave her sheets of paper as white as the lie they expressed. She pressed them to her lips, to her heart, and, beloved, he was believed.

Then they heard of a surgeon who was having wonderful success in restoring sight to the blind. * * * The operation was successful!

She opened her eyes and saw—saw the things of earth and their deception, saw the lie of her love and the mockery of its message—and again they sought the unknowing darkness and shut out the sights and sins of the world—a broken human heart gone to its refuge!

HUBBY DOES THE WASHING

Solax Release, February 21

household are cutting too great a dent in his bank account. "We must cut down expenses!" is his cry. He gets an idea that the best way to begin cutting expenses is by cutting down laundry bills. Wifey is indignant at such a preposterous suggestion, and retorts that perhaps hubby would like to undertake the washing himself.

Hubby doesn't at all think ill of the plan. In fact, hubby prepares to do the work. Hubby starts all right, but makes such a mess of things that by the time he gets through the laundry costs him about six times more than ordinarily.

Bill Quirk is the whole thing in this comedy. Irrepressible Billy brings a laugh with each foot of film.

GOD DISPOSES

Solax Release, February 23

In the Solax production of "God Disposes," the release of February 23d, the basic theme is the marriage of a young man of high social position who sacrifices his home and family for a girl of the stage. Cast off by his family, the young man finds that he is not qualified to earn his living. In the meanwhile his wife grows ill, a child is born, and several years after the man finds himself in narrow straits. So much, perhaps, has been told in other stories, but the novelty of the story begins with the steady degeneration of the youth, until he is finally forced to go out and steal. He prepares to go out and burglarize a place. His child enters when he leaves his revolver on the table. The child plays with it as with a toy and then innocently removes the bullets. The father comes back and takes the revolver and goes out.

Accidentally the son breaks into his own father's office. The father happens to be working late that night. The son breaks in and tries to shoot his own father. By the intervention of God the son is saved from a patricide.

The film is elaborately staged and the photography and light effects are superb. The scenes are gripping and the interest never drags. Every foot is live stuff.

TAMING MRS. SHREW

Rex Release, February 15

We don't know in what age and clime the nagging woman originated. We're not certain whether she is a product of modern times and tempers, of medieval or other evil days, or of the prehistoric age. But—ssh!—we really think there's a little of the shrew lying dormant in every woman, and that the first henpecked husband was a man named Adam, who gained fame from the notorious apple incident a few years ago, for which reason we call it "Adam's Apple," because we've got it in the neck. Eve didn't ask Adam whether he wanted the apple or not; she commanded him to eat, and he "swallowed" it. Then he knew he was married.

But let us leave the infant world and somersault ourselves into the present age. Time, the great scene-shifter, locomotes us to 1912. Mrs. and Mr. Hiram Stubbs are in the midst of one of their consistent embroglios. (Quarreling again? No—yet!) It's a serial story. Sort of constant, reader. Louise, the daughter, attempts to impersonate The Hague Tribunal, with the only result that the mother's verbal artillery is directed upon her.

A few days later the father leaves the home and a note for Louise, in which he says that he can no longer tolerate the tongue-lashings of the virulent virago.

We almost forgot to mention that Louise has a lover, a villager, to the manner born, a simple but sincere boy. Upon him is lavished all Mrs. Hiram's excess ire, and Louise suffers silently many a pain and pang.

The pastor of the vicarage, a good, kindly soul, tries to initate peace into the turbulent household, but his efforts are nil. It is to the pastor that the father writes, after several months, imparting to him his simultaneous longing to see his daughter and his fear to return home. The parson writes him to come to his home and volunteers shelter and protection. The invitation is accepted.

Upon Mr. Stubbs' arrival at the rectory the parson sends a note to Louise—an innocent little note with a guilty innuendo. "If you want to see one you love, meet him in my garden at eight." He dispatches the message with a village youth, who upon his way to deliver it meets a group of village gossips, to whom he announces the grave import of his mission. The gossips feel it their duty to read the note, and, horror-stricken, set about to give the shocking incident some publicity.

At eight that night the entire population of the village lies concealed behind whatever furnishes protection from vision. They see a man dressed in the parson's clothes come into the garden and embrace Louise. They see him hold her in his arms—and they can restrain themselves no longer. First to denounce the erring two is Mrs. Stubbs, but then—they see the real parson come down the steps into the garden, and they recognize the other as Hiram.

The Rex Company says circumstantial evidence and a squad of village gossips are a distressing amalgamation, but it emphasizes the tried truism that "Gossip never kills anybody."

BEDELIA AND THE SUFFRAGETTE

Reliance Release, February 28

Bedelia gets a position with the Suffragette family and finds to her astonishment that the men of the family do the housework, while the mistress goes to the office and earns the daily bread. She soon has the man of the house and his sons at her mercy, while the daughters endeavor to come to their rescue and are in turn treated to the hard hand of the law as laid down by the autocratic kitchen queen. Matters finally come to such a state of turmoil and battle that the lady of the house is 'phoned to at her office and she comes home as fast as possible. She finds a riot in progress, and jumping into the fray proves herself such a militant suffragette that Bedelia does not even stop to shut the door, and the now happy and contented family is left in undisturbed peace and quiet, watched by one of the protecting suffragettes.

On this reel are found, together with Bedelia and the suffragettes, a series of excellent scenic views of St. Augustine, Fla. St. Augustine is the oldest city on the continent and offers an exceptionally unique scenic opportunity for those who appreciate the city beautiful.

THE DUEL

Reliance Release, March 2

Jackson, a mountain moonshine distiller, and Douglas, a rising young country lawyer, are both in love with the same girl—June Ross. June loves Jackson the better, but Jackson is so bashful that he can never get to the point of telling her even when she helps. Douglas meets June just after Jackson leaves, and his love-making sweeps her off her feet. That, coupled with her momentary anger at Jackson for his backwardness, enables Douglas to win her consent. In the meantime Jackson has been wrestling with himself and has found the proper courage and returns. He finds Douglas there and that he has been superseded. June interferes with their further quarrel, but Jackson at his cabin broods over it, and, taking down his father's old duelling pistols, goes to Douglas' home. He confronts Douglas, and they cut for first shot. Douglas wins but misses, and Jackson, instead of taking his shot, gets Douglas to agree to let him take his shot anywhere and any time he may see fit. Douglas agrees and they part.

Douglas and June elope and Jackson hears no more of them until years later he sees the announcement that Douglas has been elected Governor and means to wipe out the moonshine industry. Jackson, believing that the proper time is at hand, takes his pistols again and seeks Douglas. June and her little baby girl have just left Douglas at work alone in the study as Jackson enters. Douglas, realizing what Jackson's presence means, takes his stand by the wall and tells Jackson to hasten. Jackson offers him another chance, and on the draw Douglas wins again. This time Douglas deliberately shoots above Jackson's head. June enters at the shot and is gently but firmly sent from the room. No one notices that the little girl has slipped in and is back on the chair. Douglas again takes his place, and as Jackson is about to shoot the little girl comes into the line of fire and Jackson realizes just what a crime he was about to commit. Gathering the child in his arms, he crushes her to him and then sends her out. Going over to Douglas, he places the pistols back in their case and stretches out his hand to his enemy. The feud is over, and he exits, leaving the Governor to his duty and family.

SYNOPSIS OF THE NIHILIST'S CONSPIRACY

By the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company

Count Leo Zachokin, a Russian nobleman, is in love with Sonja Adamovitch. Unknown to him she is a member of a band of Nihilists. Sonja sends for Leo to come to see her, but is herself summoned to attend a meeting of the band on the same night and dares not refuse. Leo finds the secret message to Sonja and suspects her, so he follows her to the meeting place. While groping about in the building he is startled by approaching steps and hides in the secret meeting room of the conspirators. They discover him and threaten him with death, but Sonja pleads for his life and saves him on condition that he secure in three days a list of condemned persons known to have been made by the secret police, and bring it to the meeting place. Leo consents and is permitted to go in safety.

On the evening of the third day Count Leo has not yet procured the list and is in despair. Sonja comes to see him and hits upon a plan to get the list. She is to apply to the Chief of the Secret Police for a position and obtain the list by some means. Together they go to police headquarters. Sonja goes into the Chief's office while Leo remains under the window outside. Sonja persuades the Chief to show her the list, upon which she is startled to find her own name. But she recovers quickly, and when the Chief is called to the door she tosses it out of the window to Leo, who quickly conceals it in his pocket.

Shortly afterward Sonja joins Leo, and they go to the meeting place of the Nihilists and deliver the list. In the meantime the Chief of Police has discovered the loss of the list and sends two detectives to arrest Sonja and recover the list. They succeed in following them to the Nihilists' meeting place. Learning of the approach of the police, the Nihilists escape through a trap in the roof. Leo and Sonja have managed to get to their automobile, but they have been seen and the detectives are put on the trail. A most exciting chase follows for miles through the city and country at top speed. Curves in the road are taken without slackening the awful pace; fences and gates are smashed through without hesitation in the mad race for liberty.

Finally the pursuers get so close that revolver shots are exchanged by pursuers and pursued.

At last the fugitives come to a turn they cannot make. They cannot stop, and in an instant they plunge over an embankment and the machine crashes in a complete wreck to the bottom with the occupants crushed amid the débris.

This remarkable picture, made in Denmark by the actors of the Royal Theatre, is the result of a careful study of Nihilists' methods. So truly does it depict the manner in which those daring men and women strike terror to the heart of the Czar, that it has been barred from exhibition in Russia.

It is marked by the skill of the actors and the beautiful photographic effects. It is seldom that 2,000 feet of film can be made to contain so many thrills or sustain interest to so high a pitch.

A Daring Chase—There is no chase in pictures so daring as that shown in the finish of this picture. Two high-powered automobiles race at breakneck speed over country roads, around sharp turns, without so much as slackening their wild pace. The Nihilists' machine smashes through a heavy gate, tearing it into a hundred pieces, while the car dashes on in its mad course.

JIMMIE SAVES THE SITUATION

Gaumont Release, March 5

Poverty-stricken Jimmie and his workwoman mother live in a tenement house. One morning little Jimmie, after washing his face and hands in a bowl, pours the water out of the window, only to have it unfortunately land on a passing policeman. The officer becomes indignant, hunts up the offender, and declares he will have them fined. He does so, and thereby makes it unbearable for the indigent mother and her little son, who haven't the money to meet this demand. Little Jimmie, however, gets an idea. He reads an ad in a daily paper placed by a jolly widow of comfortable circumstances looking for a husband with a good sense of humor. The boy-man dresses all up and applies for the right to her heart. She sees the comedy in the case at once and almost laughs herself into hysterics. She regrets that she must turn down his offer, but gives him the necessary money to meet the fine, which he pays just as the impatient collector is in the act of seizing the shabby furniture. Needless to state, both mother and the collectors, together with officers, are overcome with the lad's cunning.

HIS BROTHER WILLIE

Powers Release, February 20

Almost every family has its "black sheep." Willie is of this variety and his sole ambition in life seems to be that of turning up at the most inopportune moments and shocking the refined sensibilities of his well-behaved brother and other members of his highly respectable family.

All unconsciously, he successively impersonates the returned prodigal—but for whom no fatted calf is served up—the village drunkard, a street ruffian and a desperate burglar, causing his brother's fiancée to almost die of heart failure. Poor, harmless Willie.

AS FATE WOULD HAVE IT
Powers Release, February 24

The fact that we are but the creatures of fate is powerfully illustrated in this story, which is also a story of strange coincidences. Calvin Deane is a struggling young physician in a small town. Without realizing it, he has fallen in love with Mary Roberts, whose mother is one of his patients. The arrival of Deane's college friend Richard Sharpe, a wealthy business man, opens the eyes of the former to his love for Mary and a friendly rivalry springs up between the two men, which is terminated by Deane's learning of Mary's preference for Sharpe.

After a lapse of years, Dr. Deane, living only in the past and devoid of ambition, decides to die by his own hand and is on the point of drinking a deadly poison that will leave no trace of its presence after death. Then it is that Sharpe, who has become a confirmed invalid, arrives at the doctor's office accompanied by his wife, Mary, and interrupts the would-be suicide. After greeting each other, Sharpe, pretending that he has sought the doctor in search of a cure for his malady, asks Mary to leave the room. He then asks Dr. Deane for just such a poison as the doctor had prepared for himself and offers him a large sum of money in payment. Upon Deane's refusal, he shows him that his death would leave Mary free to marry again. Deane pretending consent, accepts the money and gives Sharpe a quick acting, but harmless narcotic, and dismisses him. Later on, after Sharpe's recovery from the effects of the drug, Deane proves the purity of his love for Mary and the strength of his friendship for Sharpe, by returning the money and beginning treatment for the permanent cure of the invalid.

THE MERCHANT MAYOR OF INDIANAPOLIS
Champion Release, February 19

This is a story of present conditions, dealing with the cost of living, and which question is of vital importance to us all. It reflects the situation in Indianapolis where the Mayor took drastic measures to overcome the powers that controlled the cost of living. First we see the home of a workingman, into which enter the wife and daughter of the Mayor for the purpose of studying conditions, and this they find with a vengeance. The big produce and poultry interests are upholding the high cost of their stock, thus placing them beyond the reach of the workingman, who, at the approach of Thanksgiving finds but a meagre fare on the table.

The Mayor summons before him this august body of grafters and asks them as a favor to lower the prices for the benefit of the people. They laugh him to scorn, for "they are in business for the profits they may make and not for their health." "Then, gentlemen," cries the Mayor, "by Heaven, I shall make you! Your conduct is iniquitous and your combination is unholy and devilish!" Then his Honor gets into action. He buys up product and poultry on all sides. Then he goes into the market place and sells these commodities at a small percentage above cost. The result is disastrous to the "combine" —prices tumble and the people are happy.

The market scene is one of the finest projections of an affair of this character ever staged. A motley crowd of bargain buyers, poor and rich, jostle one another, in wild endeavors to secure at first cost the poultry and produce; and there in the midst of the pushing, hustling crowd, stands the Mayor—the Mayor of the people. Thus comes about the happy termination to this pictureplay.

A real Thanksgiving dinner for the workingman and his family—a stirringly, contrasted scene, indeed, to that with which we are made intimate in the opening of the story. It is a visualization of present conditions—a real living issue that is with us, and its hero is no figment of the imagination but a real factor in the guidance of the people.

A WIFE'S DISCOVERY
Champion Release, February 21

Dr. Fred Marlin is a member of the New Club formed by the medical fraternity for social purposes, and incidentally to give amateur theatricals. A meeting is held, and the young doctor, while not present, is selected to play Jasper Millionaire, the lover hero.

It's Awful

the way some exhibitors let their business go to ruin through lack of attention. If they'd only hook up with the biggest and best film renter in the world they'd HAVE to be successful whether they cared or not! Slip me a note or a wire. Start something!

in a farce-comedy. A note to this effect is sent to him by his friend, Jesse Heming, a fellow member, who is to play the part of Inez, the adventuress, the sweetheart of Millionpile. Dr. Marlin writes a letter of acceptance, but before he has time to enclose it in the envelope he is summoned away.

His housekeeper, being previously reprimanded for apparent negligence, now discovers the letter and places it in the hands of the doctor's wife. The letter says: "Dear Jess: Your note received. Will meet you tomorrow night at the rooms. Sincerely, Fred." The wife becomes furiously jealous and determines to keep watch on her frivolous husband. Armed with a horsewhip she follows him, and with the assistance of a club member, contrives to gain access to the club room where the dress rehearsal is taking place.

She arrives just at the time her husband is making soulful protestations of love to Inez, the adventuress, and she conceals herself behind the portieres to await further developments. At length, unable to restrain her feelings, she bursts forth and plies the whip upon her husband and "the destroyer of her home." In the mix-up she seizes Inez by the hair, and to her utter astonishment finds the wig in her hands and looks up into the sweet countenance of a mere man.

Ashamed of her foolish suspicions, she begs pardon of her husband and promises never again to fall a victim to the green-eyed moster—Jealousy. A scrumbunctious comedy!

NEW FEATURE FILM COMPANY, CHICAGO

The Deeanell Feature Film Service has opened an exchange in the Marquette Building, 10 South Dearborn street, Chicago, for the sole purpose of renting "Up-to-the-Minute" feature films, and to dispose of State Rights of their new 2,000-feet feature film "Rescued from the Indians."

The above named company has exclusive control of the following territory: Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin and Iowa, the other states being on the market for sale.

Mr. Arthur P. Desormeau, secretary and treasurer, of the above concern, well known in Chicago film circles, and an all-around exchange man, states that they are already receiving numerous inquiries regarding their features.

ARE YOU A LIVE WIRE?

A good live exhibitor readily realizes the necessity of good advertising and is prompt to take advantage of something that will increase his receipts. A great many exhibitors are afraid to make any changes in their business for fear it will interfere with some old fogy notion, pertaining to that particular thing, which has been handed down through ages and is a part of ancient history.

The F. and E. Film Co.,
Cleveland, Ohio,
Gentlemen:

A line to let you know how I have been doing with "ZIGOMAR" in the state of Pennsylvania. Opened up at New Castle--contracted 3 days at 40 %, doing in receipts in first 3 days $350 business. They took a return date on 4th day, December 21. Opened in Pittsburg at Palm Garden Dec. 25, straight rental $30 per day. I got there after 9 p.m. and could not get in the place. "ZIGOMAR" was a rage there. The manager, Mr Bernardi, took a return date for January 5: Minerva theatre, Pittsburg, plays it December 27 and 28, making four days total for them. Have had ministers, newspaper men and etc. indorse picture. Never since in my 5 years in M. P. have I had so many remarks on a film. Manager Allen, Jeanette, Pa. house, indorses it as the best picture he ran in his theatre for last 6 years.

Wishing you a Happy New Year,
Yours,

THE MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING AND SALES COMPANY WINS IMPORTANT LEGAL DECISION

Judge Hand, of the United States District Court of the Southern District of New York, has just decided an important patent suit, brought by the Motion Picture Patents Company, known as the Trust, against the Independent Moving Pictures Company of America, for alleged infringement of the Latham Patent No. 707934. The Latham Patent No. 707934 claimed the continuous feed by means of sprocket and perforated film, also the loop or slack portion of film which supplies the intermittent feed.

Judge Hand decided in favor of the Independent Moving Pictures Company by dismissing the Bill of Complaint on the ground of NON-INFRINGEMENT, WITH COSTS.

TUESDAY and SUNDAY

¶ Owing to the majority of exchanges thinking our last Friday release would be Feb. 16th and their discontinuing Friday after that date and substituting Tuesday release, commencing Feb. 27th, we have cancelled completely our Friday release of Feb. 23rd, the last Friday release appearing Feb. 16th. Sales Company approved action.

¶ Our change of release day from Friday to Tuesday has been sanctioned by the Exchanges and Exhibitors all over the country, and we are pleased that it met with such universal approval.

TWO HIGH CLASS PICTURES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16th, "HIS STEP-MOTHER"—a powerful sex problem story wherein arises a situation that only the most finished and delicate handling can bring to a satisfactory result. This story has vitality of plot that will grip the attention and hold in suspense until its last moment, when the sun breaks through the clouds.

Sunday, February 18th, "PETTICOAT PERFIDY"—a comedy which we advise you to advertise as a prescription for the blues—an admittedly farcical comedy that without offending sense of probability and reason is one continuous laugh, as is followed the uneven but upward career of a lover who fights his way through a maze of petticoats, to his sweetheart's side.

Announced at its beginning that it solicited criticism, whether favorable or otherwise, from all Exhibitors and Exchanges. In all this time we have had but two unfavorable comments—one from the Exhibitors and one from the Exchanges.

THE EXHIBITORS DO NOT LIKE OUR POSTERS—so heeding their request for something better and more valuable to them, we have arranged with our lithographer to provide us (commencing with our early March release) with HIGH CLASS ARTISTIC POSTERS!

THE EXCHANGES HAVE COMPLAINED OF THE FULL THOUSAND FOOT LENGTH FILM—so we will have to satisfy them—therefore commencing early in March. we shall endeavor to keep each picture within 950 feet, thus enabling the Exchange to buy the picture, posters, pay his express and return charges on collections, for the conventional one hundred dollars—consequently SHORTER LENGTH FILM!

We admit that the two criticisms are just and timely, and we very willingly co-operate with both Exhibitor and Exchange, at the same time emphasizing our appreciation of the fact that neither one has, as yet, expressed unfavorable criticism of our pictures—and therefore

STILL BETTER PICTURES!

SUNDAY, Feb. 25th, "BOUGHT"—a drama that links the East and the West by a girl—it starts in the atmosphere of a cheap Western gambling place and ends in a New Years Eve revel in a magnificent New York Cafe, and shows how terribly alike are the conditions in each and out of each is plucked a flower to be worn upon a manly heart.

TUESDAY, Feb. 27th,"STRIP POKER"—a roaring comedy and decided novelty—four old college chums meet after many years and play the favorite old college game of strip poker—"I'll see that bet of a hat and raise you a necktie" and so on—the situations and surprises will please everybody.

MARCH 3rd, "DOES YOUR WIFE LOVE YOU?"—comedy.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

ON other pages of the News this week, will be found a series of letters emanating from national headquarters of the League. We want to make a very special appeal to all the exhibitors throughout the country that they associate themselves with Local or State organizations, and then become identified with the National. We have always contended that patent quarrelings and quibblings should not interfere with the film. The exhibitors desire to please their patrons. An entire open field should be allowed to them, so that they might select the best there is in the market for exhibition. The exhibitors are the mediums to reach the people who patronize their theaters. It has been great pleasure to us to note the general tendency only to exhibit the best there is to be obtained, from whatever source they may obtain the pictures. This source to some extent is limited, and as such, should not be so. The exhibitors have in their hands the "club," (if we may use the term "club,") wherewith they may knock sense into the manufacturers who are so busy turning out films which are objectionable and obnoxious to the majority of enterprising exhibitors, and we do not blame them for one moment rejecting film that they consider entirely unsuitable for their purposes. It is for the exhibitors to demand the subjects they want, and not have thrust upon them, those films they do not want. We had an instance the other day brought to our notice where an exchangeman told an exhibitor that he could either have what he had to give him, or go and get a grilling. The exhibitor looked at the man, put down his film, walked out of the exchange and immediately tied up with a competitor where he is now receiving a fair amount of service for his requirements. It seems to us to be an altogether undesirable menace to the good of the industry, when manufacturers who own exchanges should try to coerce the exhibitors into having film manufactured by their company or none at all, thus proving a detriment to better manufacturers in the business. The exhibitors have in their hands the power to do away with these anachronisms which unjustly hamper themselves, and also the exchanges who have not the good fortune to be manufacturers. It therefore behooves every exhibitor to become allied with the National League which is growing very rapidly. The League's Secretaries throughout the country send in information which makes us feel that they are now in a commanding position. The League is fully incorporated and is under a sound business basis. It is no longer an experiment, but an actual fact, and we believe that it will live as long as motion photography exists. The members of League are now able to take full care of themselves in any place where they are organized, and will be able to protect the interests of members in the smallest villages as well as the largest cities. The League should be able to work in unison with the various censorship boards, until they are in a position to form a censorship board among themselves. We feel that this latter would be far more preferable than the censorship boards at present in existence. It was due to the New York exhibitors that the New York Censorship Board was formed, and if the national organization could select a certain body of men who would be above prejudice—above graft—above everything except the uplift of the industry—the films used by the exhibitors would be the cleanest it is possible to obtain.

We fully believe the time is rapidly approaching when the best interests of the industry will be taken care of by putting on subjects that appeal to all classes, and travesty the religion of none. Murders, hold-ups, killings of every description it seems must be eliminated, but, regarding the films that are being manufactured on the early days of the settlers we must admit is a problem we cannot solve, because, in the early days killing and guerrilla warfare between the Indians and the whites were the rule, and in nine cases out of every ten, it was the white outlaws who were in the wrong. However, all this is a matter of history, and if battle scenes, early settlement scenes, etc., are to be depicted, it is impossible to do without killing of some sort, and it is with this object in view that the censor boards must judge. We receive each week copies of the reports from Chicago, and New York we have been unable to obtain. We get desultory returns from other censors, each showing the list of films examined, licenses made out for exhibition, the number of feet of the subjects rejected, and while it may be to the best interest of the exhibitor if we publish this matter, it is not to the interest of the firms who are turning out these subjects. These are not alone objectionable; the photography is exceedingly bad, and we have no desire to injure them by criticizing as we might. Their sales are so small,

(if the reports we get from the exchanges are to be relied upon) they will die a natural death without any hard knocks from us.

On the question of historical subjects, our readers will recollect we took issue with the Chicago Censor Board, and in reply to that received a very interesting letter from the Secretary of the Board who well upholds his contention for the elimination of certain scenes. We quote from his letter, and if it is possible to show historical subjects without the brutality and the killing we feel sure that very few films would need the censors' scissors. The following will speak for itself:

,Alfred H. Saunders, Editor Moving Picture News, 30 West 13th Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have just received a copy of your issue of January 2th and was very pleased with your comments on the censoring of films in this city. I did not expect you would entirely condemn our New York neighbor and allow me to go scot free. It would not be diplomatic or neighborly, but for argument sake I will take issue with you on the elimination of the killing of Julius Cæsar; that we were justified in cutting it out.

The historical argument has no weight with us. It was just as much of a crime to assassinate Julius Cæsar as it was to assassinate President McKinley, Garfield or Lincoln. Produce a picture which depicts the assassination of our Presidents and how many of the public will tolerate it? Not many, except our anarchist neighbors. It may be staged in dramatic form which is not harmful, as I look at it, as the percentage of attendance at these theaters are mainly adults while that at a five and ten cent theater is estimated to be seventy-five per cent minors, some weak-minded and criminally inclined. Therefore, I claim it would be a very bad moral to show how this act was committed. You can teach a child the history of these crimes but putting the object in moving picture form before him he will never forget it, and if he is criminally inclined it is dangerous to teach him how the act was perpetrated. The killing of Julius Cæsar in the film showed premeditation and brutality and that in itself was sufficient reason to condemn it.

I also enclose our weekly report. My object in sending you the weekly reports is to publish the films that were condemned and why they were; also the cut-outs and what they showed. By publishing them the exhibitors in Chicago will be informed in advance of the character of the film and will not handle the condemned one, and will also see that the cut-outs are made.

Hoping to hear from you in the near future, I remain

Yours very sincerely,
JEREMIAH W. O'CONNOR.
In Charge of the Censor Bureau.

We may say in addition to our former remarks that if the exhibitors will express their opinion upon the feasibility of our publishing these weekly reports it will give us great pleasure so to do, that they may work in unison with the censors, and other cities follow in due form.

EDUCATIONAL AND TMEPERANCE FILM

AN interesting series of letters which we take from The Band of Hope Review, London, shows very strongly the trend of the educationalists and temperance people in England. The same holds good in America. We have been asked by the temperance workers to impress upon the manufacturers the value of good temperance subjects. By this we do not mean the depicting so much of the lower elements of drunkenness, but the difference betwen the disease of drunkenness, and its recovery by the adoption of temperance. We have always contended that a drunkard and a smoker ought to be subjected to treatment by a medical gentleman. As the disease is so very strong upon them they are absolutely helpless to throw it off themeslves, and if our younger generation could be shown the evils of these disgusting and degrading habits a brighter era would dawn for the children of the world. It would not be a bad plan if some of the temperance workers could get together and make suggestions to the various manufacturers of subjects suitable to them, assuring the manufacturers of their support if these films are produced, and if the humorous as well as the pathetic side could be filmed it would be very advantageous. One picture we recollect some while ago seeing exhibited in one of the publishing house windows in England was one showing "Beer Blocks the Way." It was the picture of a brewer's drayman letting a barrel of liquor into a cellar and on the other side of the rope waiting for this obstacle to be taken away, were such well known characters as Sir Wilfred Lawson, the Bishop of London, Joseph Malins, and many other leading temperance men. So we find it to-day, every form of progress is blocked by the drunken habits of the devotees of Bacchus, and if good temperance films with clear honest teaching could be produced it would pay the manufacturers, as well as the temperance workers to exploit their production.

TEMPERANCE FILMS

59-60 Old Bailey, London, E. C.

Editor Moving Picture News:

Dear Sir—I send by book-post the January and February issues of our "Band of Hope Chronicle," containing references to Temperance films. In a recent issue of your excellent Moving Picture News you stated that the Eclair Company were producing a film entitled "Alcohol, the Poison of Humanity." I have watched for subsequent reference to this but have not yet seen any.

As we are anxious to promote the use of Temperance films, we shall be glad to know when the new one will be on the market. Perhaps you can give the information in your next issue.

Yours faithfully,
JUDSON BONNER.

Temperance Films Wanted

Dear Sir—In view of the great popularity of the cinematograph shows up and down the country, I wish something could be done in the way of introducing stories with a temperance moral. It would be a splendid thing if we could get a temperance story introduced now and again.

As you are at the hub of the universe, perhaps you could pull the strings in the direction named.

It has occurred to me that if Temperance films were in existence it might be possible to arrange with the picture shows to give a Band of Hope or Temperance Evening occasionally, which the local unions would gladly advertise, and thus secure crowded audiences for them.

Trusting you may be able to take up the suggestion, and with kind regards, believe me,

Yours very truly,
Goodall street, Walsall. JOSEPH A. LECKIE.

Sir—As a counter-attraction to the public house the cinematograph is proving a most valuable ally to the temperance cause. A brewer was recently heard to say that the picture theater had hit him harder than the Budget. In addition we get temperance teaching through such films as Zola's "The Drink," "Ten Nights in a Barroom," and "In the Grip of Alcohol." But as these vividly depict the terrible results of drinking, they are not suitable for children.

The Bedfordshire Band of Hope Union has now had two years' experience of the cinematograph as a direct temperance teacher in the small towns and villages of the country. It attracts much larger audiences than the lantern, and can be made to pay expenses. Films of harvesting in Canada, Burgess' swim, the first Teetotal Lord Mayor's procession, scenes at Bisley, Swiss mountaineering, and a host of other pictures offer ample opportunities for the insertion of scientific and other facts, and, surely facts put in this way take a firmer hold on the hearers' consciousness because they are associated with real life rather than the far-fetched, improbable, and sometimes sickly tales often woven round lantern "lecture sets."

Non-inflammable film can be obtained, and after the local authorities have been satisfied as to the capability of the operator and the reliability of his apparatus and films, any building suitable for an ordinary lantern show can be used.

For less than £100 the parent union could provide a few fine films illustrating juvenile temperance work, which might be loaned to places where they could be shown.

Several unions are thinking of running the cinematograph, and I hope others will follow suit. Why should we be content with the old-fashioned apparatus and second-rate entertainment?

Yours truly,

Bedford, December 14, 1911. WILLIAM MACHIN.

To the Editor of The Band of Hope Chronicle:

Dear Sir—I read with interest the two letters in your last issue, and, whilst demurring to Mr. Machin's slighting references to the lantern, I agree that good might be done by means of films appealing from the abstinence standpoint.

I much question, however, the practicability of the suggestion that the Band of Hope Union should invest £100 in producing such films, and "loaning" them out—whatever that may mean. The amount named would not go far, if we may judge by the immense cost of popular films.

If used by unions only, the effect would be very limited. Nearly all the cinematograph work is done by the regular picture palaces, and these hire their films from the recognized trade houses.

To do any good, temperance subjects need to be introduced in the ordinary programs. This will be done just as soon as there is a demand for them.

My suggestion is that abstainers who patronize picture theaters should make a point of asking the managers to show some temperance films. A demand would thus be created, and the producing houses would soon see it supplied. They are anxious to secure good subjects, and to meet the wishes of their clients, but are not likely to pay much attention to appeals from the union. £ s. d. is their chief guide. LANTERN ENTHUSIAST.

[We quite endorse the suggestion our friend makes. Three Temperance films were mentioned last month as being in use, viz., "In the Grip of Alcohol," "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," and "Drink." Another is announced by the Eclair Company, entitled "Alcohol, the Poison of Humanity," which is dedicated to the Women's Christian Temperance Union; it is said to be a wonderful production, carrying a strong plot, beautifully told; shown in upwards of forty scenes, with much novelty in setting and effects. If friends make a point of asking for these, it will encourage the managers to hire them, and if they prove popular—and therefore profitable—there is no doubt others will be put on the market.—Editor.]

[We publish this full correspondence for the benefit of the trade in America, and also for the temperance folk on this side, so that they may see what demands for educational temperance subjects are in existence in England. We have always contended that if good Temperance films were produced there would be a ready sale for both in America and abroad. The Eclair film, "Alcohol," will be released on March 10. Eclair please write Mr. Bonner more fully.—Editor M. P. N.]

C. B. HOADLEY

Our readers will be pleased to learn that C. B. Hoadley, who is so well known in many Imp subjects, of which he was the author of scenarios, and whose scenario writing for the prize issued by the Imp brought him the $50 prize, is now with the Champion Film Company. We congratulate Champion upon securing his services and if he makes the success with his stories and subjects that he made for the Imp the Champion will benefit thereby. Not only will Mr. Hoadley write stories for Champion products in future, but will also select the scripts and scenarios sent in by other writers.

IS FOX INDEPENDENT?

The above question has been asked us a hundred times if it has been asked us once. Our reply to this is that Fox is not Independent. There is no necessity for him to be Independent at present. He stands in the position that we have told every exchangeman he could be in, if he chose to fight for his freedom, but none except Fox had the courage to do so. We are quite well aware that it was a foolish agreement to sign. We pointed that out weeks before all the exhibitors signed it, but as one exchangeman remarked to us. "If I don't sign how can I live?" Of course, that was the trouble, but if the exchangemen had been one unit and refused the intimidative tactics adopted towards them, they would have been in possession of their own business to-day instead of being employees.

Coming back to our subject, the Greater New York Film Exchange while having the injunction decided against them, took an appeal, and in the meantime pending this appeal, which will take perhaps seven or eight months before it is reached, they must be supplied with all the releases of the licensed manufacturers. We understand that it may be practically eighteen months or two years before the case is finally settled, so that as we say Fox has no need at present to join the Independent ranks.

THE ANIMATED BATHTUB (SOLAX)

In Which Billy Quirk Gets an Unexpected Bath

Sometimes, while a producer is putting on a picture, many ludicrous incidents happen that are not called for in the scenario. When Madame Blache produced "The Animated Bathtub," the Billy Quirk comedy release of March 8th, Billy Quirk got an unexpected bath. He is an eccentric inventor who muddles up his existence with thoughts of an automatic arrangement which could send a bathtub to any part of a house. Billy writes to his corpulent uncle and skeptical friends to come and view the marvel of his creation.

The uncle comes and is invited by his inventive nephew to take a bath in the marvelous tub. The uncle consents, after considerable coaxing. When the switch is turned on the bathtub assumes life and becomes fractiously active. The uncle loses his control, and before he knows it he is carried to every part of the house, breaking furniture and scaring visitors out of their wits. Billy makes a frantic effort to help his unwary uncle, and in his attempt he lands headlong, with clothes on and all, into the bathtub full of water.

This was not a part of the scenario, but it looked so funny and raised such a scream in the studio that it was decided not cut it from the picture. Billy cut quite a figure when he came out of the tub. His usual smile was gone, however, and he looked "down in the mouth." Asked what the trouble was, he said, "Well, I haven't another suit here, and I haven't any underclothes to replace the wet ones. I'll get even with Beggs for pulling me into the tub. You just wait." Madame Blache took pity on Billy and sent her chauffeur home to make a raid on her husband's wardrobe Mr. Blache is still wondering what happened to his fine pale-blue silk union suit.

As for Beggs! Lee Beggs got his, too. All that day he remained in a bathing suit. He estimated he took forty dips into the animated tub. He says he took enough baths to last him for forty weeks. Beggs used a gallon of alcohol for rub-downs to keep warm on the outside and two flasks of fine Old Crow to warm up his insides. All in all, he had a fine time.

Nearly every one in the company got an unexpected drenching that day. "The Animated Bathtub" is the liveliest of farce comedies released in months. Its trick photography is startling and amusing. It will create a good deal of comment.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

The Scenario Writers in England

By Leonard Donaldson

WITHIN the last few months there has been a noticeably larger demand on the part of the public in England for home-made pictures, that is, films dealing with dramatic episodes set in "more or less familiar atmosphere with plenty of local color." The number of actors and actresses employed in English studios, and amid Scottish and Irish scenes to enact the dramas transferred to the cinematograph screen, is increasing day by day.

Scores of ambitious amateurs are devoting their energies to scenario writing, and tumbling into the new profession at such a pace that other new professions of a closely allied but subsidiary character have also sprung into being. There is the picture-play agent, who, after the manner of the literary agent, offers—for a "trifling consideration," of course—to read your Mss., correct it if necessary, and place it with film producers to "your best advantage"—and incidentally to his also. Then again there is the individual who, on similar terms, offers to tell you "how it's done" and how to do it, and so on ad infinitum.

This demand opens a vista of hope for "the great unacted," and if, as the poet says, "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," then the amateur plot-weaver, with a gift for scenario writing, must be veritably an animated fountain, gurgling gallons of hope, for he has been newly inspired by the vast possibilities of the picture-play.

The manager of one of London's largest picture theatres said recently: "There is no doubt that the public who comes here—men, women and children—have been surfeited with red Indians, cowboys, the adventures of scouts, domestic jars, police chases, traction engine tragedies and similar things. We recently found that the 'home-made' Delhi Durbar pictures, with a deftly told story, created a record for attendances on most circuits. We have also discovered that women, and men also, like the 'film illustrated' short story and novelette. It is no tax on eyesight and it can be vividly illustrated by moving characters.

There is a great future for authors who can give us original plots, and we are prepared to pay anything from 10s. to £10 for them. We rarely want more than 750 words, and would rather have 500. Incident is wanted, but description and conversation are not so much required. The new craze for 'home-made' films has had one very good effect, as it has found employment for many of our actors and actresses. It is easy for an actress who is in employment to attend rehearsal in the morning and call at the film maker's during an afternoon walk! For the ambitious amateur I see no better prospect than picture-plot invention, and the pay is certainly much better than accrues from ordinary fiction. In my opinion this year will see a marvelous development in this direction."

Yes, there undoubtedly will be "marvelous developments," but I cannot believe that the de'lma' care cowboy and his d'affaires des coeur, Western stories with Western settings, and the myriad charms which emanate from your country, cousin American, are to pass from us, and no longer find a place in our programs.

FRENCH-AMERICAN FILM CO.

Sarah Bernhardt and Madame Rejane, the two glories of the French stage whose art has delighted theatregoers in every country of the world, have found immortality in the motion picture. Bernhardt has played "Camille," her greatest dramatic success, before the motion picture camera, and Rejane has produced "Sans-Gene," her greatest comedy creation. Both artistes are now recorded on the film in their greatest rôles and the French-American Film Company which controls these great reels announces that they will be released on February 18th. State rights are now on sale and the interest in the "Camille" and "Sans-Gene" picture plays is proven by the flood of inquiries pouring into the offices of the French-American Film Company in the Times Building. These reels are the sensation of the motion picture world and will undoubtedly prove the greatest box-office attraction that the camera has yet produced.

Bernhardt was paid $30,000 for her performance, while Rejane was paid nearly as large a sum.

Bernhardt hesitated a long time before playing for motion pictures. It was the one region of the theatre that she has never explored, but after watching many picture exhibitions and visiting motion picture studios she accepted the commission with enthusiasm; and organizing her powerful original company for "Camille" played the Dumas classic with all the fire and genius for which she is unique. "Camille," with its tense, sharply cut situations and its familiar story, is ideal for the camera and the result is a play of two reels of 2,275 feet, every foot of which is gripping in interest. Bernhardt is the perfect mistress of gesture, pose and expression and the pictures make the story thrillingly plain.

Rejane followed the example of Bernhardt and calling together members of the celebrated original company she played "Sans-Gene," that sparkling intensely dramatic comedy of the Napoleonic era. Rejane entered into the play with the spirit of a school girl. Among Parisian favorites she is the most celebrated for the free play of the body as a medium of expression and the story unfolds on the reels with sharp emphasis and unmistakable distinction. "Sans-Gene" makes three reels of 3,050 feet.

Both stars were immensely pleased with the pictures when they watched them in the studio and each expressed a wish to present more of their masterpieces for the motion picture camera.

State rights of these remarkable reels are now on sale by the Franco-American Film Company in the Times Building and from present indications it will be only a short time before the rights of every state in the union have been disposed of. Many managers of legitimate playhouses have declared that while they would not present the every day motion picture that they would gladly put on Bernhardt and Rejane. In all these reels consume two hours and a half for presentation and give an entertainment of magical attractiveness.

CANADIAN RIGHTS FOR BERNHARDT FILMS SOLD TO F. G. SPENCER, OF ST. JOHN, N. B., FOR $20,000

Some idea of the far-spread interest in the Bernhardt-Rejane films may be gathered from the fact that the French-American Film Company has already sold the Canadian rights to F. G. Spencer, of St. John, N. B., for $20,000. Mr. Spencer, who has the reputation of being one of the most enterprising men in Canadian amusement affairs, at once saw the immense possibilities of the opportunity these reels presented of showing the world's greatest actress to cities and towns which under no other circumstances could possibly have this privilege, and instead of writing and wiring as did many unsuccessful competitors for the greatest prize in the history of the moving picture business he took the first train for New York and closed the Canadian deal at ten o'clock Monday morning. Mr. Spencer's territory is an immense one and as it will be impossible for him to exploit the pictures in all Canada he has expressed willingness to sell several states or provinces, and interested parties would be wise in wiring or writing Mr. Spencer at St. John immediately. Mr. Spencer says that it is his intention to tour the pictures in exactly the same manner as he would Bernhardt herself, and he expects that every first-class theatre will be glad to secure such a money maker.

The prices will, of course, be much lower than the attraction which is being reproduced, but higher than ever before charged for motion pictures, a fact which the enormous expense and drawing capacity of the films fully justify.

MILDRED HOLLAND, THE WOMAN

By Margaret I. MacDonald

True art is never ostentatious. Simplicity, with but few exceptions, is the keynote of the life and work of the true artist. Now and again we meet with an erratic individual in the artistic world, who, endowed with less patience than many others, merely "kicks against the pricks" of this matter-of-fact world.

Art is the manifestation through the channel of humanity, of that which is beautiful in nature. The artist of color and form paints not only what he sees in nature, but also his conception of the abstract in nature. The tone artist produces in sound just as vivid representations of landscape and emotion as does his brother the painter. The dramatist goes both of these just one better, producing equally startling effects, combining motion and gesture with tone to produce these effects, against a background of color. The painter may raise an objection here inasmuch as he is not infrequently called upon to enhance the effect produced by the dramatist or even the musician; but let there be no ill feeling for do not these three along with the immortal poet form an unbroken chain of never-ending beauty?

Not long ago Mildred Holland, the well loved American actress, to see and hear whom thousands have flocked in eager anticipation, consented to pose for moving pictures for the Powers Company. The infant art in its wonder of detail held her spell-bound. "Oh, it is so fascinating!" she cried, as I questioned her on the subject. It was in a sort of a hap-hazard manner that I was thrown with the clever actress. I was visiting the Powers studio, when one of the firm said to me, "Wouldn't you like to meet Miss Holland?" "Indeed I would," was my eager reply. On looking about the dressing rooms we found that the bird had flown, for a short time at least, and I was just ringing up the elevator when I heard a voice asking in a clear, gentle tone, "Were you looking for me, Mr. Evans?" I eyed the little woman in the sealskin coat and heavy fur hat, evidently the owner of the voice, and in a moment more I was shaking hands with Mildred Holland, and asking for permission of a few words with her.

In one of the offices, "far from the madding crowd" of the studio, we chatted away as though we had known each other always. Miss Holland impresses you first with the great significant fact that she is a woman—not just a bit of frivolous humanity without a name. She has no kinship to the parasite—she is a woman. The woman looks out of her eyes; the woman speaks through her voice; the atmosphere that she breathes is permeated with the pure, clean influence of woman. Apart from her art this is the highest tribute that any one woman could pay another. Is it not?

Says Miss Holland, "One of the great and important things of this life is attention given to detail. In the moving picture there will always be something wrong until the director realizes that the smallest detail must be looked after."

"I have heard people remark," continued Miss Holland, "that they had been to see a certain picture—it was so pretty, but there was something wrong about it—they did not exactly enjoy it as they should. That something which marred the whole was just a matter of some detail which had been neglected."

"Haven't you often gone to the theater," said she, "when you just sat in your seat and felt like hugging yourself? Or like a cat that had for once been stroked the right way? After all it was just that every little detail in the play had been paid careful attention to."

"It is sometimes very difficult to get the best actors or actresses to pose satisfactorily for moving pictures. The reason is this: In the picture every motion of the body must be a graceful motion, or at least have in it the significance of the emotion or condition intended to be portrayed, while on the legitimate stage very often an actor will rely on tone in place of action, thus deceiving the audience, and covering up a defect in one channel by a brilliant display of splendid quality in another."

A great deal of truth rang out in the following words of Miss Holland. "You can always tell whether or not a man is bluffing by talking detail to him. If he is not thoroughly conversant with his subject and you commence talking detail to him he will stop talking immediately, or then change the subject."

Another reason given by Miss Holland for the difficulty of changing work from the legitimate stage to the moving picture stage, was that on the ordinary stage you are working in a V with the wide part to the front—from a narrow background to a wider foreground—while on the moving picture stage exactly the reverse takes place, you are working from a wide background to narrow foreground, and furthermore, the farther front you come the more of the figure is cut away in the picture, until when at the extreme front only half of the figure shows.

Miss Holland is a woman who has paid a great deal of attention to detail. I never attempt to play a part in a drama until I have first gone to the native country of the character and studied the lives and habits of the people.

It is a splendid thing to be a fine actress, to have the power of bringing audiences in tears or laughter to your feet. It is a great thing to be a woman—a real woman with true womanly instincts, but greater than either is the combination of both, with no single attribute lost on either side, but each adding brilliancy to the other.

HEINZ REPRESENTATIVE VISITS AMERICAN FILMS MFG. CO.

The H. J. Heinz Co., "57 Varieties," are in the market for motion picture film for advertising purposes. It is said that the big food house expects to use about 25,000 feet of film during the present year for the exploitation of the many "varieties."

Realizing the size of their undertaking and the chances of wasting a considerable amount of money in poor negative, Colver Gordon, of the advertising department, was sent on a tour of inspection throughout motion-picture houses all over America.

Mr. Gordon was a guest of The American Film Mfg. Co., one day last week, while in Chicago, and was the guest of that company on a tour of inspection through the new factory.

Mr. Gordon expressed himself as much delighted with what he had seen of the motion-picture business in various cities and was loud in his praise of the American's new factory. He was taken through the entire establishment and shown the many interesting processes through which the American's product passes until it is turned out a completed product.

GAUMONT COMPANY GOING AHEAD

The combined efforts of the French Gaumont Company and those of the American Gaumont plant at Flushing, L. I. ,are to be reflected in the Gaumont Weekly, which appears for the first time February 22d. The foreign films are to be rushed here on the first steamer following the completion of the negatives, and in many instances, it is stated, will be the first pictures of such happenings to be shown on these shores. North America will be covered bya corps of expert operators and it is promised no event of pictorial interest will be overlooked. Variety of subjects will mark the Weekly, but each topic will be treated at such length that a comprehensive idea of its import may be gained. While it is the intention of its sponsors to devote the Gaumont Weekly to current news pictures, it is promised that the films will, at the same time, possess permanent value. It is proposed to treat only such subjects as are looming largest in the public eye, and which possess more than mere passing interest. The difficult problem of distribution has been solved in such a way that it will be possible for the film to reach any part of North America in about the same time as would be required by a special messenger.

THE WATERPROOF FILM AND THE GREAT NECESSITY FOR ITS PROPER USE

According to leading physicians of the day the eye strain resulting from continuous looking at what is termed the "rainy" film is most severe. The constant resistance of the muscles of the eye to the distracting recurrence of scratches on the film which have become dirt-lugged is, no doubt, a serious menace to the eyesight of patrons of the moving picture theatre. Does it not seem a pity when the remedy is so simple that operators, manufacturers and all those concerned in the handling of films will not only use the waterproof film, which has been on the market for some time, but also take proper measures thereafter to keep the film free from the dirt that is the direct cause of the said rain.

A few days ago Mr. W. A. Daniels, president of the National Waterproof Film Company, of Chicago, called at this office with full particulars of the case and of the quality and usefulness of the waterproof film manufactured by this company. The following are a few of his remarks:

"I was much interested to read on page 18 of your issue of February 10th an article which calls attention to dirty films, exhibited in a certain theatre in your city. If such films were the exception and not the rule, we might pass the matter as an accident.

Of course, the manufacturers have neither time nor inclination to visit outlying picture shows and learn for themselves just what the majority of the public must see. The manufacturers inspect their films when they are new and all blemishes are cut out or retaken. When they see the pictures there is no dirty 'rain' falling in torrents on mother's deathbed; the old lady dies happy and contented with surroundings to awaken nothing but sympathy and tears; but look at this film a few weeks later (as a large part of the public must) and we find mother still dying, but sympathy is divided with resentment that they didn't move her bed away from that leaky roof. There are no tears; the feelings are of indignation, and you go out with a bad taste and resolve never to go again.

"It is folly to expect continuation of public approval of moving pictures unless they are made to be easily cleaned, and, more than that, are cleaned whenever soiled. There is no excuse for 'rainy' pictures at any age under proper manipulation.

"Our waterproof process adds to the cost of films from 2½ to 5 per cent., after which they can be periodically cleaned for about 5 cents per reel.

"Waterproofing is perfectly harmless to the finest film, and we will pay $1,000 to anyone who can prove to us that any disaster ever befell a waterproof film (properly cared for) that would not have happened to a film under the same circumstances not waterproofed.

"We have been told that the only trouble with our proposition is that we are afraid of the game, that the novelty of moving pictures, regardless of film condition, would fill the theatres for a time; but that eventually people would tire of the eye strain of incongruous black streaks called 'rain' and would demand to see as clean pictures as the makers saw when the films left their studio.

"Our advance is rapidly growing less, for exhibitors are beginning to realize the truth and many are already demanding cleaner stuff. Some exchanges, too, are waking up. One in Cincinnati brought out a renovating plant, and by frequent renovation has already secured the major part of the trade in that locality. A new exchange in Chicago advertises, 'We renovate all films once a month.' These are movements in the right direction. We like to see them, regardless of whether our process is employed or not. It means that film cleaning eventually will be done by the cheapest and most effective method, and that means with nothing more harmful than soap and water. When this stage of advancement arrives, we shall still be on the job ready to welcome both our friends and enemies."

The National Waterproof Film Company of Chicago has also turned out a machine to facilitate the cleaning of the film. This machine will wash, dry and rewind in something like eight minutes. With this convenience to supply them, there is but little excuse, if any, for the perpetration on the public of what is known as "rainy" film.

The people of Cleveland, Ohio, co-operated with the moving picture exhibitors on Tuesday, January 23d, and as a result the Associated Charities of the "Sixth City" received a handsome addition to their fund upon which there are urgent and numerous demands this season. One cent out of every paid admission on the Benefit Day in every moving picture theatre in Cleveland was turned over to the Charitable Organization. Cleveland Local of the League of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America decided upon the charitable enterprise, and a new record of daily attendance was set on that day. There were special programs of picture plays and extra features everywhere. Many were not satisfied with paying the usual admission to the theatres and the extra sums handed over were turned into the Associated Charities coffers by the picture exhibitors. There are 120 moving picture theatres in Cleveland and suburbs and the average seating capacity is figured at 425. If every theatre filled its seats twice on January 23d it meant a total attendance of 102,000 people. The "Forest City" boasts of a set of enterprising and public-spirited picture exhibitors, and that their efforts to assist worthy causes in Cleveland are appreciated goes without saying. More power to them, is the wish of the Moving Picture News.

The motion picture shows of Youngstown, Ohio, have come under the ban of the "reform" city administration. The Mayor has ordered that the Sunday entertainments must be only between 12:30 p. m. and 9:30 p. m. The rest of the time, the boys and girls can roam the streets to their hearts' content.

Zero weather cut little figure in a majority of the picture shows in the smaller cities of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, according to reports we have compiled. The fact that so many people did attend is evidence of the hold cinematography has upon the public. The houses, as a rule, were as comfortable, and the shows just as good, as on a night in June.

Newspaper paragraphers' sayings on the pictures during the past week:

"The public faces a new terror. One man laughed himself to death in a moving picture show."

"Not one of the twenty greatest men of the world got his inspiration at a moving picture show. This is strange."

"Many of the foreign moving picture films represent drinking scenes, and the bottles are usually a quart and a half size."

"Chicago school boys ran away from home proposing to pose in 'Wild West films.' Probably they could do as well as some of the near-cowboys and Indians inflicted upon us."

The Isthmus of Panama is picture crazy. This is the latest information received, not only from Government sources but in the letters home from the thousands of Yankees who are now engaged in digging Uncle Samuel's big ditch. It is stated that the principal medium of entertainment along the Isthmus is cinematography. It should be encouraging to those manufacturers who are working for the uplift of the picture to know, too, that the classic script is greatly favored. Word from the Isthmus is to the effect that such films as "David Copperfield," "Enoch Arden," et al., are packing the picture play houses.

The assertions that the public press was antagonistic to the moving picture, once so often repeated, is happily checked. In reality, the newspapers of the United States have accomplished a great deal for cinematography. Quick to criticise, the better class of journalism has also been ready to commend. Following the leadership of the Moving Picture News, the newspapers attacked the suggestive and the exaggerated in picturedom and then took up the crusade for the educational film. Such newspapers as the Chicago Tribune, Cleveland Leader, Cincinnati Times-Star, New York World and Journal and others are giving wide prominence to the moving picture industry, and several of these newspapers conduct Sunday departments devoted to news of the cinematograph industry. The newspapers, those worthy of being called newspapers, are helping along the good cause by every means in their power.

FOR THOSE WHO WORRY O'ER PLOTS AND PLAYS

Hoadley Successful

C. B. Hoadley, who won a prize of $50 in the Imp Films Company Scenario Contest, is a former editor and professional script writer. He lives in Weehawken, N. J. Hoadley has many friends among authors, and they will rejoice over his success.

Roughly Handled

An author forwarded us a comedy script the other day that had just been returned from a certain editorial office. On the back, written in lead pencil, were comments of readers as follows: "Very good comedy," then another wrote "Fair," and then the final reader wrote on the back in indelible pencil, 'Decline." The writer in question has a logical protest coming. He had prepared the manuscript carefully, paid $1 for having the story typewritten, and had enclosed return postage with his script. He was entitled to fair treatment. Instead, his manuscript was roughly handled and the directors seemed to think it should be utilized for a notebook. A majority of the editors and directors care for the story submitted. However, there are others, happily in the minority.

Methods Vary

Not all of the editorial offices observe the same system. Some of the manufacturers receipt for scripts submitted, while others do not. Edison sends a printed receipt under a two-cent stamp for scripts, deemed worthy of further consideration. The Imp Films Company, Essanay, Lubin and some ohers receipt by postcard. Because you do not receive an acknowledgment or your story, do not jump to the conclusion that it has become lost in the mails. If you have enclosed return postage you will hear from it in good time. Wait for about six weeks, and if no report is forthcoming write briefly to the editor in question asking for a report on your story, giving its correct title.

Political Scripts

We have been asked if political subjects are available. They certainly are. A good political plot is always greatly to be desired, but is very frequently difficult to "put over." A strong and convincing political plot, properly filmed, is, next to comedy, most popular with many moving picture fans. However, when writing your political story, taboo the mayor and his secretary. These characters have been "done to death."

Tastes Vary

What does not meet the requirements of one editorial office may be just what the next editor has been longing for. If you feel that you have a good plot and it is returned, do not be discouraged, but fire it into another office. Study the output of the various manufacturers, read the film stories in this journal, and try and select the concern which is releasing pictures of the kind with which your story deals.

It's the Idea

In reply to the question of "Gotham," it can be stated that technique is greatly to be desired. However, there is such a thing as too much technique. If you have a corking good plot, write it as simply and convincingly as possible. If the idea is novel and attractive and the action sustained, the technique will take care of itself. Charles Dickens, for example, was a shorthand reporter before he tried his hand at story writing. He never studied technique. He had the ideas and the inspiration—they count the most.

NEW FILM COMPANY IN NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Well-Known Film Men Enter the Film Renting Business

The Feature Film was incorporated under the laws of Louisiana for the purpose of manufacturing, leasing and renting moving picture films, also as dealers in moving picture machines, supplies, accessories, etc.

The main point of the company will be to purchase exclusive territorial rights on all the big features of the day, and have up to this writing purchased the Southern State rights on Zigomar, Twenty Years in Sing Sing, Tracked by Bloodhounds, A Life For a Life, Tracy the Bandit, Trailed by the Black Hand, The Siege of Calais, and several others are being negotiated for.

The incorporators are: Dave Wolf, formerly manager of the Texas Film Exchange, president; Thomas Walsh, formerly Western Manager of the Curtis Aeroplane Co., vice-president; Wm. H. Gueringer at present general manager of the Fichtenberg enterprises, consisting of a chain of twelve moving picture theaters, secretary and treasurer; A. G. Shear, formerly manager of the Consolidated Film Co., general manager.

All the incorporators are very well known in this section among the exhibitors, and feel assured of the heartiest support in that direction, furthermore, they are all experienced film men, and when their office was opened about the first of January you would marvel at the precision and system with which every matter and detail was handled.

They occupy excellent quarters in the most modern office building in the city, suite No. 725 in the Maison Blanche Building, and fitted up in a manner such as only experienced film men can do.

When Mr. Wolf was visited by a reporter as to the prospects, he stated if it kept up the way it started, he would be compelled to purchase at least three prints of every feature now on the market.

"THE LOAN SHARK"

A TREMENDOUSLY SENSATIONAL IMP.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., Jan. 24.—Motion picture theatres demonstrated here this week that they were useful for other things besides being headquarters for the display of the most pleasing entertainment now before the public, for one of the local houses assisted an Oklahoma City anti-white slave organization when it permitted one of the most fluent and picturesque lecturers who has come here in many a month to show sixty slides dealing with the evils of white slavery, with which he illustrated a most interesting lecture. The theater in question was the new Central, the city's leading motion picture house, and the gentleman who delivered the lecture was Prof. W. D. Spahr. He is working in the interest of an organization composed of the good women and men of Oklahoma City, one of the principle factors being the former police matron of that place, Mrs. Sarah Bond. He began his lecture Sunday, delivering the first one in the afternoon and the second immediately after the regular church services held by the members of the First Presbyterian church, who are worshiping in the new Central theatre, pending the improvements to the interior of their edifice, which was destroyed by fire during the Holiday week. The pastor, French W. Thompson, during a recent visit to Chicago, by personal experience, came in contact with the work of the Chicago anti-white slave organization and was much interested in Prof. Spahr's discourse. The slides were most descriptive and did much to augument a very vivid lecture. Previous to coming to this city Prof. Spahr lectured in the Majestic theatre in Malvern, where he received the patronage of the leading citizens of that place. He tells me that he always gets the best results by lecturing in the motion picture houses, for the reason that, were he to run his slides in a church, he cannot reach the class of people that he desires to have hear his lecture and that in a motion picture house he comes in contact with more persons who can assist him in his work than if he were to lecture in any other place.

The management of the new Central put another one over this week when it booked Jack Connors, one of the best and most popular ballad singers ever heard in Hot Springs. Jack is the man who made "The River Shannon" song in this city famous, and when it was announced that he was to sing in the new Central a great crowd of his friends were on hand, and he was compelled, by their request, to paddle down the "River Shannon" for their special benefit. He has a wonderfully pleasing personality, articulation that is plain and distinct and a voice so harmonious that he makes the audience feel the melody of the music and word pictures of the song. He is making a great hit at this popular house.

Reports that reach me from Texas are not very encouraging for either the moving picture business or theatricals in general, for the reason that there is an epidemic of meningitis that is raising the very dickens with entertainments of all kinds in certain sections of the Lone Star state. The authorities of Shreveport and the Texas officials have already "hooked up" in a very decided and most interesting controversy regarding the question of proper quarantine regulations, and during the week several vaudeville acts and not a few theatrical companies came back into Arkansas, being compelled to cancel their time, which took them into the infected territory. Frederick Ward and members of the "Everywoman" company are quartered at the Arlington, and the big meeting of the vaudeville managers of the Hodkin's circuit, which was to meet here the latter part of this month, has been postponed, owing to the fact that the Texas members of this association were unable to be present. The meeting will take place in May. It was to have been held at the Lyric theatre. Every one of the managers ran popular priced moving picture and vaudeville houses and the cancellation of their meeting is a great disappointment to Harry Hale, of the Lyric, this city, who has been busy making preparations to receive his colleagues and show them a good time while here. The Princess theatre this week was obliged to play the Gus Sun Minstrels for a return date. They were here only a few weeks ago, but had to cancel their other Texas time, and the Princess had to take 'em again or be without a show, as the arrangements were such in the Texas time that there was nothing else the agents could offer this house. Manager Head, however, was mighty glad to get them back, for they are a great attraction and with them came Tom Rowell, one of the blackface comedians seen in "the valley of vapors" this season. The Princes had an exceptionally good picture on this week, an Imp, and while I am writing of this theater, might as well mention it here. The reel was "Why the Check Was Good," and when it started, and the old Imp sign went on, everyone remained to see it through. It was one of the best and most interesting reels that has been seen here from that firm in many weeks and the Imp deserves a vote of thanks for turning it out. In the language of the man next to me, "It was a pippin!"

I have heard of vaudeville acts in this part of the country being forced to do some high hurdling, but the Bama Bama girls hold the record for long jumps. They were here this week at the Princess and their next stand will be Calgary, Alberta, Canada. It will take them six days to make the jump, and immediately after their engagement in this city they left for Chicago, from where they will start on their long hike overland. They go on the Pantiges time up in that God-forsaken country, and I mildly opine that when they get through with that circuit they will be well-qualified to say that, even if it were cold, they say "loads and loads of scenery."

The Photo Play theatre the past week put over a winner in the Thanhouser reel, "She," and it brought them great returns. The management of this house carried the story of "She" to one of the local papers, had it reprinted under a double column display, with a box heading that this masterpiece would be at their house, and it proved to be a good advertising move. The picture made a great hit, and I see that the same firm is going to have a pictorial revival of "East Lynne." Well, the members of their company ought to be able to get that story before the camera in good shape, for I believe that every one of them has played in the production when on the road. It should make, judging from what I have been able to learn of it, a most interesting picture.

Biograph's reel, "In the Wilderness," for sensational Western realism, caught the crowd at the new Central the past week, and proved to be a real Biograph in every sense of the word. The Independent houses here have already sent in requests for the Gaumont product and that firm's material will find a ready market in this city.

Selig endeavored to give us a newspaper story in "Paid Back," which I thought before seeing the picture was a film of "Paid in Full," which was here a short time ago. There were two glaring defects in the reel, the first being the real estate transfer between the judge and the corporation. No man, much less a judge, would "fall" for a thing of that kind unless he was crazy. He would know that such a transfer would have to be properly filed in the records and would become public property and that the story would be bound to come out. It was an awful slap at the judiciary, to begin with, and then to make the judge such an easy mark by accepting something that was sure to become public property—bad—very, very bum. Secondly, it was noted that "the first asignment" the young man in question received was orders to "cover" the judge. Unles he was a marvelously trained and discreet newspaper man before he engaged in the reportorial work, "cub reporter" that he was, he never would have been given an assignment of such importance. Such work requires the ability of a trained reporter—not a new beginner. That he did his work so faithfully and well was was due to the kindness of the scenario writer. The uninitiated did not, of course, see these defects, for the reason that they didn't take the time to consider them, and so, to a majority, the picture was vividly interesting. It was a good picture for general results, but, just the same, the faults mentioned were there, glaring and "orful."

I met Hugo Kelly and "Billy" Papke coming out of the Lyceum theatre the other evening. These two "bruisers" are here for a course of baths and "Billy" has brought his better half along with him to see that he takes baths and nothing else that would ruin his physique. Both men are looking the picture of health and Mrs. Papke and her "hubby" are devoted to motion pictures.

There is some talk of bringing one of the manufacturers to this city next March to take moving pictures of the Hot Springs Horse Show, which will be held March 5 to 9. The management feels that such a move would do a world of good in advertising the resort, and the exhibitors would be more than pleased to have their entries filmed. Already there have been entered over 250 of the best blue-blooded horses in the country for this equine exhibition, which will be the greatest social event that Hot Springs has had in years. How do I know? Whisper, yours merrily has been selected to do the press work for the horse show. Ah, ha, the secret is out. 'Nough said. THE MAN IN THE BATHS.

THOSE "FALLS-FOR-A-BACKDROP" PICTURES

"A Message From Niagara," as the title tells it, is the second of those "Falls-for-a-Backdrop" pictures to be issued by Thanhouser Company. Friday, February 23d, is the day. And the story as the manufacturer tips it off, is: Girl lives at Niagara with her widowed father. He is under the influence of a man who tries to make him a drug fiend. She orders drug seller away and in a fit of excitement the father has apoplectic stroke which is fatal. In addition to being responsible for bringing on the fit that killed the girl's father, the drug seller is a smuggler, the girl learns. She resolves to put him behind the bars. But she finds escape impossible. There is a young man—an artist, her sweetheart—on the outside who could easily save her if he knew of her plight. She decides to notify him. And——

The Falls offer the way out. Just what the way was, the picture tells—well. The company that produced it were sent especially to Niagara to get the wonderful backgrounds that this location affords.

AN INTERESTING INTERVIEW WITH REX STARS

A Stout Reason for Healthy Rex Success Found in the Enthusiasm and Ardor of Its Players

MARION LEONARD

PHILLIPS SMALLEY

LOIS WEBER

There are so many different kinds of people in the world because there are so many things to make people different. There are so many things on this animated mud-ball of an earth to interest people that we should have more interesting people. Interesting people we found and met at the Rex studios—people who know the ways of the world and the hearts of its men, who see ourselves as others see us, and as we see others, who translate our vices and virtues and vanities on the screen, who hold the mirror to our concealed selves—which isn't exactly advertising mirror screens. Interesting people who speak more than words, and who say more than they talk. Due to their daily habit and true to their training, they inform and instruct with a glance or a gleam of their eyes, interpret and express a thought or a view with a gesture, a shrug, a smile. Even their shoulders are eloquent.

We came, we saw them—and we concurred with them. And incidentally we learned more of the psychology connected with photo-playing, than, we gracefully admit, we ever knew before—and we have prided ourselves on knowing more than would cover a two-cent postage stamp.

Contrary to the general belief, it was a difficult matter to get them to talk freely. Perhaps it's because they are not actors as much as they are artists. But we wish to go on record as saying that we laid several cute little traps for them to spill a little vocabulary anent themselves, and, just to confuse the simile, they wouldn't bite. And we knew from the happy mischief of dancing in their eyes that they were very much aware of our cunning and took a grim and unholy delight in foiling us.

We tried such tempting bait as the picture matinee idol, and Phillips Smalley looked a little guilty and gave a convincing impersonation of Mrs. Sphinx. We brought up the possibilities and limitations of picture acting—and it happened. We cite all this to enhance your admiration of us in finally causing them to discourse. It was Mr. Smalley, Phillips Smalley the versatile, who plays the dashing, debonair and the dissolute drunkard with the same realism and range, who broke the silence and in the record for modest actors.

"The possibilities exceed the limitations," he said, "in the same proportion as silent grief is more intense than feigned, bombastic sorrow. When a man is happiest, he is silent; and when he is overcome with great grief, the only language that can fully express his despair is silence. The sob is the most naked confession of grief, and a sob doesn't have to be heard to be understood. The most pliant and complete language in the world cannot express our emotions and our passions with such exegetical force as the muscles of our face and the rhetoric of our eyes. The world's first language was the language of facial expresion and explanatory gesture, and they are more eloquent than all the sounds and symbols—or syllables—of man-evolved jargon."

"In that respect," we interpolated, "do you think a play like 'Sumurun' would be more effective with dialogue?"

"I rather think it would be defective," he emphasized. "It would break the dramatic spell. The very English used would detract from the realism of the play. It would take us away from the desert and remind us we were on Broadway—and probably tempt us to seek one of the many oases with which Broadway is studded."

It was rather an original way of referring to the old saw of a thing "driving us to drink," and we thought the very novelty of this statement was characteristic of the man and his make-up—which is not intended as a pun. In an interview with a picture player, a word-play is out of order.

people—when the laughter and smiles had left on a train of new thought, Mr. Smalley resumed:

"The picture-play is the universal language, a feasible and forceful Esperanto. It is the tongue of human nature, and will always be understood."

We left Mr. Smalley with delight and regret, delight to have had the privilege of that pleasant little chat with him, and regret that it had been so abbreviated. But we're going to take advantage of Mr. Smalley's whole-hearted welcome and courtesy, and see him again anon—which does not mean anonymously, for we're proud to refer to a meeting with a man as manly and gentlemanly as Phillips Smalley.

Then we lassoed Miss Lois Weber. Know Miss Weber's work, do you? That strong effective work that gives us emotional jim-jams, and the picture theaters mostly jams?

"Will you give us an interview, too?" we shyly asked.

"An interview two!" she retorted with malice aforethought. "A plural interview. That's singular!"

We saw what we were up against, and gathered all our wits together—but found that most of them were on a leave of absence. But we are bold enough, when duty warrants—(and as we write this we are consumed with dismal dread lest the compositor substitute an "a" instead of "o" in bold; perhaps the "o" should be capitalized and exclamation-pointed)—we are bold enough, and bravely queried:

"Will you tell us about your work in the plays?"

"A HEROINE OF '76"
First Rex Release.

"Unlike the nursery rhyme, our play is work," she said, "but like all work where one puts heart and soul into it, it is pleasant work. The difference between art and slavery is that in one you put your best, your ideals, your soul and thoughts, while in the other, you put just enough effort to obtain a result, much as that result may be short of its possibilities. We're not content to put our hearts into our work, we put a little of our souls in as well."

We wish to remark parenthetically that this may account for the "soulful" atmosphere with which the Rex pictures teem. There seems to emanate from the Rex productions a strain of sweet song, a grain of grandeur, a lilting note of the wandering music of the world. It's a little of the "soul" of the Rex players.

"What do you think is the future of the silent drama?" we asked.

"The future of the silent drama is the future of all enterprise and progress—more of it. The progress of the picture-play as compared to the advancement of the talking-drama is absolutely astounding. Within a few years we have come dangerously near perfection in technique and construction, where it took centuries for the same degree of advancement in the legitimate production. If we continue improving in the same ratio, it will not be very many more leap-years before the picture-play attracts the attention and interest of the most intelligent and intellecual classes. The film millenium is not far off."

We agreed with Miss Weber's sanguine view. We went a step further and anticipated the day when the motion-picture would be the greatest teacher of humanity, when it would spread light and reason to the darkest corners of the earth.

"It stands to reason," Miss Weber punned.

With more of chat and engaging observation, we took our reluctant leave, with the profound conviction that we had never met a woman with as sweet and sincere a smile as Miss Weber. Her personality radiates humanity and kindliness. Talking and listening to her, one forgets that enmity and malice were ever more than words. There is something "homey" about her, something near and close to the hearts of us all—and perhaps it can be summed up in one word—sincerity.

We went down stairs to the studio of the second Rex Release, and saw Marion Leonard rehearsing a scene for a forthcoming Sunday release. We forgot our mission and our purpose and were swept away by the depth and definition of her work. Her art at once thrills the heart and stills the smart of the grieved. Her hands are an eloquent vocabulary, her face a limitless lexicon. We have spoken of her eyes many times before, and cannot refrain from referring to them again. They are the most versatile eyes we have seen on the screen. They express terror, delight, anger, desire, languor, languidness, love, hate—all the emotions, passions and prejudices of humankind, without the flicker of an eye-lash. Miss Leonard's eyes seem to see right into our hearts and read the complex scribbling inscribed thereon.

She was portraying a very difficult, emotional character. She had left her child asleep, to attend a ball. The house had caught fire, and the child gropes through the shadows of the smoke, and enters the blazing room. At this moment the woman, amid all the gaiety and grandeur of the ballroom, has a premonition that all is not well at home. Her friends laugh her fears away, but again she receives the telepathic message, and determines to return to her home. The child in the meantime has been overcome by smoke, rescued by firemen and carried to a nearby hospital. The woman enters the smoke-seared, fire-scarred home, calls in vain for her child, and believing it has perished in the flames, goes insane. Miss Leonard's portrayal of the woman's insanity was at once so delicate, so effective and realistic that we literally stood with open mouth in admiration of her art. We learn the picture is to be called "Through Flaming Gates," and we are going to make a beeline for the screen when it is released.

A little later we asked Miss Leonard whether she thought the telephatic tie that conveys the message of disaster to the mother in the ballroom really exists in life.

"Not alone between mother and child, but between any two people whose interest is very strong in each other, there exists a strange wireless that apprises one when misfortune or disaster befalls the other," she said. "For want of a better name, we commonly call it intuition, but intuition, to my mind, means immediate perception, and we cannot perceive what we do not see, hear or feel directly. It is something psychic, something supernatural but not unnatural. Our souls have a language too, I think, and it is our souls, subsconscious to ourselves, that transmits a call of distress to loved ones when overcome by disaster."

When an actress so well understands the subject she is to portray and illustrate in a picture-play, it means the uplift of the photo-play. It harbingers realism and convincing conusance in the picture. It explains why the Marion Leonard Rex productions hold that depth of feeling, that intense accuracy to life and things for which they are becoming famed.

We left the Rex studio with the strong feeling that we had gathered considerable sapience during our visit. And our only regret is that we have but one interview to give to our readers.

REX BIRTHDAY

To review a great success as successfully as the success in question is no infant undertaking. There is something of awe and wonder about a great success—that is, the average great success. Sometimes it is expected, however, presaged and provisioned; and even though Rex belongs to the latter classification of success, it is still with a mite of hesitant reverence and reflective regard that we approach the review of the astounding, phenomenal and otherwise adjectived attainments of the Rex Company during the past and first year of its existence.

Success is a queer word and a quaint quantity. Some successes aren't and some are more. May sound a little tangled, but it's a tangible statement. Moreover, a success that is satiated, that is content with what is, is a failure. Rex is anything but the Erie Railroad kind of success—it is not uncertain. It is a success because it is convinced that it can succeed some more, because it is determined to attain greater altitudes in its aim, because we and the trade at large are confident that it can accomplish ever greater triumphs than have already crowned its efforts, and because, well, because it's Rex.

One year ago we learned to say Rex. To-day we have learned to admire and love the name. There is something fascinating and fastening in the very word. It sounds successful. It has a pleasant influence on the ear and mind. We don't know whether it is so because of that with which it is associated, the sterling record it has established and the sanguine prospects it promises, or whether it is the word itself that exerts this exotic power and impression upon us; but Rex has always meant things to us. It's awfully hard to put this thought upon paper intelligibly—but somehow the word impresses us as listening for whispers in the silence and hearing a sweet and pleasant sound. It's a talismanic syllable.

But what the name signifies, what it represents, what it purports and purposes, is far less vaguely understood and expressed. It means all that defines success; it combines ability, enterprise, art, genius, science, perseverence and a host of other significant nouns. It synonyms accomplishment and harbingers more.

One year ago Rex began to make film, and made good, and made good film. Then it made better film, and it is still making still better film. It seems that the Rex Company was organized for the purpose of assisting the industry. It has certainly done that. While still in its infancy it became a bulwark of the Sales Company, and is responsible for a percentage of the healthy inroads which the independents have made into trust patronage and power. The exhibitor learned to demand Rex, and the exchanges as early concluded that the Rex brand was a necessity and a boon—as well as a boom. These days, the familiar quotation from Barnum's pithy vocabulary must be revised to read, "There's a wise man born every minute," and the trade wisdomed up with considerable and creditable rapidity to the young fact that Rex was a stout acquisition to its ranks. But with that trait which is inherent in all leaders, the enterprising brand was not content to remain in the "ranks" and forged to the fore. It was the original aeroplane film—it went high in sales and estimation. "The higher the fewer" theory got a slap on the wrist in this particular instance; because the higher Rex went in its ambition and attainment, the more its legion of admirersi ncreased. By the way, a fact of great weight as illustrative of the increasing popularity of Rex is that there are now about forty-five theaters in this country called "Rex," and the Rex Company has as many letters indicating that the inducement for the common choice of this successful name lies in the quality of the films with which it originated. And a convincing refutation of the oft-mentioned lack of enterprise in our English cousins is the fact that there are several Rex Theaters in the country where most Englishmen live.

Which brings to mind another observation and truth. American films are popular abroad. Europeans like the American productions for their atmosphere and associations. It is quite safe to assert that there is no American-made film as popular in the Eastern Hemisphere as Rex. It has an office in every principal city of Europe, and they're all kept busy. There were two coronations in London this year, that of King George and that of King Rex.

The innovations Rex has introduced into film circles have been many, varied and beneficial. It contributed a new idea of posters; then not content with this distinct achievement, it imported another and a better style of lithograph from England, with a crown that made it really royal. It introduced lighting effects in its pictures that have made them supreme in that respect. It has inaugurated many changes that were not radical, but rather progressive. If there was a scoop to be made, Rex was generally the scoopee.

And then—Marion Leonard!

We feel that the foregoing line should be a paragraph by itself. And we really think it ought to have more than one exclamation point after it. That was without doubt the Big Event of 1911, not alone in the Rex Company's affairs but in the general matters that interest and influence the entire trade. Popularity's Christian name is Marion Leonard. For months the trade and public had been deploring her absence from the screen. Suddenly the happy announcement that she was to reappear on the screen made glad the hearts of the eager exhibitors. And then a little something happened that made things look black and bleak again. But —we overlooked Rex. And Rex saved the day and corralled the Big Happening.

Which locomotes us to another point. (Strange how much news a success makes.) The anniversary of Rex emphasizes another delight-inspiring incident—its second release. For impatient months we waited and watched for the hoped-for announcement; through all the long night of expectancy we watched for the dawn to break; and the only thing that broke was our hearts when the long longed-for event didn't transpire. Of course, we know the reason: Rex had established a standard to which it felt it could not adhere in producing two releases a week; and loyal to the interests of the trade, it refused to inferiorate its quality and heed the consistant demands for two-a-week. When it acquired the Marion Leonard negatives, the path was clear; and the cheerful announcement that Marion Leonard was to "come back" as the second Rex release was the most-discussed incident of last year in film circles.

So Rex is progressing, onward, forward, upward. So it is building greater success upon that already attained. We are neither prophets nor the sons of prophets, but one thing we can predict: Rex is going to gather a great parcel of additional accomplishment, a big slice of commendable attainment and a first mortgage of the respect and regard of the trade.

To the Rex Company on its first anniversary we wish just this: that each year they accomplish just a little more than the past year; and that's accomplishing a lot.

"GUILTY BABY," BY THANHOUSER, EXPOSES CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

In another of those strong plots that have become identified with the Thanhouser trademark, a solar plexus blow is landed on the circumstantial evidence theory as it obtains today. A society woman misses some gems that she left on her dresser. Her baby's nurse could not have taken them since she was with her employer during the period that the jewels seemed to have been taken. But a plumber at work in the house was seen to dash out rather too speedily just before the gems disappeared. And some other things pointed him out as the guilty one, by all the rules of circumstantial evidence.

The truth, was, though, that the baby daughter of the lady of the house, had playfully rolled the gems into the "neck" of her toy rabbit. And replacing the "head" of the "bunny," she safely carried about her the jewels that two-score detectives were trying to locate! Thanhouser releases the story under the title of 'The Guilty Baby," on Tuesday, February 27.

Portland, Ore.—Plans have been completed by Bennes & Hendricks for a moving picture theater for the Grand Amusement Co. to be located on Sixth street between Washington and Stark.

INTERESTING INTERVIEW WITH MR. W. H. HARBECK, OF SEATTLE

Mr. Harbeck, of Seattle, to whom we are indebted for the wonderful pictures of Southern Alaska which were exhibited at the Eden Musee over a week ago, tells many interesting things of that country. "Alaska," says Mr. Harbeck, "is larger than half of the entire United States. Her coast line alone covers 25,000 miles of sea coast."

Last July Mr. Harbeck went into Alaska remaining there the larger portion of two months, in order to get pictures. It is interesting to know that this enterprising gentleman develops and prints these pictures in a miniature manufactory at his own residence in Seattle. These pictures were taken by Mr. Harbeck with a view to having them used for educational purposes, as well as to bring to the notice of Congress the true condition and possibilities of Alaska.

It required a great deal of hardship to be gone through in order to get many of the pictures which this gentleman has brought us. For instance, in order to get pictures of the descent of the avalanche of ice on the face of the Child's glacier it was necessary for Mr. Harbeck to stand with his camera in readiness to snap up the scene, for eight solid hours before the great glacier.

Said he, "Many people have asked me if I did not nearly perish with the cold while standing there; on the contrary, I almost sweltered with the heat—had to take off my coat to try to keep cool. It must be remembered that in the summer time in Alaska the sun shines for 23 hours in the day.

"Canada has the call on immigration at the present time," says Mr. Harbeck. "In a few years time Canada will be petered out on farm land; then there will be an influx into the Peace River Valley and after that to Alaska. Alaska has wonderful possibilities for agriculture. The climate of Alaska is changing; in 25 years from now the climate of Alaska will be much the same as it is here."

Mr. Harbeck reports that in Alaska the wild animals are much more easily tamed than the animals here. In his words, "the fraternal feeling between people and animals is very strong there." The conditions among the people are also different. In Alaska men have been known to charge bills up to the amount of $2,000 for groceries without ever being asked for a cent. That is of course in the case of an industrious man. This may be due to the fact that most of the stores there are branches of large concerns on the coast; and the price of goods there probably covers to a certain extent the danger of loss.

Mr. Harbeck tells of the Malsapena Glacier, which faces for 98 miles on the Pacific ocean. This glacier is always active, and it is said that vessels dare not come within a radius of five to ten miles of it.

One of the interesting pictures which Mr. Harbeck brought with him is that of the Copper River Railroad, which runs out from Cordova, 198 miles. Says Mr. Harbeck: "The cost of the building of this railroad was $22,500,000, a contract for 10% of which had to be given to a man named Henry before he would lay a finger on the work. The passenger rate on this railroad to-day is 20 cents a mile, and for freight service $12.00 per car load."

Mr. Harbeck is a man intensely interested in photography, going abroad each year to learn what is new to be learned in this connection. He has been engaged for some time in taking moving pictures for the Canadian Pacific Railroad, which films have been shipped to Europe. Mr. Harbeck intends establishing an office in New York very shortly from which office state rights of special films will be offered for sale.

Detroit, Mich.—David Stott will build a new theatre at Broadway and Gratiot Avenues.

Anderson, Ind.—F. J. Hartman, of Cleveland, O., has purchased the Americus Theatre and will remodel it.

Carthage, O.—Anderson, Coffee & Caulkins will establish a high-class picture show in the room formerly occupied by the Holiday Hardware Store.

Sallisaw, Okla.—The Wonderland Theatre, owned by E. B. Bugher, was destroyed by fire at a loss of $3,000.

Evansville, Ind.—The Franklin Theatre Company, capital $7,500, J. R. Brannen, P. Fine and others.

Humboldt, Ia.—A new motion picture and vaudeville house, to be called the New Majestic, will be opened in the Arnold Block by Arthur C. Hoganson.

HOMER'S ODYSSEY

INFRINGER CAUGHT RED-HANDED

Frank Winch and W. Barren (a Burns detective), arrested Rodo Cimmitiquez at Ottawa, Canada, on February 14th, and seized an infringing copy of HOMER'S ODYSSEY. Frank Winch left New York on one hour's notice that the Odyssey Film had been imported through Montreal from Europe. Reaching Montreal, Winch traced film to Ottawa, and in a hotel near Broad Street, secured possession of the film on pretext that he would buy the Canadian rights. This is the first attempt to infringe HOMER'S ODYSSEY.

Rodo Cimmitiquez is in the Nicholas Street jail and the film is in Winch's possession.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

At the Nebraska conference of Charities and Correction held recently at Omaha, Neb., J. R. Fulk, of Seward, made the following statement, which does not seem to hit the nail exactly on the head; in fact the stroke of the hammer sounds like an echo of yesterday. Says Mr. Fulk: "The people don't want educational films, they want cowboys, domestic troubles, elopements, autos and flying machines. Most of the films are censored by a national board and are not immoral, but are nevertheless not educational."

We cannot exactly agree with Mr. Fulk inasmuch as anything that is a mark of progress and modern ingenuity is in a large measure educational. Flying is our most modern mode of travel. Furthermore, we venture to say, that though elopements, domestic troubles, etc., etc., do find a response in the hearts of the masses, still there are comparatively few who would not at any time look with pleasure at any educational film which happened to be placed before them. The natural curiosity of humanity compels it. Also it is a slur on our civilization, and acknowledged modern advancement to allow remarks such as the above to be put repeatedly into print as has recently been the case.

The 289th dinner of The Hungry Club, which is so ably presided over by the one and only Mattie Sheridan (anybody who does not know of Mattie Sheridan is a nobody) will be held at the Hotel Flanders, No. 135 West 47th street, New York City, on Saturday, February 24th.

The president of the Imp Films Company, Mr. Carl Laemmle, and Mrs. Laemmle, will be guests of honor at The Hungry Club on this occasion, when there will also be a special display of recently made Imp films.

The Actors' Church Alliance of America has moved its headquarters from 550 Seventh avenue and after February 15th they will be located at 254 West 55th street, just west of Eighth avenue. Mildred Holland, president New York Chapter.

"A panic!" cried some; "a boom," said others. "You can gamble it's either one or the other," said the oldtimers among the onlookers, who had experienced both. They were all wrong, however, for a moving picture man was responsible for all the excitement. He had set up his machine at one of the windows of a building overlooking the curb, and the brokers were performing for his benefit.

"Put a little life into it, boys," he begged, after observing for a time the quiet way in which the curb traders now carry on business, "these films are going all over the country, and the public wants to see some action for its money. Make it realistic. It will help your business and mine."

Needless to say the Curb brokers responded to this appeal with a will.

In an extract from "Association Men" it is stated that there are nearly 10,000 moving picture theaters to-day in this country against about 1,400 regular theaters. The audience of all the regular theaters is about 750,000 daily, while the audience of the moving picture theaters is quoted at about 2,500,000. It is also stated therein that in the moving picture we have to-day one of the greatest unused educational forces of civilization. A realization of this is being brought about very rapidly in Y. M. C. A. circles and is causing a rapid installation of moving pictures in the different branches of the Association.

Five years ago Bedford branch, Brooklyn, began with a moving picture show one night a week and occasionally. The interest has increased from year to year. Now full week's programs are frequent. Here is a sample week:

Monday—Humor and Pathos of Charles Dickens. Stereopticon illustrations. (Free.)

Tuesday—Moving picture program, six reels. Entertainer. Admission, 10 cents.

Wednesday—Male Glee Club, under the leadership of the composer of the "Yankee Consul."

Thursday—Travelogue motion pictures and stereopticon illustrations. Admission, 10 cents.

Friday—Motion picture lecture. Construction of an automobile. Men only. Free. (To stimulate interest in automobile class.)

Saturday—Musical program, vocal and instrumental. Admission, 25 cents and 50 cents.

Kinemacolor pictures of the coronation, etc., matinee and evening (25 and 50 cents) were offered the next week. These entertainments are making the association building a community center, pay expenses and are at the same time of large educational value.

The following is an interesting extract from a recent issue of the New York Journal:

In Germany the censors have excluded all pictures presenting scenes of disorder, violence or crime. This includes prize fights and all attacks on officials or policemen.

Moving pictures have an educational value and they have taken the public fancy in all countries. The use of the films should be encouraged, but under restrictions.

Pictures of successful violence and crime have a bad effect on children and should be prohibited by general laws stringent enough to stop the manufacture of crime producers.

The tailless devil in the moving pictures of Dante's Inferno appears to be causing quite a sensation in church circles. After all, what does it matter? It's only a small "de-tail," anyway.

Insurance companies have put the ban on all moving picture exhibits not in regulation metal booths. A motion picture machine not housed in a metal booth will raise the insurance rate of the building 75 per cent.

The moving pictures to be used to illustrate the lecture of Dr. J. M. Bannister at the Y. M. C. A. had to be dispensed with on account of the stand taken by the insurance companies. A movable metal booth will be built by the association in order that moving pictures can be used.

Moving pictures and yeast cakes doesn't sound like very tempting diet; nevertheless, it was in this form that relief came to Acushnet and Nantucket in the recent imprisonment of the inhabitants there by ice floes. There are three hundred inhabitants on the island of Nantucket. Although the whole thing may seem ridiculous at a glance, it was necessary that these people were amused as well as fed, and moving pictures did the trick.

It is very significant of the advancement of women in the matter of independence and enterprise that they are entering even into the field of the management of the theatre. Not long ago a theatre was opened in Delphi by Miss Bertha Eldredge and Miss Josephine Sims, members of old and prominent Delphi families. This theatre is running only moving pictures. Miss Sims, who was violinist in the English Hotel Cafe, Indianapolis, for a number of years, has charge of the theatre's little orchestra, while Miss Eldredge conducts the business end.

Three hundred members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Ill., installed officers, selected committees for the ensuing year and arranged for their annual national convention to be held there in August. The following officers were elected: President, George Henry; vice-president, C. A. Anderson; secretary, Sidney Smith; financial secretary, Simon Katz. The executive committee includes Robert R. Levy, chairman; Fred W. Schaefer, secretary; F. Natkin, L. H. Frank, C. H. Hull, Abe Balaban and C. C. Whelan. Robert R. Levy, chairman of the executive committee, was intrusted with $3,000 collected by the association for general charity distribution, and Levy will turn this fund over to Mayor Hirrosin to-day. This amount was realized when the members who own and control the 300 outlying picture theatres turned over the receipts of that day to the league. Prominent manufacturers attended, including George K. Spoor, of the Essanay Manufacturing Company; George Kleine, of the Kleine Optical Company; August Selig, of the Selig Polyscope Company, and Martin Niehls, of the American Film Manufacturing Company.

"Nickel theatres, which were formerly injurious to the morals of our children, have grown to be beneficial since the films shown in such theatres have been censored," declared Prof. Allis Hoben, of the University of Chicago, in an address on "The Delinquency of Children" at the Oak Park Presbyterian Church recently. "Where the children used to view pictures of crime, they now see pictures of an educational nature, and pictures conducive to better living."

One of the notable films soon to appear is a two-reel subject, "The Trust," made by Gaumont. The picture is to expose some of the methods of big business corporations, and is said to be the most powerful picture of the kind ever made.

After a recent charge to a Morris County grand jury by Justice Pasker, in which attention was called to alleged violations of the law against children unaccompanied by parents or guardians attending moving picture shows, the proprietor of a show received a shock on Friday, February 9th, when a horde of children descended upon his theatre and demanded admittance.

Principal George Kiser, of the Hillside Morris Township public school, made his way to the front and explained that the youngsters wanted to see the films illustrating Longfellow's poem, "Evangeline." The children, he said, were studying the poem. After he had agreed to act as guardian and promised to sit with them, he and his large family were permitted to enter the theatre.

A recent development has been the production of X-ray moving pictures of the internal organs and parts of the body. For rapid motions, like those of flying insects, a new apparatus takes 2,000 successive views a second on 125 feet of film, and, as the usual stopping of the film for each exposure is impossible at such speed, the exposures are given by electric sparks, each lasting not more than one 1,400,000th of a second. The pictures may be shown on the screen at one 100th as great speed, or the ordinary moving picture rate of 15 or 20 successive views per second, thus giving a better perception of motions that originally are difficult for the eye to follow. A new Edison promise is that of a home kinetoscope, that will make moving pictures available for everybody for varied purposes. It is announced that what now requires 1,000 feet of film will be compressed upon 80 feet, and the apparatus will compare with a sewing machine in cost. An illustration of commercial possibilities is the salesman's idea of moving pictures to show a machine at work.

Rex Films were born. When you read this we are one year young, but we are talking--and being talked about. And the only rattle we use is the kind that rattles your trust competitor.

¶ During every one of the 8760 hours of our busy existence, we have striven for genuine achievement and ambitious attainment. For not one minute of each of those hours have we placed mercenary gain above artistic accomplishment. We have never worshipped the Great God Gold, nor any other idle idol of tin.

¶ The thunder is pretty loud, but it doesn't rain anything . . . So we have never thundered.

¶ We have never attempted to seduce reluctant business with the siren song of mock sincerity. Gold was not our goal; so we manufactured merit and placed faith in your own discernment and discretion.

¶ Time and Energy are the two greatest gifts of the world All our efforts have been to combine and exert both toward the greatest advantage and advancement of the industry.

¶ We have appealed in our silent plays to that great common heart-throb of humanity whose only response is the break in the voice and the silent hand-shake. We hear we have succeeded.

¶ We thank YOU! For the co-operation which alone made possible our efforts and attainments, for the support and endorsement of our endeavors, for the consistent confidence in our aim,--sincerely we thank you!

¶ We have not joined the prayer-trust, but our sturdiest hope is that twelve months from today and unto time indefinite we will retain our greatest possession and asset--your friendship and respect. And we are going to continue to earn these!

Councilman Jerome Howard, of Cincinnati, O., is preparing an ordinance under the terms of which moving picture shows for educational purposes would be permitted in the auditoriums of schools, churches and other public and semi-public buildings.

Rose Hibbard, a moving picture actress, performed a feat in Uniontown which was never meant for the films. While riding horseback along the Nepperhan Creek her mount stumbled on a wire and plunged her headlong into the water. Frank Sinclair, who played the role of "hero," hauled her out. Miss Hibbard's left shoulder and arm were severely bruised.

Miss Josephine Bont, principal of the West Vernon Avenue School, Los Angeles, Cal., gave an address before the council of presidents of the Los Angeles Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations on February 1st. Her subject was, "What Shall Be Done with the Children During Idle Hours?" "On the solution of this problem," said Miss Bont, "rests the character of the future citizen, many of whose idle hours are passed in the moving picture theatres.

"Thousands of dollars are given each month by our children to see these pictures," proceeded Miss Bont, "and their possibilities of educational features are recognized by all people.

"If each parent-teacher association in Los Angeles could raise the standard of pictures in its district and provide for entertainment only whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are of good report, the work would be of untold value to the home, the school and the city."

Experiments with the new daylight moving picture machine have been conducted during the past few weeks at a secluded spot on the seashore near Dover, England. Representatives of the big moving picture concerns who witnessed the tests declare that the pictures shown under broad daylight conditions were in every way as clear and vivid as any in the most carefully darkened room.

The first exhibtion of moving pictures in the public schools in Birmingham, Ala., was given under the auspices of the Board of Education of that city on the night of February 27th at the Birmingham Central High School. The pictures shown were Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," "The Fly Pest," and others of an educational character. The programme was varied with sketches and literary selections given by the pupils.

At Washington, D. C., on Saturday, February 10th, school children between the ages of eight and fourteen were entertained at a moving picture theatre, 477 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W., when a programme of film and slides was presented, showing scenes in America and illustrating important historical events in the development of the United States. Admission was free. Cash prizes were offered for the best essays on the subjects presented in the pictures and the accompanying lecture. Five prizes were presented, one of $3, one of $2 and three of $1 each. Needless to say, the children were delighted.

The following is an extract from the Atlantic City Union on February 7th:

The bill to be introduced at City Council's next meeting prohibiting the employment of boys or other persons of questionable competence as operators of moving picture machines, should pass without a dissenting vote and just as speedily as the rules of Council will permit.

Accidents elsewhere of an order from which Atlantic City has luckily been exempt up to this time should be sufficient to satisfy any member of Council of the importance of requiring every film-machine operator employed here to pass a proper examination.

If this excellent measure, for which the Electrical Committee must be given credit, becomes a city law, the committee may be inspired to take action for the protection of the public generally through the removal of the overhead wires which constitute an infinitely greater menace than all the danger that lurks in a thousand moving picture machines.

lantic City has failed to keep pace with the times. The new Electrical Committee is confronted by a duty which calls for earnest consideration.

On Friday, February 9th, the Lyric Theatre, the new moving picture house at the Flint, Fall River, Mass., was opened. This house will be managed by Ernest W. Michelfelder, the present manager of the Star Theatre. The plans for this modern picture house were designed by Architect Louis G. Destremps. The building is of fireproof construction and built mainly of brick. It is lined throughout with steel plate one-eighth of an inch in thickness. All other equipments are of equally fine quality.

The announcement slide is a growing necessity in the moving picture industry; the manufacturer must, therefore, look to the quality and design of the article, that shall be at the same time attractive and useful. He knows that a cheap slide cheapens his business, as a cheap article puts a tawdry finish on the face of the most deserving institution. One of the finest slide manufacturers in the market to-day, a firm who are pioneers in production of artistic slides, is the Niagara Slide Company, Lockport, N. Y. This company has built up an extensive business that is constantly drawing as the demand for high-grade work increases. It realizes that the slide must keep pace with the general advancement of the times. It realizes the necessity for artistic work and the demand on the part of the industry for the best that can possibly be had. This demand, as an up-to-date enterprising firm, it is proposed to meet in a previously unexcelled manner.

Through a Paris contemporary we learn of a novel method adopted by the Prague police authorities to detect the perpetrators of high crimes and misdemeanors.

When a person of distinction in the annals of crime is being sought and the police experience difficulty in laying hands on the suspect, in future they will send to every cinematograph exhibition in Bohemia a photograph of the person "wanted." During the entertainment the picture will be shown with some little explanatory note, and at the conclusion each member of the audience will be free to act as an amateur detective. It seems very likely that this method will be fruitful in actions for damages.

M. Dussaud, a French inventor, says he has discovered a means of producing "cold light." He keeps secret the process by which he produces a light equal in intensity to the ordinary kind and consuming a less amount of electric current.

The inventor says his discovery will prevent the danger of moving picture films burning, and it may be used in powder magazines without danger of causing explosions.

S. S. Hutchinson, president The American Film Mfg. Co., spent a large part of last week in New York City, following his return from the Western studio at La Mesa, Cal.

The Pennsylvania Coal Company opened a theatre at Jerome, Pa., on January 31st as a place of amusement for its employees and their families. The theatre will run moving pictures. Four to five hundred persons attended the first free show that was given there. Hereafter a charge will be made for admission to this theatre, but all receipts above the cost of operation will be used to provide better programmes for their patrons. This theatre has a seating capacity of 300 persons.

The first motion picture studio plant in the South has almost reached consummation in Columbia, S. C.

A motion picture theatre with a Saturday afternoon programme devoted especially for children was made a fixture at San Jose, Cal., as the result of the efforts of Mrs. Bertha M. Rice, a member of the local Board of Censors appointed by the Mayor to scrutinize all motion picture films before they are produced. A part of the proceeds of each Saturday afternoon's performance will go to the Boys' Outing Farm at Saratoga. The programmes include motion pictures depicting fairy tales and other "kids'" stories, as well as recitations and vocal solos and readings from children's music and books.

A new theatre is about to be erected at Lake Charles at a cost of $50,000. This theatre will be built and financed by the firm of Josiah Pierce & Sons, builders, operators of high-grade amusements, with headquarters at New Orleans. This theatre will be used as a motion picture theatre.

With regard to moving pictures and fire, will quote from the Philadelphia Press: "Germany is free from moving picture fires because its police regulations require an operatic slide to shut the film off from the light or lamp box and require a metal container hermetically closed, out of which the film comes and from which it is wound into another similar metal case.

"When American cities require automatic apparatus like that in Germany, which no one can meddle, they will be freer from moving picture fires than they are now."

The new house organ of the Solax Company, entitled The Magnet, has made its appearance and is constructed with the object of keeping the exhibitor posted as to the forthcoming releases from the Solax Studio.

"ARAB'S BRIDE" A COSTLY FILM

Two thousand feet of film were taken of "The Arab's Bride," the Thanhouser release of Friday, March 1, and 920 feet—allowing 80 for titles—used. This will serve as a simple example of how the producer of the present "throws" about money to get what he wants. Just consider! Less than half of this costly production was held for the subject as finally issued. The huge length of film that was thrown into the waste barrel represented toil and trouble and tremendous expense. But it was "all in the day's work" at a film manufactory.

The subject is notable for its fine tropical settings and beautiful costumes. Its Arabian desert scenes particularly stand out. As a matter of fact, they were taken in Florida, by the Thanhouser "stock" now operating there.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Plans have been prepared by V. E. Winterrowd & Co. for the erection of a two-story theatre at 42-44 West Washington Street to cost $25,000.

Dewey, Okla.—The Yale Theatre will probably erect a new theatre here.

"Through Flaming Gates"

REX MARION LEONARD SUNDAY RELEASE, MARCH 3d, WILL CATCH ON!

STANLEY NESTOR HORSLEY

The picture below scarcely does justice to Stanley Nestor Horsley, the youngest and most interesting member of that worth-while film family known as the Nestor Company. Young Stanley joined David Horsley's household about five years ago and has held sway ever since. Being a dyed-in-the-wool Nestorite, he insists on adding "Nestor" to his name.

The little lad likes Western pictures, particularly the Nestor Westerns, for it must be remembered that Stanley is a motographic connoisseur par excellence, and is happiest when dressed à la cowboy.

Last October when the entire Nestor Film Co. went to Hollywood, California, young Horsley was jubilant to journey to Cowboy Land, and now he has the distinction of being the youngest and most fearless "Buckeroo" on the Pacific Coast. A buckeroo, by the way, is a person who can ride bucking horses but who has never had actual cowpunching experience. Stanley Nestor did not care to ride the gentle burro his father bought for him, and to show that molly-coddling has nothing in common with him, he watched his opportunity and one sunny day (the days are always sunny at Hollywood) he managed to mount a savage young bronco. Stanley kept his seat for more than ten minutes and was only thrown when the saddle slid to one side. The fall did not dampen his riding ardor, for he thus defied the bucking horse. "I'll ride him yet!" And ride him he did.

ECLAIR SCOOP

Mr. George Larkin, otherwise known as the dare-devil of moving pictures, formerly with Pathe Stock Company, has now joined the Eclair Stock Company. Mr. Larkin played numerous leads while with Pathe, and besides being a capable actor he is an expert rider, swimmer, canoeist, acrobat and all-around athlete. His specialties include high diving and falls off horses.

Macksville, Kan.—Work has been started on the erection of an opera house here. Plans have been prepared by Arch. Mann & Gerow, of Hutchinson.

New London, Ia.—Ed. Magers will build a new playhouse here.

Lake City, Fla.—This town will have a handsome three-story theatre building.

SCENES FROM SOME FORTHCOMMING IMP RELEASES

"THE RIGHT CLUE"

Imp Comedy Release of March 2nd

The Imp Film Company's $100 Scenario.

The "right clue" in this story is some cigar ash which at the very beginning of the film, the master detective of his age, W. R. Daly, seizes upon as the means of enabling him to trace the whereabouts of some missing documents.

How "Sherlockey" Daly follows up this clue is illustrated in this picture which teems with humor, every inch of it. Daly's object in life is to find the man smoking the same kind of cigar as that whence the clue ash was derived. As he stops, interrogates, and questions all and sundry persons he happens to meet, you may imagine there is no end of fun in watching his antics.

Finally, Daly discovers an inoffensive policeman smoking a cigar, the like of which he is searching for. From this clue the detective makes his main discovery, viz: that the missing documents are concealed in the policeman's hat. They got into that hat because the documents were thrown on the waste tub whence they fell into the hands of the policeman's cook friend, who finding her lover's hat too large for him padded it out with the missing papers.

Surely a very interesting theme for an Imp comedy. It is a profoundly humorous story from start to finish.

Mr. Daly is "it" in the picture and the authoress should be grateful to him for the manner in which he realizes her ideal.

INCREASED DEMAND FOR HALLBERG D. C. ECONOMIZERS

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports a gratifying recognition of the merits of his Direct Current Economizer, as well as the Alternating Current Economizer; this is evidenced by the large numbers of orders he is receiving for these outfits. He is also furnishing complete theater outfits in various parts of the country.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Alleghany Amusement Company will remodel the building at 3139-49 Frankford Avenue into a theatre at a cost of $5,000.

BISON STEPS FORWARD

"The Deserter"

Bison, with its one a week, shows us the meaning of "quality versus quantity." Not long ago it startled a few favored ones with that splendid production "War on the Plains," which has later been followed up by a continuation of the series, which reflect very materially the standard toward which Bison is rapidly ascending.

The first release of these interesting Western subjects takes place on February 23rd, when "War on the Plains" will make its formal bow to the public at large. The latest of the series which has been shown to the press is entitled "The Deserter." This film is equal to, and in some respects, excels anything that Bison has yet turned out, which by-the-way, is saying a good deal. The story of this particular subject is so strong, so lucid in its interpretation on the screen as to convey a complete conception to the mind of the observer without the aid of a sub title. It opens with a jollification and dance at a Western military post. Two of the younger members of the post fall in love with the pretty young heroine of the story, who through a turn of circumstances is forced to the truth regarding the inclination of her affections. The unfortunate member of the twain drowns his sorrows in drink, consequently becoming mixed up in a drunken brawl at a neighboring saloon, from which he is taken under reprimand by a company of soldiers dispatched for the purpose. Overcome by the force of circumstances he decides to desert, which he speedily does, and is picked up on the desert athirst and exhausted, by a wagon train. By them he is cared for. While he is still convalescent the party is attacked by the Indians. The young man with whom by this time the young girl of the party has fallen in love, proves his bravery by assisting in the defense. Eventually he crawls out and capturing the horse of a dead Indian and also his head feathers, flies across the desert to the camp which he has deserted, arriving there with only strength enough left to tell his story. He dies immediately, and a very touching scene ensues when the settler's party arrives and the young girl discovers the death of her hero. The closing scene is that of the funeral; the procession of soldiers, with reversed arms, following the wagon bearing the bier, the dead soldier's riderless horse, the final salute at the grave on the face of the hill, all lend a sad yet dignified touch to the picture.

Bison is to be highly complimented on the splendid quality of the work which they are turning out.

"The Deserter" will not be released until about the end of March.

Chicago, Ill.—Katharina Stoecka will erect a one-story brick theatre at 612 West 31st Street at a cost of $6,000.

THE LAND BARON OF SAN TEE

American Film Co. Release, February 26th

The great suffering that comes from individual control of the necessities of life is aptly illustrated in this "American" picture. The wealthy land baron orders the water supply shut off and an armed guard is stationed to protect the dam. In the resulting water famine the population seek the dam to be driven away by the baron's guard.

The baron's foreman, Jim Mallory, is in love with Clara Blair, the daughter of a poor old widow, and plans to take advantage of her helplessness. When their water supply gives out, Clara seeks the dam to find many others waiting while a vigilant guard warns them away from the premises. She hurries to the baron and tells him of her sick mother but is refused even a canteen of the precious fluid. She returns home in despair, when Jim Mallory follows her and offers her a canteen of water for a kiss. She indignantly refuses and hurries to her mother, but the sight of her mother's suffering forces her back to accept the foreman's offer. He hurries away believing that he now has her in his power and can enforce any demand. A stranger comes to San Tee and stops at the home of the widow. He asks Clara for water and is told of the famine and the Baron's heartless treatment of the people. He determines to help himself at the dam but first goes to see the Baron and to meet with refusal.

He goes to the dam and fills his canteen, is fired upon by the guard and in returning their fire seriously wounds one of them. The Baron is sent for and he hurries on the trail of the stranger seeking vengeance.

Lurking in the undergrowth the stranger awaits his coming and captures him. He ties him to a tree and hurries to the widow's home for salt.

The foreman is there and forcing his unwelcome attentions on the helpless girl. She screams for help and the stranger arrives in time to grapple with her assailant and turns him over to two of the men, who arrive, and they force him out of the country.

Returning to his captive, the stranger proceeds to feed him salt, and soon he is suffering the same torment he has meted out to the public. He begs for water only to watch the young man refresh himself from his canteen. Unable to stand the torment longer the Baron agrees to lift the famine if the young man will give him a drink. The stranger forces him to go to the dam and make his announcement and call off his guard. The population are wild with joy, and Clara takes the stranger home to introduce him to her mother. And it is rumored that he stayed in San Tee to force the Baron to remain true to his promise and also to become better acquainted with Clara Blair.

NO FRIEND OF CENSORS

A Distinguished Language Reformer on Misapplied Benevolence

To the Editor of Moving Picture News:

Recurrent manifestations of the "look ye up unto us" idea are always viewed with interest by students of human nature.

"These pictures have been passed by the National Board of Censors," or other words of corresponding import, are being continually and superfluously flashed on the screen after many "playlets" exhibited in the motion picture theaters.

If the plays are approvable and approved, why not let the fact be taken for granted without supplementary advertising in chromatic titanized type?

An avviso of the above mentioned kind expressed in plain Russian may harmonize beautifully with the conditions and political atmosphere of Moscow and Sredne Kolymsk, but is neither applicable to New York circumstances nor well connotating when announced in the American language.

Why should the benevolent condescension of perfect strangers be spread at large to impress on freeborn and free feeling spectators a peculiarly benevolent assertion of "we know what is best for you" from a board of censors which, if published statements are true, is composed merely of conclavists who have never yet received any definite official recognition?

Benevolence may be a vice if misapplied; a vice if its badge gleams unnecessarily or bumptiously; a vice if the proof of its exercise is too spectacularly displayed, "rubbed in."

Why rub it in?

It might be more agreeable to some and salutary to all if there were a wee less of the "we will now kindly permit you" spirit abroad.

Popularity Proves Merit

That is why, in point of excellence and sales, POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6 exceeds all other moving picture machines on the market.

That is why POWER'S NO. 6 is known throughout the world. That is why it has made friends and its praises are sung wherever civilization rules. That is why our orders are away ahead of deliveries. That is why we are compelled to move into a much larger and better equipped factory.

It is the handwriting on the wall. It tells you, Mr. Showman, that POWER'S NO. 6 has proved its popularity and superiority by sheer force of merit. That is why it is the machine for you.

Let us send you catalogue D telling all about it.

CALIFORNIA NOTES

The "Gem" Theatre, Albuquerque, New Mexico, has changed from trust to Independent. Service is supplied by the California Film Exchange.

All the railroad companies that have lines on the Pacific coast are planning a most extensive advertising campaign in connection with the Colonist rates for 1912.

The Salt Lake, Santa Fe and Southern Pacific are each pursuing their own campaign, but all are working to the same end, that of attracting tourists and colonists from all over the world to California.

Arrangements are now being made to put lecturers with moving picture machines all over the east to show the beauties of the Golden State. Several films are now being made that will depict the orange groves, scenes at the beaches and the beautiful homes for which California is so renowned.

The Los Angeles board of censorship which has been inactive since its inauguration, is now going to start something if the council adopts the recommendation made by the legislation committee in favor of the law which calls for a board of five censors to put the ban on all questionable films. The ordinance will prohibit the display of obscene pictures that depict murders, robberies and other crimes.

The proprietors of picture houses will have to submit three days in advance a list of the films that they intend to show, and the board will have free access to all public places of amusement in order to view the pictures.

The present board consists of the following persons: Mrs. Emma Bumiller, Rev. Stanley Ross Fisher, Mrs. E. K. Foster, Judge A. P. Tugswell, and R. C. Daniels.

If the council approves of the new ordinance it will enlarge the powers of the board, and things are sure to start humming. The censors will not only look after the picture shows, but will also control the vaudeville theatres, penny arcades, etc.

The "Pastime," corner 24th and Central streets, which has been dark for some time, has been opened by Mr. H. W. Melrose. Four reels of Independent pictures are shown, the same being supplied by Miles Bros.' exchange.

The Record says, "Moving pictures show policemen in action, science is great." Wonder if they saw Majestic's "Will you marry me?"

The "College," 5th and Hill streets, has changed hands, having been taken over by Mr. Ed Tally. Mr. Tally is a pioneer show man of this city, and was formerly the owner of the "American," 5th street and Broadway. The price of admission has been reduced from ten to five cents.

A special feature was put on at the "College" this week, namely, "The Violin Makers of Nuremburg." The Solax Company is to be congratulated on the fine work done on this film.

Among the many good ones given us by the Sales Company this week were "The Temptress," which is a fine Great Northern drama; Rex's "Angels Unaware," was pleasing, and "Little Boy Blue," by Powers, is the kind that makes you think.

PHIL WHITMAN.

Iowa City, Ia.—W. H. Englert, owner of the Bijou Theatre, has approved plans for the erection of a new $55,000 theatre which he will erect in the spring.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

Cincinnati, O., Feb. 10, 1912.

Editor Moving Picture News:

Dear Sir:—A State Convention has been called to meet in Parkersburg, W. Va., on Wednesday, February 28, 1912. The committee in charge is P. W. Barett, Star Theatre, and F. L. Harris, Bijou Theatre, headquarters, Blannerhasset Hotel. A musical entertainment, vaudeville and a banquet will be given at night to the motion picture exhibitors. The meeting will be called to order at ten o'clock at the hall provided. Matters pertaining directly to your business will come before this meeting and you are not only invited to attend but urged to do so, as the time has come for organization.

Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Alabama, Minnesota and other states are already organized. The national organization is doing great work for the exhibitors.

This meeting and organization is for motion picture exhibitors only and not for film men or manufacturers. All of those owning a theatre or part of a theatre will be taken into the organization. In other words, this organization is for motion picture exhibitors only.

Please communicate with as many exhibitors as you can throughout your state and invite them to this meeting. A state president, first vice-president, second vice-president, secretary and treasurer are to be elected at this meeting, also a legislative committee, insurance committee, committee on arbitration, grievance committee and a state censor board will also be elected.

Please advise me at your earliest convenience if you can attend, as we will have to know about how many will attend in order to perfect arrangements. Enclosed please find constitution and by-laws of our Ohio State League.

Very truly yours,

M. A. NEFF,
Pres. M. P. E. L. of America.

LEAGUE NOTES FROM INDIANAPOLIS

The second meeting of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League took place at Indianapolis, Dennison Hotel, Tuesday, February 6, 1912.

The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock by President Dickson. Roll call showed ninety-two members in good standing, representing about one hundred and forty-five theatres.

The greater part of the morning and afternoon session was taken up with discussions on matters pertaining to the welfare of the League and the moving picture business as a whole.

Mr. Deitz, of the Indianapolis Board of Censure, appeared before the meeting and proved to be the friend of the motion picture exhibitors. He told how ministers, representative citizens, had condemned the motion picture shows, and when he investigated it—the real red meat of the situation—the principal objection seemed to be because the price of admission was cheap. Mr. Deitz complimented the Indianapolis theatres on their loyalty and their disposition to obey the laws, as an instance, quoted, that in one day every theatre in Indianapolis went to a lighted house on request of the Board of Censure. His address was followed by the National President, M. A. Neff. His address was a most earnest appeal for the exhibitors to unite, for the exhibitors to uplift the motion picture business, as only in that way is the safety and the prosperity of the individual assured. He also quoted many instances, as how the league had already been a power although it is practically as yet in its infancy; and what a tremendous force the league will be when, by the use of twenty thousand picture screens, talking to millions of people every day, the whole public thought can be focused and influenced. Mr. Neff was of great assistance in keeping the league in the right channel and by his advice, and experience that some of the older states in the league had had, gave invaluable information to the members.

State Factory Inspector Walsh talked to the members about what may be expected in the future along the line of drastic laws that might injure the exhibitors' cause, and appealed to the members to be in a position to frame whatever laws are to be passed, and counsel with the inspection bureau, so that these measures will be wise and just. Mr. Walsh received the thanks of the convention for his very kind talk.

Mr. Robert Lieber, of the General Film Company, was very happy in an address which, while it did not follow the text given him, was along a broad line, full of interest and encouragement. Mr. Lieber is a big man with a big heart and a big mind, and enjoys a host of friends among the exhibitors.

The Central Film Exchange was represented by Mr. Schraeder, who made a very creditable talk. After this, the meeting developed into a heart to heart talk among the exhibitors present, in which everybody talked "business" and exchanged ideas.

A convention of this kind is of more particular value to the exhibitors because of the opportunities to talk business with each other than any other feature; as it is by getting together and comparing notes that the exhibitor is able to judge what is to the best interests of his case.

The evening session was a purely business one, in which the convention went into secret executive work and splendid plans were made out for future development. A resolution was adopted that the convention meet in Ft. Wayne in six weeks. It is the purpose of the organization to meet in different districts until the membership is boosted so that every exhibitor in Indiana will be a member or be in sympathy with the movement. Another resolution was passed that every exhibitor use the utmost precaution in safeguarding the life and property of his patrons and keep his theatre in such repair as to keep the approval of the public.

Another resolution was passed, that whereas the motion picture exhibitors meet on the 28, resolved that the convention of Indianapolis send greetings, congratulations on the progressiveness and activity of the West Virginia Exhibitors and that we extend our assistance and friendship.

Another resolution was as follows: Move that it be the consensus of the meeting that wher any film exchange is furnishing service to any other than legitimate exhibitors, such as the conditions reported at New Castle, Muncie, and elsewhere, be informed that such service is unfair and if not withdrawn, the support of the members of this organization shall be transferred elsewhere.

Move that the secretary write to all the exhibitors and take up the conflicting conditions and adjust same.

The session closed with a banquet at 10 o'clock, which lasted until midnight, and was under the direction of Secretary Bembusch, who acted as toastmaster.

The banquet was a very happy affair, full of stories and fun, and the convention adjourned to meet in Ft. Wayne, March 19th.

A large number of Indiana exhibitors will attend the Ohio State Convention, to be held at Dayton, Ohio, March 26th and 27th.

F. J. REMBUSCH.

CLEVELAND, O., February 8th, 1912.

Editor MOVING PICTURE NEWS:

Dear Sir: On March 26th and 27th the Ohio State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America will hold at Dayton, Ohio, at the National Cash Register Hall.

The Board of Trade is co-operating with the Exhibitors. Prominent men will address the meeting, a trip through the works of the cash register company will be made, and a big time in general is expected. It is the opinion of the writer that good material for a moving picture film will be at hand and will ask you through your valuable publication to extend an invitation to the manufacturers.

Very truly yours,

L. H. WILK.
Sec'y Cleveland L. No. 1.

Our next State meeting will be held in Dayton, Ohio, March 26th and 27th, at the National Cash Register Works' big new hall, which is now being decorated and painted for the occasion.

The first day will be for the purpose of getting acquainted and having a good old-fashioned time. Every exhibitor in Ohio is invited to attend. We believe if they come to Dayton they will be only too glad to join our league.

I went to Dayton and conferred with B. O. Weaver, Lyceum Theatre, and Mr. Clem Kerr. They are co-operating with the Board of Trade and the National Cash Register Works, who are interested in our convention. This will be the biggest meeting ever held by our league.

The first day's program: Meet at the big picture theatre at the Cash Register Works at ten a.m. Senator Foraker, counsel for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is invited to address us. Congressman Cox, of Dayton; the Mayor of Dayton, and the State Attorney for the League, J. J. Lentz, of Columbus, Ohio, have also been invited to deliver us an address.

A trip will be taken through the Cash Register Works. Kinama-color picture will be shown in the afternoon and a big high-class vaudeville show will be given in the evening and a musical entertainment. Every thing will be absolutely free. On the 27th the members of the league will meet for business and will get right down to work, beginning at ten o'clock. There are many things to be discussed and adjusted. At night, a royal banquet will be furnished and splendid music that will make all feel glad that they are members of our league. Bring your wife with you; a plate will be reserved for her; many ladies will attend.

Please advise me if you will attend, as I must know in order to make arrangements. We are depending on you to secure one new member to our league. Please do not disappoint us. Send in the names of every exhibitor you know of, that does not belong to the league. I want to write to them. You are authorized to invite all exhibitors that you know.

If you have not paid your dues please do so. Send them to Max Stearn, treasurer, Exhibit Theatre, Columbus, Ohio. Your dues are fifty cents per month, beginning the first day of last May, 1910 or since you have become a member. A motion picture of the exhibitors will be taken—you should be in it, so when you receive this picture to run at your own theatre it will make you three or four times as much money as it will cost you to attend the convention. Five sets of slides are now being made at the Cash Register Works, at Dayton, which will be sent to you, if you advise me in time—"first come, first served," so if you want the slides write at once. A new membership card will be issued at Dayton. Send me the number of the card you now hold so I can have a new one made out for you. You will also get the big card to hang in front of your theatre.

Fraternally yours,

M. A. NEFF.

WEDDING BELLS

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., and Agnes V. Egan were joined together as man and wife on the 5th inst. Both these good folk are well known to the film industry.

Mr. Cobb was several years with the Edison and Vitagraph Companies in various capacities and as such was exceedingly useful to them. He then became the assistant to the president of the Penn Motion Picture Company, of Philadelphia. Leaving this company he became special representative and associate organizer of the Associated Motion Picture Company, which position he resigned on

UNDER HER WING

Rex Release, February 22

You who read this can stop to think, after you lay aside this synopsis, of many times plus a few more when noble women have made brave sacrifices for unworthy men; perhaps love was the reason and the cause, as well as the cost; perhaps self and selfishness were forgotten to save a sweetheart or a husband, but more rarely it is for a sinning or worthless brother. 'Tis a tale of courage and cowardice, of confidence and treachery, of sacrifice and sorrow, of deception and truth, and the Final Right of Things.

Marion Leonard sees her irresponsible brother's family suffer and want because of his shiftlessness—sees and sorrows. Determined to force her brother to realize and perform his duty toward his family, she obtains a position for him at the office where she is a trusted and confidential cashier.

But vice is vice and crime is crime, and the human hearts which they infest forget honor and gratitude and reason and right. One day the safe is open; Marion is in an adjoining room; the call of the serpent is too strong for ears eager to hear and heed, and Bob falls. The grim ghost of crime enters his heart, forces his fingers to enter the safe, to enter the heart of the girl and slaughter some of its brother-love and human-love, while its leering visage mocks at her truth and trust.

The girl returns. The missing money and the absent brother tell their sordid, familiar tale. She understands, and rushes from the office.

She enters the home, confronts the sinner, demands the money. Reluctantly, sullenly, he hands it to her. . . . Her employer, in the meantime, had entered the office, observed the open safe, the missing money, the vanished cashier, and started straightway for her home. . . . He enters to see her with the money in her hands.

Then it is that it comes to her. Like lightning, the thought takes form, and her course is decided upon. She looks upon her brother's children, wee tots, knowing not the lures of the world and the weakness of its men. She closes her eyes, shuts out the world and its sights and sounds and visions and victories, and still she sees them—sees only two little figures, crying for bread and crying in vain, two little innocent figures with the shadow of disgrace casting itself before their souls through all the years of to-morrow; in her ears ring the din of sin and the clamor of the innocents who must bear its burden—and she confesses her guilt of the theft.

But there is a higher justice! A man's watch-fob is found near the safe. The clue is followed and leads to Bob. Marion, despite her protests that she alone is the guilty one, is liberated. Bob pays the penalty for his own transgression. And the noble girl takes the little wife and the two tots "under her wing," to be for them a more reliant breadwinner than ever their father was.

THE END OF THE CIRCLE

Rex Release, February 25

This world is one of contradictions. The earth is an enigma. The entire mundane plane and plan are an idiosyncrasy—to mortals. Doubtless the Author has a plan for his work, but our eyes can't see very much of the Beyond until they close on the Here. It's like a Henry James novel on a large scale—no one understands it. But the purpose exists, and guided by a mystic suggestion we follow it.

Discouraged and disheartened with her uncompromising poverty and the narrow prospects for improving the bleak conditions, she goes away—with another. It was hard to leave the little tot and the husband vainly struggling against the relentless tide of invincible circumstance, but when the soldier loses hope and heart on the futile battlefield he forgets duty and devotion, and remembers only despair.

In the lonesome night the child prays for the mother-woman, and across the dreary waste of desert life she hears the call—and heeds. The telepathic tie that binds the child's mind to her own transmits the whispered, wistful message, and the mother-heart conquers. The nebulous shadow of night and blight departs; the darksome delusion is vanquished; the withered hope buds and blooms anew, and she takes the narrow path back to those to whom her life is consecrated.

So it might have been written a million years ago, to be called by blind men Destiny.

AN ASSISTED ELOPEMENT

American Release, February 29

Bessie Smith loved Jack Collins, a young machinist, but because Bert Bruce, a rising young attorney, showed her attention, her mother frowned on Jack and urged Bessie to welcome Bruce's attentions.

When Jack called to see Bessie, the mother let him understand plainly that his suit was objectionable, but to the attorney she was graciousness itself. When young people love, opposition usually has the effect of hurrying matters along and Jack secured a marriage license, managed to see Bessie and perfect plans for elopement.

Trivial events sometimes have a great bearing on people's lives. Wrapped in his dream of coming happiness, Jack received a call to repair an automobile that had turned turtle in the outskirts of a neighboring town. It so happened that in this village an epidemic of burglaries had taken place and the constable was on the lookout for suspicious characters and when Jack pedaled into La Mesa on his bicycle the constable saw the kit of tools he carried and held him up. Opening the bag he found it full of tools and decided that Jack was the much sought for burglar.

Jack was haled before the local justice of the peace and the justice was inclined to believe with the constable that Jack was a burglar with his kit of tools. He was placed in jail and, while he knew that he would be able to prove his innocence eventually, he was considerably worried at the thought of not being able to meet Bessie that evening and marry her according to their plan. In despair, it suddenly occurred to him that his rival, Bert Bruce, could identify him and he accordingly induced the constable to ride over to the attorney's office and ask him to come and identify him.

The constable easily located the young attorney and told him Jack was in jail for burglary and that Jack wanted him to come and identify him as an honest mechanic.

But when Bert heard that it was his rival, Jack, in such a predicament he swore he did not know him and that doubtless the constable had captured a desperate criminal.

He knew that Jack would have trouble in proving his innocence without assistance and planned to have a good time with Bessie while Jack was in jail.

Meanwhile, Bessie was waiting for Jack to come and keep his appointment while the constable, returning to the jail, upbraided Jack for sending him on a fool's errand.

Bruce then got out his automobile and called on Bessie and her mother, asking them to go for a ride. Mrs. Smith was delighted, but Bessie, waiting for Jack to elope with her, refused to go along. But her mother was insistent and poor Bessie was forced to go, much against her will, to make one of the party. Riding through the streets of La Mesa, Bruce speeded up his car beyond the limit and took no notice of the constable, who fired his pistol in the air as a signal for another constable farther down the street to stop the car. It happened that this second constable was the one who had arrested Jack; hence the auto party was much surprised to enter the courtroom while Jack was having his preliminary hearing. Of course, Bessie promptly set his honor right as to Jack's innocence. Jack, striking while the iron was hot, called on his honor to immediately marry him and Bessie, holding the unwilling rival for witness.

Jack gave his last bill to the constable to bring Bert to identify him, so he borrowed his marriage fee from the disgruntled attorney. Meanwhile, Mrs. Smith is wondering at the cause of delay. She is enlightened. Having paid his fine for speeding he is compelled to take the newly-wedded pair home in his automobile.

Watch For Sensations In "THE IMPLET"

There is a joint outbreak of desperadoes and horse-thieves. They threaten the lives of the ranchman and his family. In the course of the struggle, in which the desperadoes are worsted, the nobleman escapes without an attempt to help to defend the home and family of his host.

Thus showing his true mettle, the girl repudiates him and permits a real nobleman of the plains to lead her to the altar.

ALGIE, THE MINER

Solax Release, February 28

Algie is in love with Clarice Jackson, but Clarice's father will have none of him. To a real man Algie is unendurable. His "sissy" manner makes him look like a jellyfish, or a milk and water baby of the "touch-me-not-ain't-you-rough" variety. Algie cajoles and is persistent, so in order to be rid of him Mr. Jackson advises Algie that he may have his daughter provided he goes out West for a year and "makes good."

Algie thinks well of the proposition. After many unnecessary preparations he departs. His arrival out West among the rough and ready cowboys gives these hearty men of the plains many hours of amusement. Algie is soon tied down to a job and is bunked with one of the toughest specimens of the ranch. His constant association with this man brings him in touch with many hard places and rough experiences. These hard knocks change Algie completely.

After a year expires, Algie comes East, a wealthy miner, and to the staggering astonishment of all, asks for the hand of Clarice. He emphasizes his claims with a big six-shooter.

BLIGHTED LIVES

Solax Release, March 1

Charles Kingley and George Barr are both in love with Edith Marsden. Edith is partial to Charles. Soon after Charles has proposed to Edith, he finds himself financially embarrassed. At this time his mother's plea for financial assistance increases his embarrassment. As a last hope, after applying to many others for loans, Charles applies to George Barr, his friend, the district attorney.

Barr, not having forgiven Kingley for his success with Edith, decides to ruin his career. Barr sends Kingley a check and when Kingley attempts to cash it, he is held for forgery. Circumstantial evidence is against Charles and he is convicted of forgery.

Conscience, in the meanwhile, plays havoc with Barr. He lives in constant terror of visions and nightmares. Finally, in order to expiate his crime, he goes out and traces Charles' mother and offers her his assistance. He meets Edith at Mrs. Kingley's home and she, seeing the man's softness of spirit and not knowing his offence against her lover, accepts his offer of marriage.

Years later Charles is pardoned. He sets out to avenge himself on the wrecker of his career. He then learns of all that Barr has done for his mother. He leaves Edith's photograph near their home with the inscription, "I forgive you and him."

Some days later on their way out Edith and Mr. Barr find the photograph. Edith understands the significance and turns away from her husband with hate and repudiation. So lives are blighted.

THOSE MARRIED MEN

Great Northern Release, February 24

Three married men make up their minds to enjoy themselves and with the connivance of a butler absent themselves from their respective wives on various causes. One has a business call, another a headache and the last goes to fetch the shrimps, leaving the women folk to be entertained by the local cleric whose intellect evidently does not aspire higher than pinochle and "patience." The three hubbies meet at a pre-arranged place and then proceed to a neighboring fair. Here they enjoy themselves to the full with the various amusements, and with the liquor they consume soon become quite jovial. Meanwhile their wives wonder at their prolonged absence, go in search of the one with the headache, and discover where the others have gone. They ultimately run the men to earth, but instead of showing themselves, steal the basket of the one sent for the shrimps and then return home. Later the trio make their appearance and congratulate themselves on not having been found out until the shrimps are asked for. The one sent to buy them enters into a long harangue about all having been sold out, until his wife produces his basket. Their subterfuge is discovered, and they are last seen being led off to their own rooms by their ears.

THE GUILTY BABY

Thanhouser Release, February 27

The society woman believed that the workingman was the thief, and the case of circumstantial evidence was sufficient to make the police agree with her.

The workingman was repairing a leak in the pipes in the bathroom that opened off her boudoir. The woman entered her room, and in taking off her veil snapped the catch of her necklace. She was about to fix it when her baby entered the room, and she dropped the jewels on her dresser to play with the baby for a moment, and give the child a box of candy. Then she crossed to her desk telephone, turned when the nurse entered to take the child out, and could swear later that the nurse was not near the dresser. A few moments later she turned around in time to see the workingman dash across the room and out. She walked over to the dresser and her necklace was gone.

That was the story she told the police and it was absolutely true in every detail. The workingman was arrested and denied his guilt. He explained his hasty departure by saying that he had a sick wife and that when he left home he told his little girl where he would be during the day and to summon him if her mother grew worse. From the window he saw his daughter in the street, and fearing the worst had rushed out.

Like the statement of the woman, his story was absolutely true. But she was believed, while he was cast into a cell.

The daughter of the prisoner found the thief when the police were all at fault. It was the baby, and the little girl proved it. Still, as the culprit

THE ARAB'S BRIDE

Thanhouser Release, March 1

A wealthy Moor had one treasure he failed to prize at its real value, his beautiful daughter. To him she was simply a woman, a source of expense while a child, and a treasure only if a rich suitor came along to whom she could practically be sold.

In course of time the rich man did appear, and was enthusiastically greeted by the father. The daughter, however, had the temerity to say that she did not love the man. In fact her heart had been won by another, a young Arab sheik she had seen while in the market place. She knew little about him, but was convinced that he was far more worthy than the suitor her father had selected. The father was obdurate, however. He did not deign to argue with the girl, simply commanded her to prepare for the ceremony, and with sighs and tears she did so.

The girl had a faithful attendant, homely, but quick-witted and resourceful. The attendant proposed a plan which she thought had merit, for it could make three persons happy. And affairs came out as she had predicted.

The father was happy because he got the money that had been promised him; the daughter and the sheik were pleased because they married, and the attendant was satisfied, for she won a rich husband, although having neither cash nor beauty. The only unhappy person was the rich suitor, but then he was wealthy, and riches bring their own consolation.

THE ROBBERY AT THE RAILROAD STATION

Champion Release, February 26

Sherlocko and Watso, the world-famous detectives, are quietly ensconced in their office when suddenly there bursts in on their cogitations a railroad official. He is evidently in great distress, and we soon discover its cause. He has met with a loss—a daring robbery has occurred at his station. It is no less than the loss of his lantern. Giving every assurance to the agitated owner of the stolen lantern, the keen-minded sleuths set forth on the trail.

An investigation is made at the station with the aid of the magnifying glass in the minutest detail, when finally his most ingenious methods unfold the clue. They follow it up, and at last—but hold! Let's anticipate. Seated at a table, is a man quietly reading by the light of a lantern. This man is Pecko, and he it is who has caused this terrible upset in the station agent's affairs. But why? His answer to Sherlocko is, he wanted to read by a borrowed light. The sleuths, however, recover the "glim" from him, leaving him his bit of candle, with the fair warning to never again tamper with his neighbor's goods. On the same reel is

A HIGHER POWER

The story deals with the coming of Ruth Claire to the village of Quarryville. At the station she is met and befriended by the young foreman of the quarry. Six months later, we find these two engaged. A sister of the young quarryman calls on a visit, and near the office is insulted by a drunken Mexican. The brother interferes in manly fashion, and an exciting scrap ensues. The young foreman triumphs and the Mexican retires, vowing vengeance.

Later on the wretch attempts to gain an entrance to the home of the foreman's fiancée. The girl battles bravely with him, and at one point douses him with a kettle of boiling water. The foreman's sister dashes off to the quarry and informs her brother and others of the impending danger. The Mexican has at last gained an entrance and forces his way to her room, with the scornful words, "No power on earth can save you now." Outside a storm was raging. The lightning flashed, and that flash struck death to the villain. When the foreman arrived on the scene, it was to discover his sweet bride unharmed.

WRONGLY ACCUSED

Champion Release, February 28

William Johnson is a wealthy widower with an only daughter, Alice. He has also a housekeeper in the person of Mrs. Commons, a lady of former position, but now in reduced circumstances. Mrs. Commons has a boy, Arthur, a splendid fellow, who is in love with the daughter of his mother's employer. A party is given in honor of the eighteenth birthday of Miss Johnson, and Arthur attends the affair with his little sister. Many costly presents are tendered Miss Johnson; among these is a beautiful pearl necklace.

When the party is over and the guests are gone, it is discovered that the necklace has disappeared. It is then distinctly remembered that Arthur Commons was the last to handle the necklace. The upshot of it is that Arthur is accused of being the thief. It is a terrible accusation, and as we witness it, we feel that it couldn't be otherwise. And yet we know that he is innocent, because he carried home his little sister. That little sister had placed the necklace around the neck of her doll, so you see he was innocent.

The clarifying of the situation comes about through the young girl, Alice, who inadvertently discovers the missing necklace adorning the neck of the little girl's doll. The humiliation of the old man over the discovery of the injustice done the younger one is well worth witnessing, and the happiness that comes to all makes a worthy finish and a splendid climax.

A TANGLED COURTSHIP

Powers Release, February 27

A story of complications arising from the interest taken by a young man and his wife in the welfare of their respective proteges.

Bob Hill has a college friend, Ned Langdon, who is laid up with a broken leg, the result of a football game. Mae Hill, the wife, has a dear friend, Irene Bryce, who is sick and confined to her bed. Through the instrumentality of the married couple, the two invalids, who have never met, are drawn into a correspondence with each other. Neither Bob nor Mae know of the other's interest in the correspondence.

When the young people recover their health it is but natural that they should desire a better acquaintance, and a time, place and manner of meeting is arranged. At the last moment, however, both Ned's and Irene's courage fails them and, in order to prevent the courtship from falling through, Bob and Mae take the places of the lovers and meet at the appointed spot. Then something happens. Each accuses the other of unfaithfulness, and both rush back and denounce their friends for their apparent duplicity. The four finally get together, explanations are forthcoming and all ends as it should.

THE PATH OF GENIUS

Powers Release, March 2

The old composer vainly sought for public recognition for years, his sole inspiration being his daughter, who urged him ever onward. He finally composes what he considers his masterpiece, a symphony, and takes it from one music publisher to another, but not one of them will grant him an audience. As he leaves the last place, overcome by disappointment, his hopes blighted, he drops his manuscript on the floor. One of the partners of the concern observes the music and picking it up, glances over it and hums it. Becoming interested, he sits at the piano and plays it through and, realizing its remarkable merit, he seeks the old musician and expresses his admiration for the symphony. The daughter is delighted over the young man's complimentary criticism upon the work and learning that he is, also, the director of a noted orchestra, she urges her father to allow the director to announce the music as his own composition and have his orchestra play it at the next concert. The old composer has been cheated so often that he hesitates about accepting such a proposition, but his daughter and the young musician finally prevail upon him.

The eventful night arrives. The young director has the old composer lead the orchestra, the symphony is played and the audience is thrilled by the wonderful music. During the ovation which ensues, the young director is called before the audience as the author. He goes out, but he leads by the hand the old musician whom he introduces as the man to whom all the honor is due. The old composer thus becomes famous overnight, while the young director receives as his reward the hand of the composer's daughter.

St. Patrick's Day is to be celebrated by the Powers Motion Picture Company by the release of a well-known Irish drama, which is now in course of production. This feature film is to be released four days after the two-reel picture play presenting Mildred Holland in "The Power Behind the Throne."

All lovers of the true Irish drama will, no doubt, look forward with the most pleasurable anticipations to the presentation of this film which is being produced with that careful attention to detail which always marks the work of the Powers Company. This company has also other good things in store, the announcement of which will be made later on.

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL

Eclair Release, February 27

The Guardian Angel in this great drama of today proves to be a sweet-faced child who intervenes at just the critical moment to save a young wife from her thoughtless folly, and a fond husband from treading the downward path.

No prettier scene could be imagined than that enacted by the trio when father and mother are again brought together through a child's influence. Not an exaggeration, but a true-to-life, instructive, meritable production.

GETTING DAD MARRIED

Eclair Release, February 29

Ellen's mother is dead and she becomes Dad's housekeeper. She wants to marry Harry and succeeds in obtaining Dad's consent by promising to stay with him until he secures another housekeeper.

Applicants are tried but they fail to please Dad and Ellen has about given up hope when she conceives the idea of getting Dad married, so with Harry's help they advertise for a wife.

Out of a mass of letters they select five and ask them to call on Dad. Among the first four to call, there's a fat widow, a deaf widow and two impossible old maids. Dad's fortitude exhausts after the fourth one has nearly kidnapped him but to the motive underlying all these visits, Dad is both ignorant and unsuspecting.

Finally the fifth one rings the bell and Dad escapes. Ellen cautiously peeks out of the window before she asks this last one in. Dad in passing out the front way sees the one in question and he is impressed, for No. 5 is "some woman," a blonde widow, with "all the looks." Ellen admits her and Dad slips back in the house. Dad "falls" for the widow and Ellen and Harry marry. Dad gets married also, so all's well that ends well.

THE INTERRUPTED TELEGRAM

Eclair Release, March 3

George Delorme receives a telegram that his presence is indispensable at the factory. So he must leave his family though his little daughter is very sick. They will let him know, even the worst, so the mother says before he goes.

A few days have elapsed, the child is saved. Mother remembers her promise and gives a telegram to the doctor to send it to her husband: "State of loved daughter, hopeless after your departure, has suddenly become better. She will soon be cured."

The telegram is delivered to the telegraph office. In order to close her shutters the girl in charge of the P. O. goes out. A tramp, noticing she is out, goes in; he may find something there to take. Hardly has the woman transmitted the first part of the telegram, "State of loved daughter hopeless," than the tramp jumps on her and ties her up. The telegram is delivered to its address.

Mr. Delorme comes back at night to the hotel and asks whether there is a telegram for him. Yes. He takes it and reads: "State of loved daughter hopeless," and falls into the servant's arms.

He comes back home without sending word. On her bed, he beholds his daughter asleep. She hears noise and wakes up. Delorme can't believe his eyes, calls his wife who comes in quite happy. At the same moment Mr. Delorme is informed that a burglar has attempted the life of the telegraph operator and for that reason only a part of the telegram has been transmitted, and so everything is explained.

BOUGHT

Majestic Release, February 25

A tiny waif left adrift in a mining camp grows up to girlhood under the care of a besotted guardian—the owner of the chief saloon and gambling resort of the camp.

At the age of sixteen she finds herself exposed to continual insult by the habitues of the place and finds but little protection from her self-styled guardian.

A newcomer to the place, James Halpin, known only to the boys as a hard poker player and a quick man with a gun, comes to the girl's rescue one night when a drunken miner, flushed with liquor and success, tries to kiss the child and when rebuked buys the right to a kiss from her unprincipled guardian. Virginal by instinct, the child fights out of the miner's arms, and when again ready to clasp her, the miner finds himself looking into the barrel of Jim's gun. The bag of dust is returned and the guardian, protesting at its loss, Jim dares him to play a hand of poker for the girl—"a thousand dollars against the kid." The deal is made and the frightened, wondering child is ordered by her guardian to leave the place in the company of the man who had just won possession of her.

Her heart palpitating, fearful of she knows not what, the child finds herself alone with Jim in his rough log shack.

Realizing the child's fear of him, nnd tenderly appreciating her youth and innocence, Jim sends the girl to his sister living in Chicago with instructions to give the kid a new start in life and the best in education, culture and surroundings that the market affords.

Spurred on by the necessity of raising the wherewithal for the little girl, Jim works the next four years as never before and then a lucky strike places him independently on his feet. He hits the trail for Chicago to see what sort of a lady has been made of his kid. He arrives on New Year's Eve and just misses his sister and the girl who, under the escort of a natty young gentleman of clubs and leisure, have gone to a New Year's Eve celebration at one of the great restaurants of the city.

Jim, regardless of his rough clothes, follows them but arrives after the departure of his sister, who istaken ill and has left the party, refusing to spoil the young people's pleasure, and, leaving the girl unchaperoned, has returned to her home and the care of her maid.

After her departure the fun, which has been great enough, grows more boisterous and all over the great restaurant is seen the edifying spectacle of men, women and girls of all ages permitting themselves a license in behavior which any other evening in the year would shock them to contemplate.

The atmosphere becomes heavy with smoke and the fumes of liquor, and at the table Jim is watching so intently the young people lose all restraint, all except one, as Jim notes with pride and joy. His little kid consistently refuses the wine pressed upon her and then to Jim's rage the young fellow who had escorted her to the party, sadly under the influence of the grape, attempts to kiss the girl. The memory of a similar struggle of resistance by the girl four years back in surroundings so different surges through Jim's brain and careless of appearance he goes to them and hurls the insolent youngster across a table.

The girl, freed, recognizes Jim at once and he takes her from the place to his sister's home; there he misinterprets the girl's tears to mean that she is in love with the young fellow he has treated so unceremoniously and his big heart, full of contrition, and determined that his kid shall have everything she wants, he returns to the restaurant and quieting the young fellow's fury by the assurance that the girl is weeping her heart out at home because of the night's trouble, he takes the conscience-stricken young gentleman to the girl to plead for forgiveness and to beg her consent to be his wife. The young man finds himself promptly refused, and Jim finds the girl still in tears. His dismay is immense, his sorrow acute. He finally learns that there is only one way he can make the kid perfectly happy—he finds that the memory of the night he protected her four years before has never left her; he finds that she feels her only happiness and safety lie in the strength of his arms about her, and quite oddly Jim realizes that he has never known what happiness was before.

BLIND MAN'S BUFF

Nestor Release, February 19

Robert Morris, Superintendent of Streets, while examining some newly-finished paving work, puts on a pair of green goggles to protect his eyes from the strongly reflected light, and as he is tapping the pavement with a cane to test it, he is mistaken for a blind man by Mildred Black, who offers her assistance to him in crossing the street.

Morris, struck by the appearance of the girl, and desiring to make her acquaintance, does not tell her that he is blind, and exchanges cards with her.

She, much impressed by Morris, solicits the help of her friend, Doctor Horton, a famous ey specialist, giving him Morris' card, and asking him to call and see what he can do for the young man.

Horton, when he calls, finds a mutual friend at Morris' house, and the three men plan to further a love affair between Mildred and Morris.

To this end, the doctor writes her that he can cure the "blind man," but wishes some suitable person to read to the patient and accompany him on walks in the park. Mildred, herself, decides to do this, and the patient is progressing famously with his courting when an accident reveals the truth to the girl.

During one of their walks in the park, a couple of toughs pick a quarrel with the supposed blind man, and are surprised when Morris tears the bandage from his eyes and proceeds to hand out a thorough and much-needed thrashing to them.

Mildred, learning thus of the deception which has been practised, leaves him and refuses to ever see him again.

Morris and his friend call in the doctor and insist that since his suggestion has caused this trouble it is up to him to straighten out the tangled love affair. The jolly doctor manages to make the girl believe that he has cured the supposed blind man, and she forgives Morris, who at once avails himself of this favorable opportunity to propose, and he is accepted, presumably leaving the true explanation of the affair to some more auspicious time.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT

Nestor Release, February 24

Silas and Mirandy are young, married and happy. They dwell "down on the farm," and life for them is as placid and as full of joyful ripples as the rivulet near the quaint old farmhouse.

Miss Bright, the new school teacher, comes to the village and makes her home with Silas and Mirandy. A case of "two's a company and three's a crowd" soon develops. Mirandy shows her displeasure quite plainly and keeps Silas busy laughing away her unfounded jealousy.

Mirandy, feeling badly slighted and much sinned against, finally leaves home intent on getting a divorce. When she finds that the family lawyer is out of town, she puts up at the hotel for the night. Silas' strenuous efforts to locate his missing wife land him at the same hotel. Here, a somewhat jolly and semi-intoxicated man, having the room between those of Silas and Mirandy, creates a big commotion, which brings out into the hall the runaway wife and the pursuing husband, who fall into each other's arms, kiss and make up. The pretty teacher, however, is obliged to take her bright personality elsewhere, and happiness is enthroned once more. On same reel is

TIGHTWAD ALMOST SAVES A DOLLAR

Why should Mrs. Tightwad pay a dollar to have the ashes carted away? Why such uncalled for waste of money? Moreover, a dollar saved is a dollar earned. Thus soliloquizes Tightwad, and prompt action follows his soliloquy. He upbraids his better half for her unseemly extravagance, dismisses the man and embarks upon his dollar-saving expedition by doing his own ash-carting. Unfortunately he selects the wrong dumping ground and is unceremoniously dragged to jail by a lynx-eyed officer of the law.

Mrs. Tightwad is apprised by phone of her lord and master's predicament, and A. Trimmer, the legal light, is called in to liberate Tightwad from his plight. Lawyer Trimmer trims his client to the tune of eighty dollars in addition to a twenty-dollar fine which Tightwad has to pay. The money loss is indeed a bitter pill for Tightwad, but the tongue lashing he receives from the Mrs. is—well, it's the unkindest cut of all. On the same reel is

ROLLICKING RED'S BIG LARK

Nestor Release, February 21

Rollicking Red is an outlaw who is being pursued by the sheriff and his posse, including Joe Curtis. The outlaw evades his pursuers by doubling back on his tracks in time to see Joe fall from his horse. The posse ride on ignorant of the accident. Red rides back to Joe, helps him on his horse, then after tying a handkerchief over his eyes, takes him to his shack. He gets Joe's promise that he will not tell what he sees, and removes the bandage from his eyes, dresses Joe's wounds, takes care of him in the shack, cooks his meals, etc., until he has recovered sufficiently to ride home. Again blindfolding him, he takes the young man within sight of his place, removes the handkerchief and points out the way to him.

Joe gets home safely, and later, when a new sheriff is wanted, Joe runs and is elected. He is greatly puffed over his election, and the compliments of his friends and sweetheart add to his vanity. One morning a man from another county brings Joe a note from the sheriff of another county, and a placard asking for the arrest of Rollicking Red, mentioning a large reward. Joe recognizes the picture to be his friend of the shack, and as he stealthily lifted the handkerchief from his eyes from time to time during his ride home from the shack, Joe feels sure of the way. So thinking it will be a big feather in his cap to capture Rollicking Red alone, he refuses the offered help of his men, and sets out alone toward Red's shack.

Red sees him coming, and steps around the house to observe his actions. As he knocks, Joe throws back his coat and displays his sheriff's badge. Red is then on guard. He comes forward, invites Joe inside, always carefully keeping his hand on his revolver. Joe watches Red closely, but is never able to get the drop on him. At last Joe falls asleep; Red then cautiously removes the cartridges from his gun, (Joe's gun) and as Joe sits up with a start, calmly lights his pipe. At once thinking he has caught Red unprepared, he draws his gun and commands the outlaw to throw up his hands. This is what Red wanted. He goes to Joe, covering him with his gun, and with Joe's handcuffs he handcuffs the young man and commands him to lie down until morning.

The next morning Red has breakfast ready. He gives Joe some, then pins medals on the sheriff, which Red has made during the night from tin pans, reading: "Reward for bravery," "Hero," and others of like caliber. The outlaw then brings Joe out, puts him on horse and mounts his own. He then takes Joe to the outside of the saloon, where he is sure to find the new sheriff's men. Red rides up shooting and calling to the boys that he has brought them their brave sheriff, and before the others can recover from their surprise, he turns and rides away. Joe is a general laughing stock for all; even his sweetheart and her mother, who come along, turn from him. Joe runs off to the blacksmith's to sever the handcuffs, while the men discuss electing a new sheriff.

THE IMMIGRANT'S VIOLIN

Imp Release, February 26

Lost in New York! This is a story that will go straight to the hearts of millions of immigrants who have gone through at least part of the experiences of the little Italian girl, Lora, who arrived with her mother and father and a favorite violin to start a new life in the metropolis of the new world. New York is to the young European mind a most amazing city in which to begin that life. It is the gateway; the crowded cosmopolitan gateway to El Dorado. It is the greatest aggregation of conflicting human elements, races and nationalities.

Lora and her parents were met at the pier by a friend, but on their way to their new home she becomes separated from them and is lost, stranded in the downtown section of the city. Her tears attract the attention of Mrs. Radley, a society woman, who humanely takes the girl to a police station. She is attracted to Lora, who, clinging to her benefactress, finds herself in the lady's home.

Mrs. Radley has a son, Albert, whose heart goes out to the beautiful Italian violinist.

Lora becomes a talented musician and she is invited to appear at an East Side club entertainment and here she is recognized by her poor parents. For a moment she is indifferent to them and faints at the recognition. She is taken immediately to the home of her adopted mother.

But filial duty asserts itself and the girl, recovering, decides to seek out her parents, and so, exchanging her fine clothes for her old Italian garments, she visits them, is reconciled to them and they show their happiness at having found her.

Mrs. Radley, in the meantime, has discovered the absence of her protege. Albert is distressed by the girl's disappearance, but he traces her by means of the number of the taxi which she orders.

Down in the tenement district he succeeds in finding her, the girl he loves. He offers to marry her and proffers an engagement ring which she returns to him. But he tells her that he truly loves her, in spite of her humble surroundings and origin. The protestations of Albert overcome the girl's scruples and the story ends with the engagement of the poor but beautiful Italian girl to the son of her benefactress.

King Baggot plays the part of the lover, and in the part of Lora, Vivian Prescott makes her first appearance in an Imp drama.

BEAT AT HIS OWN GAME

Imp Release, March 2

Comedy illustrative of one of the many variations which the theme of jealousy may be made to assume in everyday life is the basis of this story.

Harry Spencer is jealous of his fiancee, Pearl Brown, and Pearl is jealous of Harry, and each resolves to cure the other. Harry persuades a friend to dress up as a woman and send him (her) to commiserate with Pearl. He did it so thoroughly that Harry became alarmed at the display of affection on the part of the disguised man toward the unsuspicious girl.

After a series of cross purposes, however, the disguise of the spurious woman is accidentally revealed and he is ejected from the house. Harry

THE RIGHT CLUE

Mrs. Phillips sent her confidential business man a parcel of bonds to deposit in a place of safety. Mr. Forbes, the gentleman in question, was about to put them in a safe when an interruption took him from the room, and the precious papers found their way into the waste-paper basket, and, subsequently, into the waste can out of doors.

A detective being called in, discovered in the course of his investigations some cigar ash and comes to the conclusion that the man who smokes this kind of cigar must be the recipient or custodian of the lost bonds. The detective following up this clue examines the cigars smoked by a great many persons, much to their discomfiture and his own inconvenience.

Finally, he comes across a policeman smoking the identical brand of cigar and this fact leads to the discovery that the lost documents are concealed in the policeman's hat, the same being placed there by his sweetheart, the cook, who thinks the hat too large to be becoming and thus pads it out sufficiently for a good fit. And so the cigar ash proved the right clue which led to the recovery of the documents and their return to the proper owner.

The leading feature of the film is the ingenious and logical way the story is worked out. It is provocative of much laughter and abounds in amusing situations. The character of the detective is played by W. R. Daly, who gives a burlesque rendering of the part of the sleuth. Mr. Shay is the man of business who mislaid the bonds, and the parts of the policeman and the cook whom he goes to visit are humorous in the extreme.

As an example of the logical working out of the comedy plot in "The Right Clue" it will probably appeal to close students of well-constructed moving picture comedies.

THE ROSE OF CALIFORNIA

Imp Release, February 29

A picturesque story of Southern California in the early forties in which the life and sentiment of that period are preserved.

Don Enrique Carrillo, a Spanish ranchero, is living with his wife and daughter, Donna Rosa and Senora Rosa in the stately style peculiar to that time. The innovations of the new world have not yet reached there. The Mission Church, presided over by Padre de La Pena, still exists, and the family is attended by Pedro, the Mission Indian servant.

Into this picturesque life, amidst the beautiful surroundings of Southern California, there comes a young U. S. Government official from Washington, D. C.

Rosa has never seen such a type before, or if she has seen him she has retained her heart, but now she loses it to handsome George MacCurdy They promptly fall in love one with the other and despite the protest of her mother and father they hold clandestine meetings and, subsequently, are married by the good old Padre. No sooner is the marriage ceremony performed than the wrathful Don Enrique appears and attempts to stab the bridegroom. During the conflict Rosa hastens off to the priest and persuades him to intervene between the combatants.

His priestly authority is sufficient to deter Don Enrique from his murderous act.

Meanwhile, George hurries away with his bride and the two, on horseback, escape and ride away in the distance where safety lies.

The story ends with the bridegroom waving his hat at the disappointed father.

The charm of "The Rancho Rose" lies in the simplicity of the story and the wonderful beauty of the settings. The scenes in the picture were taken at the San Gabriel Mission in California. This Mission was built in the year 1771 by the Spanish Mission Fathers. The grapevine in the Mission yard shown in one of the scenes was planted by the Mission Fathers in 1775 and is still bearing fruit.

"THE COOK'S REVENGE"

Rex Release, March 1st

Jones, a jolly young bachelor, had the occasion to dismiss his cook. The lady departed in tears, mingled with indignation, and vowed an awful vengeance. Going to a printer, she got him to set up an enticing notice announcing that Mr. Jones would adopt as many children as one cared to bring to him. Poor Jimmy Jones found himself the father of a very large family in the course of a few hours, and the cook went elsewhere with a contented smile, saying "Vengeance is mine."

On the same reel—

"BILL'S MOTOR"

This film is a most decidedly clever display of the versatile talents and unprecedented daring of Bill, the Lux comedian. It deals with his alarming adventures as the owner of a motor car, and will produce a thrill unequaled in even the most exciting of dramas. After a very charming trip, in which Bill delights in many daring capers, the car comes to a dead stop. Discerning that something is wrong with the works, Bill searches for trouble with a match. Yes! He is feeling a little better now, thank you!

"BILL AND THE LIONS"

In search of something toothsome, two hungry lions escape and enter the house of Billy Lux. He endeavors to escape them, but they are hungry. Even when he hides in a suit of armor the lions still endeavor to get at him. This constitutes the first occasion on record upon which lions have shown partiality for "tinned" meat. They are prevented from "getting the distinguished William in their midst" by the arrival of their keeper.

On the same reel—

"THE SKIVVY'S GHOST"

Mr. and Mrs. Pottle lead a very quiet life until they are disturbed by rumors of ghosts. They have horrible dreams at night, that send them about in fear and trembling throughout the day. One night they go out to dine with some friends. This proves a good opportunity for Polly, their maid of all work to receive her lover, who is a trooper in the Horse Marines. The gallant soldier feels a cold shiver run down his back as footsteps are heard upon the stairs, and Polly's master and mistress come home unexpectedly. Polly hastily hides her lover by placing the cover of an armchair over him. Into this armchair Mrs. Pottle serenely pops as soon as she enters the room. The gallant soldier, beneath the cover, takes the old lady in his arms and rushes off with her. This dreaded confirmation of their grave suspicions leaves no room in the minds of Mr. Pottle and his wife to doubt that they are victims of some supernatural visitor. The soldier finally gets away in safety, but not until he has deposited his burden in a safe place and experienced many amusing adventures.

"DURBAR IN KINEMACOLOR" TO OPEN AT NEW YORK THEATRE

Announcement is made by Klaw & Erlanger that the Kinemacolor Company of America will present their new production entitled, "The Durbar in Kinemacolor," on February 19 at the New York Theatre.

The natural color motion pictures depicts all the events of the royal visit to India and the proclamation of King-Emperor George V. at Delhi of his sovereignity of all India and the Far East, according to usage. The new color films aggregate enough to make up three splendid productions, but by elimination the best possible program has been picked out and will make up a two-hour showing, included in which will be reproduced all the words and music of each ceremony.

The events were all taken by the official Cinematographer to the Crown, Charles Urban, also the inventor of the wonderful process, and a corps of thirty expert assistants.

The "Royal Visit to Bombay" is the first of the series—there were assembled five million natives to do honor to their supreme ruler from over the seas, and the celebration there arranged exceeded in lavishness the idea which an Occidental mind can conceive. The second number is called "Preparing for Durbar," and the scenes at Delhi, where half a million tents were pitched on the broad plain, is displayed. From every part of Hindustan the chiefs and their gorgeous retinues gathered. Their splendor of apparel and weird trappings combined to make pictures kaleidoscopic in brilliancy, and yet so flickerless and perfect that one can but imagine that he is looking through a plate-glass window at the actual happening.

"The State Entry at Delhi" has never been equaled for magnificence in the history of the world, the Durbar proper, where a thousand sovereign princes paid honor to their new Grand Mogul was an exhibition of supremacy such as Alexander the Great never dreamed of.

Through the whole visit were marvelous pageants. At Calcutta hundreds of elephants were in line in a giant procession, in the forest these same great beasts bore His Majesty as he hunted the lion and tiger. Fifty thousand troops of every description were reviewed at another time —the elephant and camel corps vied with the trained lancers for "King's Own" banners, the greatest mark of honor a regiment can receive.

Reviews, state receptions, polo matches and various races followed each other in bewildering succession, and ever the glory of the East lent color and novelty to Their Majesty's programme.

Everything from their arrival in their great Empire to their departure for home has been recorded by the Kinemacolor process, and a specimen of each film will repose in the Tower of London for future generations, together with those of the Coronation, which have just passed their 500th anniversary performance at the Kinemacolor Theater on Fortieth Street.

DURBAR AT DELHI REPRODUCED

A Remarkable Historic Achievement in Kinemacolor

The most facile of pens could not do justice to the wonderful reproductions of the Durbar in Kinemacolor. We have frequently tried to figure in our minds from books, pictures and black and white kinematograph subjects what Oriental splendor means, but it has required a great stretch of imagination. It is only after a display such as that which Kinemacolor now presents that one begins to realize what the opulence of the East really is. The native princes in their shining vestments of gold and rich cloth, whose varied hues to the merest detail are brought home with the correctness to be equalled by no brush or other process; the natives in their teeming thousands with their contrasts in physiognomy and costume are brought with reality of life to our view; the buildings with their crumbling stones are pictures in sombre tones which contrast in remarkable manner with the vivid white stone modern edifices with their colored ornamentation and gilded cupolas; the sheen of the horses, the glow on the faces of the colored people, the mystic atmosphere, the gloss of the silks, the shading of the nap on the plush garments, the glitter and lustre of the remarkable jewels, the tones of the various scarlets and purples, the golden carriages and the wonderful trappings of the camels, horses and other animals make impressions on our minds which will never be effaced, and prove how false our previous notions were and how little of the reality newspaper descriptions can convey.

What surprises one besides the truthfulness of these pictures is the clearness and sharpness of every item. Remarkable positions had been apparently chosen and obtained to secure the most crucial and important features, and marvelous stereoscopic effects. The fact that important items in the foreground of the pictures were emphasized by the wonderful clear vista extending for many miles as a background, was very impressive. Kinemacolor achieved a victory at the Coronation, but this series of Durbar pictures will astound sightseers in every part of the world because of these and hundreds of other surprising features.

Another fact which strikes one is that although some of the still life pictures (if one can call them so) of native types and buildings are remarkable for their detail, yet rapid studies such as the polo match and point-to-point races are clearer and more decided than any similar black-and-white pictures ever made. The tremendous field makes it one of the most difficult pictures a black-and-white camera could contend with, and yet in Kinemacolor every detail appears sharp and distinct, thus proving the fallacy that has several times been asserted that Kinemacolor only excels with still subjects.

Kinemacolor is the last word in the art of photography, and these films have been taken under such perfect conditions, and with such unique facilities afforded the operators, that it would be impossible to improve upon them.

All the principal ceremonies, processions and pageants in Bombay, Delhi, and Calcutta are depicted in their gorgeous colors and detail, and the scenes at the Coronation Durbar at Delhi, probably one of the most epoch-making events in the history of India are shown in all the glories of Oriental pomp, magnificence and splendor. The reproduction of the colors is truly marvelous, and affords a striking example of the perfection to which this branch of the photographic art has been brought. Mr. Urban, inventor of the Kinemacolor process, who has had great experience of animated photography in all parts of the world, says the Durbar pictures are the finest he has ever taken, and far exceed the results he obtained at the Coronation

Kinemacolor in New York City has become an institution unique in character, and that it will soon become indispensable to the public is an acknowledged truism. It makes possible the witnessing of important events in distant lands without the inconvenience of a journey—to the majority impossible. At the time of the Coronation of Their Majesties King George V. and Queen Mary of England, last year, a far better view of the State ceremonies in London was afforded in these natural color motion pictures than could be obtained by the most privileged spectators at the crowning festivities. It must be understood that the process which reproduces all these happenings with such marvelous realism is a scientific system of color photography, the colors are photographed, not applied afterward by brush work.

ARE YOU A LIVE WIRE?

A good live exhibitor readily realizes the necessity of good advertising and is prompt to take advantage of something that will increase his receipts. A great many exhibitors are afraid to make any changes in their business for fear it will interfere with some old fogy notion, pertaining to that particular thing, which has been handed down through ages and is a part of ancient history.

THE TREUHAND INFORMATION

Foreign Representatives and Buyers

It is an absolute marvel in these days of hurry and bustle to take a bird's-eye view of the different money saving, and time saving devices and institutions which we have.

On the 19th floor of the Germania Building, 50 Union Square, is the New York representation, one of the largest and most reliable importing firms in the world, the Treuhand Information.

Through this firm can be obtained information concerning anything that one could mention in the way of marketable goods, also samples of European goods, quotation of prices, etc. Through the efficient services of this firm many of the large wholesale and retail stores of this city and other large cities, extending north into Canada and south into Australia, are enabled to buy their goods at the best prices and without making the trip to and fro to the European manufacturing centers. This service costs them nothing; a commission is charged by them at the other end on the amount of the order sent in.

Branches of the Treuhand firm are to be found in London, Berlin, Paris and other large centers. Buyers for the firm are stationed at all the large manufacturing centers, each an expert in his own line of goods; gloves, linens, silks, and so forth, have all their respective buyers at the different reliable manufacturing centers. Recently an order for linen for car seats from one of the American railroads was sent by the Treuhand Information to the amount of several hundred thousand dollars. Like orders are a frequent recurrence at the offices of this firm.

Recently a New York motion picture concern ordered from them second-hand European films at a quotation of 3 cents a yard. And at any time information can be obtained by moving picture dealers regarding prices of film or other goods pertaining to the moving picture, with a feeling of confidence that the best possible prices will be made for them.

Mr. Fritz Kurtzhalss, the genial manager of the New York branch of the Treuhand Information, has just returned from a trip to Honolulu.

A REFRESHING RELIANCE PRODUCTION

Reliance exhibited to a number of the press this week an interesting production entitled "The Better Man."

This production will interest specially those who are fortunate enough to have recollections of the old-time taffy pull. It is a film ripe with many beautiful snow scenes, moonlight sleigh rides, country dances, etc. The tense moment in the story is when deciding to elope with the man of her choice she finds him on the road beating his horse. The thought flashes through her sensible little head that a man who is not kind to his beast will not be kind to his wife, and the story ends in her abiding after all by her father's choice. It is a good picture, refreshing in its portrayal of the simple life—"true to nature," as we overheard a contemporary remark. It is a picture that is bound to go—it will make its own way without any boosting. It is one of those stories that seen on the screen once leaves a craving to look upon it again. And it is one which of a cold winter night one can sit and look in the fire and dream about.

The Natural History series of the Reliance deserves special mention also. This is a series fit for use in any educational institution. Their latest effort in this line shows the shipping of the boa-constrictor when he will not feed, also the timber rattler as he makes his deadly strike, and the asp—the kind that is supposed to have killed Cleopatra.

This natural history series have been photographed by Mr. Gobbett, a camera man of wide experience, who has accompanied several African expeditions of recent date, and who was the photographer of the humane methods of animal capture used by "Buffalo Jones."

CHICAGO LETTER

In viewing several first-run independent releases during the past week, I noted that the title of the picture is given throughout the entire reel, as each time a sub-title is flashed upon the screen the title of the picture is also shown. This idea has only been carried out by the Reliance Company up to date, but without a doubt will be followed by the rest of the independent manufacturers. It is a great aid for any one going into a theater during the showing of the picture to more easily divine the plot of the story. Also, there are many reels now in use that have no titles on them, and the inconvenience caused by these will be eliminated by the new method of the Reliance Company, if carried into use by all other manufacturers.

When speaking of fireproof five-cent theaters, say Hermosa, and you name the most fireproof five-cent theater in Chicago. That is what the former fire chief, Mr. Horan, said about it. When the Hermosa Theater was inspected by the fire marshal of its district he was so pleased with it that he had the former chief go out on the west side and see a real five-cent theater. The Hermosa Theater is owned and managed by Mr. C. A. Anderson, vice-president of the Exhibitors' League of America, Illinois Branch 2. The exterior of the Hermosa Theater is made attractive by a large arch filled with Electric bulbs. Also, a large arc light adds greatly to the effect. The interior is beautifully decorated, and is fireproof in every detail, with the exception of the floor and chairs, which are wooden. The ventilation is produced by six ceiling fans and a large Bentley air fan, 5 feet by 6 feet, in the rear, just over the stage, which gives plenty of pure air at all times. To Mr. Anderson credit is due for the success of the theater which has steadily increased in the good will and favor of its many patrons who when emerging from the theater show by their pleasant and smiling countenances that they have thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

Mr. E. Miller, manager of the Uno Theater, at Twenty-sixth Street and Cottage Grove Avenue, who was formerly using licensed service at this theater, has arranged for independent service at the Standard Film Exchange. Mr. Miller stated in regard to independent service that he is well pleased with the business it has brought him, and if it keeps up he will be a big booster for the Independents.

Takito Ogawa & Co. wish to inform the trade that they have issued their new catalogue containing a list of various premiums, especially appropriate for increasing the attendance of moving picture theaters, and will gladly mail one on request from their office at 156 West Lake Street, Chicago.

In an interview with Mr. A. G. Spencer, manager of the National Film Brokers—I learn that they have met with great success booking the "Christian Martyrs," Gaumont s wonderful historical release of January 27th. This picture is, without question, the greatest one-reel feature ever released, with acting, photography and settings that are superb. The National makes a specialty in dealing in feature releases and commercial run films. Mr. Spencer states that business is great and that every week since the first of the year has shown a very satisfactory increase in the number of customers served.

The Deeanell Feature Film Company, a new concern organized for the express purpose of renting feature films to exhibitors, has opened offices in the Marquette Building, Chicago, and is ready for business with a complete stock of new and up-to-the-minute features. The new company is under the management of old heads, and we hope will steadily prosper under the present management.

Mr. Ed. Niquette, proprietor of the Niquette Opera House, at Two Rivers, Wisconsin, has arranged for a high-class independent film service for his theater. Mr. Niquette will run some excellent feature subjects during the opening week and hopes to make a start with a moving picture programme that will please and get approval from his many patrons. In an interview with Mr. Niquette he stated that owing to the extreme cold weather during the winter months in Wisconsin it was almost impossible to put on attractions that would draw out-of-town patrons, and for this reason a good programme will not pay during the cold weather, but as soon as weather gets warmer a programme will be shown at the Niquette Opera House that will astonish all in its territory.

The Boulevard Theater, at 1535 West Taylor Street, just east of Ashland Avenue, has changed hands, and is now under the management of Mr. Morris H. Livingston, well known in the film circuits throughout Illinois. When Mr. Livingston took charge of the Boulevard Theater it was badly run down by a cheap vaudeville programme, and knowing that more could be accomplished with a straight picture programme Mr. Livingston immediately arranged to show three reels of pictures, by which he has steadily brought the Boulevard Theater into the good graces of his customers. The pictures are played by a very good drummer and piano player who add to the effect splendidly. The operator, a member of Local No. 2, is also good in his work, as the picture is always bright and clear, and no fault can be found with it. The change that has taken place at this theater is easily seen, which speaks well for the ability of the present manager.

Another theater that has recently changed hands is the Castle Theater at Taylor and Center Streets. It is now owned by Messrs. Berling and Tague. There reels of independent pictures are now drawing the big business that the Castle boasts of. Charley C. Ison, the operator, a member of Local No. 2, uses a Viascope machine to produce his pictures, and although pleased with it, a new Motiograph machine will soon be installed in place of the present Viascope. The seating capacity of the theater is 300, and the evening's programme consists of three reels of pictures, one spot and one illustrated song.

NESTOR SHOWS FINE PHOTOGRAPHY

The Nestor releases reviewed this week show excellent work, not alone in action, subject, choice of location, and all the etceteras accompanying a good picture, but also in photography. Nestor is certainly going away ahead on that end.

"Rollicking Red's Big Lark," for release Feb. 21st, is a very exciting Western, full of ginger, dash and beautiful settings; it is finely acted, and abounds with close-up photographic studies that are a positive delight. S. J. Bainbridge, as the "heroic" sheriff, is very good, and shares the honors with Mr. Conway.

"Red" is made out of the right stuff, even though circumstances have outlawed him. His genial disposition and his dashing ways have won him the nickname "Rollicking." As played by Jack Conway, Rollicking Red is indeed a likeable and capital character.

This splendid Western picture opens with "Red" in full flight and doing his cleverest to dodge the sheriff and his posse. By double-tracking, he outwits his pursuers, and as he watches from a point of vantage the onrushing cowboys, he notices one of them, Joe Curtis, take a terrible fall. Unseen by his companions, Joe is left behind. "Red" goes to his assistance, and, blindfolded, takes him to his shack. When able to return home, Curtis is escorted half of the way, and promises the outlaw that he will keep mum.

Later Joe becomes a sheriff, and thinking of making a big coup, he tells the boys that single-handed he will capture the elusive desperado. He reckons without "Red," however, whose captive he becomes. After having considerable fun with the hapless sheriff, Red leads him back to town and vanishes before the boys recover from their bewilderment. Poor Curtis loses the sheriffalty, also the love and reprect of his intended wife.

"Blind Man's Buff" is a pretty comedy of unique type, presented by Nestor. Also "Tightwad Almost Saves a Dollar," and "Grand Canyon" scenes follow out the usual fine style of Nestor work.

London daily newspapers have been advertising the famous December 14 release of the American Film Mfg. Co., entitled "Santa Catalina," much more extensively than any other negative made in America, if one can judge from the quantity of space devoted to this remarkable picture by the Daily Mail, London Post and similar publications.

The picture was also widely advertised on its appearance in America, as being the first and only negative ever made showing the famous submarine gardens of the Pacific Ocean with kelp, an octopus, coral, sea-weed and other under-water vegetation.

Ft. Smith, Ark.—Jake Wells, Auby Mittanthal and Clarence Weis, of New York, who operate a chain of theatres, are planning a new vaudeville theatre for this city; will cost $30,000.

SCENES FROM "THE THUNDERB OLT," FEATURE AND EDUCATIONAL FILM CO. PRODUCTION.

THE THUNDERBOLT

When a man, always thought to have been thoroughly honest, is suddenly accused of burglary, and admits his guilt; and when a woman, engaged to marry a nobleman, suddenly renounces him and weds the man awaiting the penalty of the law, it would strike you as a very extraordinary occurrence, wouldn't it?

Well, as impossible as it seems the event nevertheless happened in a little town in the Nordland, where there lived a Danish Duke, his wife and their beautiful daughter.

Lady Mary, who is deeply in love with the gamekeeper of her father's estate, though engaged by her parents to marry Lord George. The latter comes to visit his prospective wife and father-in-law, but in spite of his presence in her home, Lady Mary, in the quiet twilight of a Northland summer, goes from her room to seek the man she loves. Lord George, also takes an after-dinner stroll, never suspecting the gamekeeper as his rival and nearly comes upon the lovers who are enjoying a trip through the garden. Lady Mary flees into the woods nearby to escape the sight of Lord George and after some difficulty, she arrives at the house.

Next morning the gamekeeper delivers his weekly report and calls for the pay-roll. The Duke proudly exhibits to Lord George a string of valuable pearls—a bridal gift to his daughter. The gamekeeper, overhearing the conversation, is startled by the reminder of the near approach of his sweetheart's marriage to another. Lord George, noticing this, eyes him suspiciously. The gamekeeper returning to the lodge-house, receives a letter from Lady Mary, who, fearing her father's wrath, invites him to meet her in the privacy of her room.

He keeps the appointment and while there, Lady Mary's mother, becoming ill, seeks relief in Mary's room. Both of the lovers find themselves in a terrible predicament and the gamekeeper, seizing upon the first opportunity, runs to the window, and plunges head foremost through it. Outside he clings to the window ledge for a moment, then falls to the ground. This forms a most striking incident. The night patrolman of the estate, picks up the gamekeeper and other occupants of the house rush out and carry him indoors. Surrounded by the entire household, which was aroused by the commotion, he is asked for an explanation. Being at a loss what to say and not wishing to compromise Lady Mary, he is silent. When Lord George steps forward and accuses him of coveting the necklace, he admits this, and is promptly carted off to prison.

The mother of the gamekeeper goes to visit her son and pleads with him to tell the truth. He refuses and she goes to Lady Mary, who is fighting a battle within herself. If she tells the truth, she will sacrifice her honor, and if she remains silent, her sweetheart will be convicted. She finally chooses the latter course and the gamekeeper goes to trial. This final scene is a masterpiece of production and action.

The witnesses all testify against the gamekeeper and in the eyes of the court and onlookers he is a doomed man. The judge and jury prepare to render a verdict and the gamekeeper staggers forward to hear the words which he knows will send him to his cell and dishonor him forever. Suddenly Lady Mary, who has been sitting in the background watching the proceedings, rises and strides to the prisoner's box. She confesses the truth and proclaiming him innocent, throws her arms about the gamekeeper's neck and weeps. Instead of a verdict against him the gamekeeper is set free and Lady Mary's parents, understanding the situation their daughter had placed the gamekeeper in and realizing how devoted he was to take the blame for Lady Mary's act, cheerfully forgive their daughter, and give her hand in marriage to the gamekeeper. Lord George, humiliated and disgusted, leaves the scene and the two lovers embrace each other and prepare for a long and happy life.

Baltimore, Md.—The Foreman Construction Company has been awarded the contract for the erection of a new vaudeville playhouse at 1118 Light Street for Jos. Brodie. Will cost $10,000 and seat 450.

Racine, Wis.—Plans ae being prepared for a new $12,000 playhouse to be erected at a cost of $12,000.

Detroit, Mich.—Ground will be broken this week for a new theatre building to be built by David Stott on Broadway at a cost of $175,000.

KINEMACOLOR DURBAR

WILL some one please invent adjectives and superlatives for us so that we may say exactly what we want to express. The words magnificent, superb, beyond compare, wonderful, superexcellent, and all such like phrases are commonplace to what we really do want to say. We have used these words or their equivalents in expressing our admiration of the Coronation in kinemacolor, and how to write further we hardly know. All we can ask is, Were you at the opening of the Delhi Durbar at the New York Theatre on Monday evening, February 19th? You were not? Then I suppose you were one of the great crowd who looked with wistful eyes at the people going in, and who offered to purchase tickets at double their value so that they might get in, who little heeded the notice on the curb, "House sold out," who tried even then to get tickets from the booking office and failed. It was a glorious crowd, and there was not one of the two thousand odd people that did not confess they had more than their money's worth, even at the usual theatre prices for this first view. So much has been written in the Moving Picture News previously, concerning the value of kinemacolor as being the photography of the future, that we can add very little to our previous remarks, but this we can say, it fairly took us off our feet to see the beautiful effects of the Durbar pictures, to see the grand distance so beautifully portrayed, showing the colors in wonderful relief, taken both panoramically and at close range of the 50,000 odd soldiers assembled on the vast plain outside of Delhi. It was a wonderful picture, and we do not think even the most caviling of minds would begrudge our friend, Charles Urban, the full modicum of praise due to him, and his able colleague, C. Albert Smith, for the wonderful pictures they have given us in this historical review. The colors of the "cloth of gold" in the wearing apparel of the native princes, the rich blending of the trappings of the animals used in the procession, the coaches, the horses with their glistening shining coats, were all portrayed with wonderful beautiful vividness, and to listen to the remarks of those who were seated in our immediate vicinity, should, and does augur well for the future exhibitions of this grand and glorious set of kinematograph films. The series should be seen by every man, woman, and child in the world. The wonderful educational value of these films is beyond compare. We looked on with a great degree of delight when the Coronation pictures were exhibited in New York, and expressed our views in forcible language as to the beauty of that series. Words fail us, utterly fail us—to depict what we would like to picture to our readers of the tone values of the beautiful color effects in these scenes of the Durbar, and such seems to be the expression of every spectator who was within our hearing.

The genial A. H. Sawyer was the Master of Ceremonies in introducing the pictures to the audience, and in his remarks previous to the exhibition of the pictures he paid a glowing tribute to the two men whose names will go down in history and become immortalized by their works. He stated that C. Albert Smith was an Englishman and Charles Urban an American by birth, and claimed that the beauty and grandeur of the films to be shown were just as much American as they were English. The list of the pictures goes somewhat in the following order: Their Imperial Majesties George V. and Queen Mary were shown being enthusiastically welcomed by the population of Bombay. Then we were shown many of the wonderful edifices of the Durbar camp which was indeed a scene from the Arabian Nights rather than a modern twentieth century picture; the Delhi fort, the procession and reception of the high officials and the ruling chiefs are wonderful. Then the state entry into Delhi seems to overwhelm the spectator with the beautiful and magnificent effects of detail with wonderful and astounding realism. The next scene made our hearts glow within us, and made us proud that we were English born when we saw that glorious and yet pathetic sight—the parade of the mutiny veterans. We have watched some of the parades of the G. A. R. and have been as enthusiastic in our cheering as any soil born American, and it did our hearts good when we heard these same American citizens applauding the grand march of the Indian veterans, with as great a zest as they cheer their own fellow countrymen who took such an active part in the Civil War here, and when we turned round and saw the tears glistening in the eyes of some of these men on behalf of these mutiny veterans, we had to give vent to our feelings and hurrah in the old English style. We just could not help it, we had to do it, and those around us were just as enthusiastic as we were in their applause. It was just that "touch of nature which makes the whole world kin." Following these came the Black Watch acting as guard of honor, and did not the Scotchmen just yell. Shortly after this came the Enniskillen Guards and then didn't the Irish set up a whoop, and so the films proceeded, alternately applauded, and then a pause to get calm again, until the Royal Procession passed through the lines of some 30,000 troops when the whole audience gave vent to its feelings.

The other scenes showed the chiefs' homage, the proclamation, and then we were taken to the King's camp and principal Indian Chiefs' reception, where distinguished officials and visitors were entertained with Oriental splendor. The review of the troops was in our opinion the most magnificent military spectacle that has ever been witnessed in the history of the British empire, and here again the applause was one long volley, especially at the awesomeness when the plain as far as the eye could reach was one vast moving scene of human heads, elephants, and lines of soldiery.

H. J. BROCK

A. H. SAWYER

The greatest praise is due to Charles Urban, whom we illustrate in this article, and feel very proud indeed to call him our friend, and when we tell our readers that he is on the Mauretania which should dock Thursday, the 22d, but owing to buffeting on the high seas it will be delayed twenty-four hours, so by the time this is in the hands of our readers, Charles Urban will once more be a guest among us, and we feel sure he will have a right royal welcome. A night is to be set apart at the New York Theatre for his reception when the elite of New York will be present to honor a true son of American soil. It will be out of place if we do not mention the two principal figures for the success of the kinemacolor exhibition in New York, namely, Mr. Brock, the general manager, and A. H. Sawyer, whose photos we also reproduce surrounded by scenes of kinemacolor in their office.

In addition to what we have written we reproduce on another page the comments from the columns of two of the foremost papers in New York, the Daily Tribune and the Daily Press, so that our readers may see that we are not at all fulsome in our remarks.

CONVINCING REFUTATION!

During the latter years of Mark Twain's life, a rumor went the rounds that the humorist was dead. When Mark Twain heard the mournful news, his retort, now famous, was "The rumor of my death is greatly exaggerated."

On the anniversary of the Rex Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, we recall an incident that is centered about Edwin S. Porter, the producer of the Rex masterpieces, that contains as much humor as the foregoing reference. The matter is really good enough to revive, as we believe that everybody ought to laugh once in a while, even though they are as earnest and serious a class as moving picture men. Here it is in all its comic details.

At a meeting of licensed manufacturers at the Imperial Hotel about two years ago, Pop Rock took the license to remark that Mr. E. S. Porter was a has-been, a dead one, a past event in moving picturedom. Pop Rock laughed at his own sally, forgetting all about the grown-up adage that he who laughs last has the superlative chuckle. E. S. Porter replied to Rock's merry quip with dignified silence. Mr. Porter is neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but he merely anticipated a few occurrences that were too far in the future to be visible to so shortsighted a humorist as White Rock.

The occurrences occurred. The Rex Motion Picture Company stands to-day as a monument to a malicious lie, a fact as hard as the substance from which our hero derives his name. Moreover, no wind, including Rock's, can shake the rock of achievement that Mr. Porter has so ably erected through his connection with the Rex Motion Picture Company. With no desire to be philosophical, we wish to remark parenthetically that even a thing as hard as rock can melt in time.

As additional proof that not alone is Mr. Porter not dead but very much alive, he has found time, besides making his famed Rex masterpieces, to construct with Mr. F. B. Cannock the Simplex Projector, conceded to be the best projecting machine on the market, and organize the Simplex Company for its exploitation. If Mr. Porter is dead, he's a mighty active spirit.

And it all goes to show the spirit of the thing.

A CALL FROM REPRESENTATIVES OF THE MIRROR SCREEN

Only a few days ago we were favored with a call from Mr. F. P. Bloomfield and Mr. Walter L. Rubert, special representatives of the Motion Picture Screen Co., manufacturers of the wonderful Mirror screens and transparent screens, which have made it possible for the moving picture to be exhibited in a lighted theatre, and to project moving pictures from the rear.

MR. F. J. REMBUSCH

The inventor of these useful acquisitions to the paraphernalia of the moving picture theatre is Mr. J. F. Rembusch, president and owner of the Motion Picture Screen Co. Mr. Rembusch was formerly a manufacturer of mirrors, and has been a great lover of stereopticons. One day about three years ago, when perusing the possibilities of the article of his manufacture and the necessity of some possible method for projecting moving pictures in the daylight, he hit upon an idea by which the mirror could be made useful in a very simple manner. By placing a reflector on the back and grinding to a certain degree of opaqueness the surface of the mirror, he obtained the splendid result now known as the mirror screen.

The transparent screen by means of which pictures can be projected from the rear of the screen is also made of ground glass—ground in such a manner as to diffuse the light of the camera lens to all parts of the screen, and thereby making it possible to get a perfect reproduction of the picture on the opposite side of the screen.

Mr. Rembusch, in addition to his large interest in this concern, is also the owner of two theatres in Shelbyville, Ind., where is located the home office of the Motion Picture Screen Co., the Alhambra and the Crystal, and of the Gem and the Manhattan in Indianapolis.

The Mirror screen has been virtually on the market only two years, the bulk of its sales having been made in the past year (1911). No less than fifty of these cameras have been sold in the State of Pennsylvania alone, and a number are to be found in New York, Brooklyn and Coney Island. One has been sold just recently to the Nemo Theatre in Johnstown, Pa., which theatre both Mr. Rubert and Mr. Bloomfield have pronounced one of the finest moving picture theatres in the United States. "This theatre," says Mr. Rubert, "has a seating capacity on one floor alone of 900 people, not to speak of the spacious balcony accommodations, and is one of the most refined theatres in every particular that I have ever seen. The regular music is supplied by a capable pianist, from a Steinway concert grand piano. The pictures are varied with high-class musical selections by high-class artists, and in fact everything about the place betokens refinement. On the day I was there I saw a carriage and coachman drive up to the entrance with five or six little children who had been sent to see the pictures."

On Friday, February 15, photographs of the loading of a Mirror screen at the New York harbor, into the hold of the freight ship, "Hyles," bound for Cape Town, South Africa, were taken. This screen was one 12 feet 6 inches by 16 feet 8 inches, and was being shipped to the American Bioscope Co., at Cape Town.

Mr. Walter L. Rubert, to whom we are indebted for a good deal of the above information, tells, as a sample of what can be done in a business way by the motion picture exhibitor, that, in the theatre in Kansas City of which he was the owner, he featured "The Crusaders" for two solid weeks, spending $700 in advertising in the two weeks. He put on, in addition to this, a change of programme each day, and reports a splendid profit on the undertaking.

Mr. Bloomfield will go South by way of New Orleans to push the business in that portion of the continent, while Mr. Robert makes a campaign in the New England States.

MR. BROCKLISS VISITS STATES

We availed ourselves of the opportunity of Mr. Brockliss' visit to the States to ask him a few questions of his various enterprises in London, and gave Mr. Brockliss full free scope to tell our readers what he had up his sleeve, what he had done, and what he expected to do, and the following story is what Mr. Brockliss told us:

"Regarding our English trade my impressions, speaking as an Englishman, are that we are getting very wide awake for good subjects and good material and enterprising exhibitors are looking after the best subject films, but they must be good. For instance, take from "The Bottom of the Sea" film which I handled. I sold more copies than any record of sales of any single film in my experience, showing the value of a good subject in London, and the great tendency to get the best subjects; and second and third-rate films do not go at all. They must be good, with sensational, thrilling situations telling a clean, live story. The great move now is more especially for good strong star films such as may be billed to draw the crowds in one special week or period in which they may be exhibited. Speaking of my own country, I am very pleased indeed to be able to tell that English manufacturers are making very good progress, and that will be particularly noticable in the Hepworth films, Mr. Hepworth working on the most up-to-date lines known all over the world, engaging star actors and actresses, spending big money among his artists in the way of salary and also on his productions." We asked Mr. Brockliss what his impressions were regarding the American products. "I am very pleased indeed to see the suitable amount of progress that has ever been shown here." (It is a well-known fact that Mr. Brockliss is agent for Melies star releases, as well as representing Laemmle, Rex, Powers and Champion.) I will be able to do full justice to all those films because my business in London is not run on the same lines as any other, but consists of three absolute separate businesses."

Leaving the question of films aside, we now asked Mr. Brockliss handed us one of his catalogues and after per-Brockliss handed us one of his catalogues, which is wonderfully full of good things and thoroughly up-to-date and speaks well of this machine. We were naturally interested to learn what special import Mr. Brockliss had in paying us a visit at this time and braving the terrible storms and wintry seas that usually come along with zero weather that we are having now. In reply to this question he said: "Terrible seas did not bother me a bit because I came over on the largest boat in the world, the Olympic, 45,000 tons, which made the journey seem nothing more than a week's stay in a comfortable hotel."

Mr. Brockliss informed us that his business was not confined to England but to all of Europe, through which he represents all the manufacturers above outlined. "I have branch houses in Paris and Berlin; the former run under my own name and the latter under the name of Brockliss Deutsch Amerikanische Film Co. I have two agencies in Barcelona, one in Vienna, one in Turin, one in Bologna, one in Copenhagen and one in Brussels."

After hearing the above information we suggested to Mr. Brockliss that he is too enterprising for an Englishman; he ought to come over to America; and we asked the question whether he had not the American blood in his veins because he seems to have the blood we have here; to which he replied, "No, I am a full-fledged bulldog." Mr. Brockliss incidentally remarked that his business results were three times larger to-day than when he was here in May of last year. Wondering whether Mr. Brockliss had been touched with the theatre fever, we asked him if he had adopted the American method of opening theatres to which he replied, "I have two, practically no trouble to me, both producing large profits and under very able management. One in Blackheath and the other in Stourbridge (the place where we were born). This got us going on some very interesting reminiscences, but as they were mostly of a personal nature and kept us so long our stenographer had to leave and the interview was closed.

BERNHARDT AND "CAMILLE"

"I have conquered a new world—that of the photo play," writes Sarah Bernhardt to W. F. Connor, her American manager, apropos of her playing "Camille" before the camera of the French-American Film Company. "I never thought, my dear William, that I would be a film, but now that I am two whole reels of pictures I rely for my immortality upon these records."

Under the management of Mr. Connor Bernhardt played to over $3,000,000 in this country in two tours and proved herself the greatest box-office attraction that the stage has ever known. She was repeatedly asked while in this country to pose for moving pictures, but always refused; hence, it was a great surprise to Connor to hear that Sarah had capitulated to the camera. It took a great deal of persuasion and $30,000 in money to induce Bernhardt to play "Camille" before the camera, but when she finally made up her mind she entered into the arrangements with the enthusiasm of a schoolgirl. She visited motion picture shows in all parts of Paris, spent hours in studios and talked with operators and actors. In a short while she was an encyclopedia of information about the new art.

"Camille" was rehearsed a few times with the watch to get it timed right, and then on a set date Bernhardt and her powerful company went right through the performance before the motion picture camera. She played with wonderful fire and expressiveness. Great genius that she is, she suited herself to her medium and the result is a long series of photographs that are staccato in their expressiveness. The story is revealed as plain as print. "Camille" was never more pitifully eloquent than in this dumb record. Bernhardt could hardly wait to see an exhibition of the pictures in the studio. When the operator started and the photo play began to transpire upon the screen she was almost hysterical with excitement. After seeing the two reels she insisted that they be run off over again and this was done. At the finish she turned to Edmond Rostand, who accompanied her, and asked: "What next for me?"

"Camille" is a perfect photo play. The story lends itself to the purposes of the camera and Bernhardt is eloquent in every movement. Some one has said that the pictures fairly crackle with life and project wireless messages to the spectators. All over Europe the photo play "Camille" is a sensation, and Americans are eagerly awaiting the release of these reels, which are now in the control of the French-American Film Company, which is rapidly disposing of State rights. This company also controls the great photo play, "San Gene," posed by Rejane.

THE MERCHANT MAYOR

Noteworthy Champion Film, the Subject of Which Is of Vital Public Interest

In "The Merchant Mayor," a Champion release of current date, the theme chosen is one that is close to the people and of vital import—the increased cost of living. The film depicts conditions as they obtained in Indianapolis several months ago and how the Mayor went about to remedy them is graphically told on the screen. The story has a preachment, and a moral and is educational in tone and intent. Aside from its value as to morale the story interest holds attention and is intensely interesting. The director entered into the spirit with heart and soul and was ably assisted by the members of the Champion Stock Company. The result is one of the most praiseworthy of the year.

The drama opens in the squalid home of a laborer, eking out a scanty sustenance, barely earning wage sufficient to feed and clothe his large family, owing to the cost of the necessaries of life being all out of proportion to the salary he is receiving. The wife and daughter of the Mayor being charitably inclined, are investigating conditions on their own account. Cases of privation have been reported to the chief executive. They visit this home and the result is a revelation. They have pity for the inmates of the poorly furnished cottage, but the father will have no commiseration. He wants a chance to earn a living for his family, but complains bitterly as to the injustice of conditions which make it well-nigh impossible. Being of the educated class of laborers, his statement makes an impression on the visitors and they depart.

The mother and daughter report the result of their visit to the Mayor. Their story is food for reflection, and he acts. Calling the retail merchants of the city before him, he addresses them in behalf of humanity and asks them to be content with a fair profit on their goods to the end that the poor of the city will not be compelled to endure hardships. They laugh him to scorn. The immutable laws of trade are quoted. They tell him the prices of commodities are controlled by the law of supply and demand. The Mayor investigates. He discovers that the statements are at variance with the facts. The merchants defy him to take action to try and bring about better conditions. They do not regard him seriously. Other Mayors have essayed to inaugurate reforms, only to abandon them after the first effort.

This Mayor could not be turned aside from his purpose. He was in earnest. His heart bled for his constituents. He felt their injustice and he determined to alleviate suffering. He sent out emmissaries and bought potatoes, as potatoes are one of the staple articles that enter into the menus of the poorer classes. He sold these potatoes on the market for what they cost him, a figure which was far below that charged by the retail merchants. It was a revelation to the people. They had never dreamed they were being imposed upon to such a considerable extent. The merchants were forced to meet the prices of the Mayor and, for the first time in months, potatoes were sold for a fair price. The retail merchants were alarmed. The Mayor was a man of his word. He had forced them to sell potatoes at a fair and equitable price. He warned them that any attempt to charge exorbitant prices in the future would result in a repetition of the methods he had employed to cheapen food stuffs.

Thanksgiving Day approached. The poultry dealers fixed a price on poultry that was prohibitive. Again the Mayor became a merchant and bought and sold turkeys, ducks, chickens, geese, etc., and sold them for the cost and the expense of selling. He again demonstrated that the dealers were charging unfair and excessive prices, all out of proportion to existing trade conditions, as applied to the law of supply and demand.

The story as told by the Champion furnishes food for thought. It also points out the way in which the middleman and not the producer is responsible for the advance in the prices of the necessaries of life. It also furnishes the solution in a forceful and emphatic manner.

MAJESTIC RELEASES FOR EARLY MARCH

Majestic certainly have a fine offering in their early March releases. One of the best, most spontaneous comedies seen in some time is the "Unwilling Bigamist." It portrays one of the most amusing mix-ups that could possibly happen in real life. The comedy of this picture lies almost entirely in the peculiarity of the situations that arise in consequence of a similarity in the personal appearance of two husbands, one of whom is injured by being run into by an automobile, and is taken to the hospital. At the time of the accident the other husband is out of town on a short business trip. Both wives see the picture of the injured man in the newspaper. The wrong wife turns up at the hospital first, embraces the injured man, who frantically does all in his power to elude her. However, ignoring his protests, she orders him taken to her home. After the poor man is dragged through several kidnapping scenes, his double suddenly makes his appearance, both men enjoying the chagrin of the wives.

"The Closed Bible" is another good March release. It is a tragedy well worked out—intensely interesting from start to finish. Majestic's subjects are always well chosen. A Majestic release usually has a surprise for the audience. They have at present a camera man touring the Western States in search of good scenic subjects. An excellent film has been secured of logging operations, one, it is said, entirely out of the ordinary, showing the passage of the tree from the cutting in its native forest until it is turned out in the cold world in mere slabs of lumber.

WARNING TO MANAGERS

Theatre managers are hereby warned not to present R. E. Webb and his illustrated lectures entitled, "Behind the Bars of Joliet Prison," "Hands Up in the World of Crime," "Through Death Valley" and "The Destruction of Messina." He has absconded with all my slides and my share of the receipts. Managers are hereby notified that they, as well as he, will be held liable and the full penalty demanded.

SCENE FROM "THE UNWILLING BIGAMIST"

ODD CENSORSHIP OF "AMERICAN" PICTURES

Motion picture companies selling in Chicago, which includes practically every manufacturer in the business, are complaining bitterly over the treatment received at the hands of the city police censorship board.

Of late the police department has tightened the reins almost to the breaking point. Not only are all murders, suicides, burglaries, confidence games, etc., which always have received the official ban, barred, but many little incidents essential to the story are seized upon by police inspectors and ordered out.

For instance, one day recently the American Film Manufacturing Company, having accumulated a number of subjects on which releases were demanded, showed to the visiting inspector a film scheduled for release Thursday, March 7, entitled "The Broken Ties." The central thought in this picture swings about a heartless stepmother, who in one scene gathers her effects together and with her son appropriates the husband's pocketbook and leaves.

The police censor took objection to this scene, claiming that it smacked of robbery, despite legal rulings to the effect that a wife cannot steal from her husband.

"From the Four Hundred to the Herd" is the name of another coming American which also came in for some remarkable criticism on the part of the police. This picture, which it is believed will make a genuine sensation for its cleverness of plot and astonishing backgrounds, was criticised for an actual sale of property, where the deed was shown, a part of the scene action on which the entire story pivoted. There was no suggestion of fraud or attempted fraud, but merely the sale of a big ranch by one man to another.

SELECTION OF PROGRAM

A difficult process, no doubt, and one over which the manager sometimes has no control. He takes what his exchange says he must take, or what the same arbitrary organization ships to him, if he be at a distance.

Sometimes he receives something which he would rather not have. Such a thing is possible. Indeed, it is more than a possibility. It has occurred with sufficient frequency to insure the practically unanimous opinion that the situation requires modification.

Not all localities are alike. A manager in one town desires one class of play to suit his customers; another manager further down the line is confronted with a serious problem if the same class is sent to him. Towns vary. Indeed, those who have studied the subject with some care have discovered that frequently towns are peopled with men and women who possess, in some degree at least, the same general mental characteristics. It isn't necessary to undertake any elaborate investigation here as to the reason for this state of being. It is sufficient for the present purpose to accept what is said as a fact and base upon it a few observations which may be helpful to managers in considering their shows.

Some towns will not take sensations kindly. During the past few years, for example, murders and similar violent demonstrations have almost entirely disappeared from the screen. The reason for this is that managers received so many complaints against showing these scenes that they dared not continue longer. They refused to accept such plays, and the producer learned his lesson. The effect has been salutary and the entire industry has benefited largely through this condition.

Any play which in any way inculcates criminal action, or even suggests a possibility of such a thing, will scarcely go in some localities. In others the spice thus interlarded is joyfully accepted as furnishing some piquant thrills that add to the zest of the picture.

Dante's Inferno was refused by one manager because he declared that his patrons would object to the more or less nude exhibitions in some of the scenes. He was of the opinion that it would be necessary to dress statues in long trousers to suit his patrons. His view might have been extreme, but in a degree he was right. He does cater to an extremely large number of strongly pronounced prudes. When a film comes to him from this exchange that has any of those features to which prudes object, he is obliged to decline it or run a grave risk of seriously injuring his business.

There are audiences which will blush when a girl allows her skirt to show her shoe top. Perhaps some of you may think they are not numerous. But get you out in the country where villages are small and prudishness is allowed to develop untrammeled and unchecked. You will learn things to your advantage and will know why some managers so persistently and frantically object to anything approaching suggestiveness in their films. One may wonder where all these straight-built prudes of both sexes come from; but they are numerous and they control things in some places.

It isn't diffcult to understand from this what a position a manager is in if something offensive gets by his exchange and by mischance lands upon his screen. It means difficulty, even danger, and there is plenty of reason for his declarations regarding his opinion of the exchange management.

The best thing the exchange can do is to accept what the manager says, and endeavor, as far as possible, to supply him with films that will suit his particular neighborhood. The so-called reformers are exceedingly numerous and even more busy. They want to do something and have hit upon the motion picture as a proper object of their regenerating efforts. The situation has been complicated by their appearance, and they seem in a fair way to cause a great deal of difficulty before they stop. If, however, exchange men will co-operate with managers in supplying the films which are suitable for specified localities, many of these difficulties will disappear, and even the reformers can be converted.

The spice of sensation may be accepted with avidity in some places; it is rejected with a degree of satisfaction elsewhere. The thing is to so combine the forces in the exchange that all managers will be benefited and their theatres supplied with exactly the right sort of pabulum. Then everybody will be happy and the reformers will have no cause to point the finger of scorn at the motion picture. Reformers, you know, are dangerous personages. Long-haired men and short-haired women exist in every community. And they often combine their forces to cause trouble for the most harmless diversions. They have done this in the case of the motion picture. It will be well to heed the danger. They often carry the police powers with them, and when once invoked the manager will be compelled to desist from alleged injurious practices or be relieved of his license and perhaps a profitable business.

All departments of the business should work together for the benefit of the manager. He is the one who must purvey these things. It is to him that all look for a final disposition of the forces which make for success or failure. He should be the one to decide, and when he has decided the exchange man should heed and the echo should ring until it is heard even in the studio of the producer. When this is true all departments of the business will profit accordingly.

THE commonwealth of Ohio furnishes the Presidents for our great and glorious nation and also endeavors to keep right up to date in cinematography. To add to the joy of living, Attorney-General Hogan, of Columbus, has ruled that mayors of Buckeye State cities may close moving picture shows on Sunday if they so desire. The legal light says that they come within the meaning of the law which provides that places for the transaction of business shall be closed Sunday.

"Places for the transaction of business"—wouldn't that jolt you!

In several cities of Ohio agitation has been started against the Sunday moving picture show, and certain mayors—not all, by any means—have started a pretence of reform by ordering picture shows closed and thus driving many young men into saloons and pool rooms.

In Dayton, O., for instance, the "Reform Mayor" ordered the picture theatres closed on Sunday and permits grog shops to run full blast. It is said that the saloonkeepers complained that the picture shows were injuring their business. Consistent action on the part of his Honor, the Mayor! An unconscious compliment to the worth of the moving picture show, we think.

In Youngstown, O., which recently voted for the return of the saloon, the "machine" has closed the Sunday picture show in favor of the dramshop!

When liquor leagues, through their hirelings, cause the shutdown on the Sunday picture theatre for the reason that the innocent amusement causes a decrease in barroom receipts, the worth of the picture play as an aid to temperance is clearly proven. It is understood that the Woman's Christion Temperance Union in many cities where the picture play has been closed as a sop to the saloon element will start a crusade for the reopening of the cinematography palace. Thus law and order is becoming enlisted in behalf of the picture in Ohio State.

Mayor Hunt, of Cincinnati, truly a reformer, through Chief of Police Jackson, asserts that the Sunday moving picture show will not be disturbed. Mayor Karb, of Columbus, refused to express an opinion on Attorney-General Hogan's ruling, and the Sunday picture theatre in the Capital City remains open at the time this article was being prepared. Mayor Baker, reformer, of Cleveland, sees great good in the Sunday picture play.

It is a compliment for the moving picture that the brewers and distillers see in the entertainment a menace to their Sunday business. With good educational and clean dramatic and comedy films, the Sunday moving picture play has proven a great power in assisting the working man to save the contents of his pay envelope on the one day of the week when temptation strenuously assails him.

Ohio will be the spotlight of the political stage during the coming Presidential campaign and moving pictures are to be enlisted in behalf of our esteemed fellow citizens of Ohio, "Bill" Taft and "Uncle Jud" Harmon. It's a secret, as yet, but the Moving Picture News, by aid of the dictagraph, has gleaned some interesting information, which, with characteristic enterprise, we pass along to our readers.

President Taft proposes to "burn up" the state during the next few months in order to keep the festive delegate in line for the national convention. He is going to depend a whole lot on cinematography to help him do it. Former Senator Charles Dick, champion organizer under the late Senator Hanna, has been corralled to aid President Taft in lining up his home state. Dick is right up to the scratch in this organization work and is inclined to moving pictures. It has been arranged to have moving pictures shown in every theatre in Ohio. The pictures will show progress of work on the Panama Canal, what the Government is doing in Alaska, how the farmers are prospering. Moving Pictures will show the great crowds that greeted the President during his recent visit to Cleveland and Columbus, and will impress upon the voter and prove to him that Taft is popular, that all good things come under the Republican régime, and that the President should be returned to Washington for another four years.

The reels are now in course of preparation by a New York manufacturer, and the first one shown will record Taft's great reception in Columbus.

Not to be outdone, it is whispered that the Democrats are to work a like plan through Ohio and elsewhere, with Governor Harmon as the central figure. Thus is cinematography called upon to make its initial bow to politics, and the voter is to be educated with a vengeance. Selah!

There is a village in the "Buckeye State" known to fame as "Spotless Town." Not an arrest has been made in the village of DeGraff, Logan County, O., for two years. The town boasts of 1,200 inhabitants, and is proud that the lock on the jail door is rusty. Why is this thusly, you inquire. Please permit Mayor Robert Cook, of "Spotless Town" to set forth the facts and figures.

"Moving pictures are the greatest boon the small country town was ever granted," stated Mayor Cook to a News representative. "The picture show is doing much to keep the country boy at home—to keep him from going to the city. The moving picture show is one of the reasons why I preside over the destinies of a 'Spotless Town.'

"In rural communities, before the advent of the picture show, the people had nothing to do. We could sit upon the shady side of Main Street on benches and store boxes and gossip, or we could go down to the depot and smell the varnish as the Pullmans rushed past. Sometimes Uncle Tom's Cabin' came along and the trap drummer had to hold the 'Siberian bloodhounds' while Lize made her getaway across a two by four stage. Now that situation is changed. We can all go to the picture show.

"Some of our good old citizens, who had ideas of the vintage of 1776 and were partial to wooden awnings, had their ideas changed after becoming picture fans. They became broadened, so to speak. As a result of the pictures which often show scenes in larger cities, the last two wooden awnings in captivity have been taken down. The pictures have bettered civic spirit, and DeGraff, as well as other country towns of the same class, are withdrawing from the 'Maple Syrup' League.

"The small town likes educational pictures, good comedy and Civil War dramas. There isn't a crossroads hamlet north of Mason and Dixon's line that hasn't a G. A. R. post, and the 'old boys' often march in a body after lodge meeting to the picture show to see one of the war plays. It does 'em good.

"The picture show has proven a boon for the young folks in the rural communities. Before the picture show the farmer boy and village youth only worked to get enough coin to migrate to the city and the country girl had to 'hold the sack.' There was no amusement for the young man at home. Now the country boy and his best girl can go to the picture show every night, and the boy remains home to hold hands in the front parlor on Sunday evenings. The girls are satisfied now.

"The picture show takes the minds of the country people from petty gossip and from that narrowness of mind which often leads to the 'tar and feather' parties, bellings and like mischief. Picture shows have caused DeGraff to become a 'Spotless Town,' and there can be a picture show every other door in this town so far as I am concerned.

"I am now agitating the subject of a municipal moving picture theatre for DeGraff where good, clean plays can be presented afternoon and evening for seven days in the week."

Spokane, Wash.—The Gem Amusement Co. will erect a new moving picture theater for East Sprague avenue and Napa street to cost $3,000.

MR. ALMOST BUTT

"MOVIES" AND THE LAW

John Collier

The committee on moving pictures appointed by Mayor Gaynor has reported after seven months' continuous work on the problem. The committee was charged with the framing of a suggested ordinance to be laid before the New York Board of Aldermen. This proposed ordinance, which has been introduced with some minor amendments by Alderman Folk, contains some features of national interest.

Down to the present the six-hundred-odd motion-picture shows in New York have been licensed and regulated, as in many other cities, through laws framed before motion-picture shows came into existence. The result has been inadequate regulation and waste, duplication, and large neglected areas in law enforcement. The committee's report treats the motion picture as in every respect a special problem. The points of main interest are here indicated briefly:

The proposed ordinance would work toward moral regulation through administrative action rather than through minute statutory requirements enforced through the courts. All matters physical, concrete, or definable which pertain to the picture theatre would be covered minutely by law; the law would be mandatory on the administration, and there might be possible a court review in questions of fact. But the regulation of the performances, morally viewed, would be left to the mayor with complete discretion, and any action by the mayor would be reviewable by the courts only on grounds of reasonableness. The mayor could revoke or suspend a license, and his action would be final; he could specify the kind of performances that were to be allowed; could bring about the submission of film, songs, etc., in advance; could pursue practically any method which experience might show to be desirable in regulating the performances. On the other hand, he might elect in this particular to do nothing at all, and in such case citizens would have to use their accustomed remedies for bad government. The ordinance in iits present form would, however, specifically charge the mayor with moral responsibility for the performances; and, independently of the proposed ordinance, the penal laws of the state are very severe. In a nutshell, the committee proposes to create a censorship radically administrative in character rather than statutory, and would eliminate the courts as far as possible from the problem of morally regulating the performances. The committee seems to have proceeded on the theory that collective control must be exercised over the morals of public performances, but that this control should be exercised by officials directly responsible to the people, vested with complete discretion, and free to reflect public opinion.

The report defines a motion picture theatre:

"[Sub-section A:] Motion pictures shall be deemed a display on a screen or other device whereby pictures are displayed of characters or objects in motion, whether or not accompanied by music, lecture, recitation, or song.

"[Sub-section B:] A motion picture theatre shall be deemed any public hall or room in the city of New York, in which motion pictures are exhibited, in which the seating capacity does not exceed six hundred, and in which there is no stage or scenery."

The above wording would eliminate vaudeville from all motion picture shows seating 600 persons or under. This clause is made retroactive, so that existing picture theatres which give vaudeville must, in case they seat less than 600 people, either discontinue the vaudeville or rebuild in conformity with the very stringent building requirements for regular theatres. The object in eliminating vaudeville is twofold—public safety, in that the stage with scenery and costumes increases the fire hazard; and public taste and morals, in that the committee believes cheap vaudeville to be inherently poor, almost impossible to control, and socially objectionable.

The committee recommends that ultimate responsibility for motion-picture theatres be concentrated in the License Bureau, which would be provided with an adequate force of inspectors; the keeping of records is enjoined on the License Bureau; the License Bureau must demand reports from every appropriate city department before issuing a license, but has ultimate discretionary power to overrule any departmental report, except that the rather minute provisions of the proposed motion picture ordinance will be binding on the License Bureau itself. The motion picture abuses in New York (and in many cities) have been due in the past largely to a lack of definite law, made worse by an indefinite responsibility and power scattered through many departments.

The committee offers provisions, which have been worked out with great care, covering the ventilation and lighting of motion picture shows. The section on lighting is quoted entire:

"Every portion of a motion-picture theatre, including exits, courts, and corridors, devoted to the uses or accommodation of the public, shall be so lighted by electric light during all exhibitions and until the entire audience has left the premises, that a person with normal eyesight should be able to read the Snellen standard test type 40 at a distance of twenty feet and type 30 at a distance of ten feet; normal eyesight meaning ability to read type 20 at a distance of twenty feet in daylight. Cards showing types 20, 30, and 40 shall be displayed on the side walls, together with a copy of this paragraph of the ordinance."

The section on ventilation embodies the most advanced results of scientific work in this field. The fresh-air requirement per person is cut down from 2,000 cubic feet per hour (the general rule in this country) to 500 cubic feet; temperature must be kept between 62° F. and 70° F.; electric fans must be used to keep all air in motion. The committee believes that the proper humidity will be secured if the fresh air and temperature features of the ordinance are conformed to. The ventilation of the booth in which the picture machine is operated is likewise provided for; a vent flue must go from the booth to the open air, with a diameter of approximately seven inches, and air must pass constantly through this vent at the rate of thirty cubic feet per minute. Not merely the health of the operator but the safety of the audience in case of fire in the booth are taken care of by this provision. For violations in this or any other section of the ordinance the penalty may be either suspension or revocation of license.

The provisions for construction of galleries, width of aisles, exits, etc., are very minute and may well be studied by the lawmakers of any city, as they are applicable wherever motion pictures are shown. Practically, there is created an intermediate type of theatre, less costly to build than the large regular theatre, and yet safe and commodious, substantially fireproof, although not of the most rigid fireproof construction, and capable of being built in the poorer neighborhood-districts of the city. Picture shows are excluded from tenements, and from factories unless surrounded by unpierced fireproof walls. The existing law on projection booths is supplemented, so that under the proposed ordinance a fire could burn indefinitely within the booth without any possibility of spreading and without the knowledge of the audience. All fire hazard is concentrated in this booth; rewinding of films, repair work, etc., must be done in the booth, or in a neighboring fireproof room. The committee believes that if its suggestion is adopted the fire hazard in motion picture shows will be virtually eliminated, and likewise the panic hazard.

Special provision is made for open-air motion-picture theatres and motion-picture exhibits conducted by educational institutions and in private houses.

The mayor's committee makes a supplementary report dealing with the admission of children to motion-picture shows, The New York State law at present forbids the admission of unaccompanied children at any time. The Commissioner of Accounts has reported that this law is radically violated in more than three-fifths of the shows in New York. The testimony of social workers is even stronger. Probably 20,000 children in one day in New York City, it has been estimated attend motion piction theatres in violation of law. In two and a half years there has been one conviction followed by imprisonment for this offense and one revocation of license, with numerous petty fines. Apparently the law does not command support either in local public opinion or in the courts, and the premium in favor of violation seems to be overwhelming from the standpoint both of the child and of the show proprietor. In addition, the determination between real and pretended guardianship is difficult for the courts, as parents are strongly tempted to side with the show proprietors.

The committee merely gives its opinion that the law cannot be "strictly enforced," and suggests as a solution of the problem that the state law be amended to permit children in motion picture shows after school hours, and on days when schools are not in session, and up to seven o'clock in the evening, no children to be admitted, however, after six o'clock in the evening. In addition, the committee proposes that there be segregated seats for the children and a matron in every show house, who will be over forty years of age and licensed by the mayor.

The supplemental report of the committee has aroused vigorous controversy among social workers, with no apparent unanimity of opinion save on the one point that the law is in fact almost universally violated. Probably the more serious and dangerous opposition to the proposed ordinance will not be publicly voiced but will be the opposition of the vaudeville interests, and the opposition on the part of those existing picture theatres which occupy plots of ground incapable of enlargement to meet the condition of the new ordinance. These shows would not be eliminated directly by the proposed ordinance, but might be indirectly eliminated through competition of larger and more attractive houses which would be built under the terms of the new ordinance, and would be immediately subjected to increased burdens of the proposed law which are made retroactive on all existing shows.

THE NATIONAL THEATRE, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

This is one of the best independent houses in the city, having a seating capacity of 350.

Mr. Bert S. Lustig, the enterprising manager, took charge of the National not quite a year ago, and since that time the patronage has doubly increased. The house formerly used trust pictures, but when Mr. Lustig took charge, he at once changed to independent, and consequently, the "National" is among the best paying theatres in Los Angeles.

Four reels of pictures are shown, the programme changing twice a week. Mr. Lustig has recently opened the "Rex" Theatre on Main street, between Third and Fourth streets, and the house like the National is proving to be a winner.

Champaign, Ill.—Manager Harris of the Walker Opera House has announced that the Heiman syndicate, of which he is the Champaign representative, will build a $40,000 opera house here.

ABOUT MOVING PICTURE FILMS

Few of the thousands of people who attend moving picture exhibitions know that the films which produce the pictures are but 1 2/8 inches wide by a length approximating 1,000 feet.

It should take about twenty minutes to show a full reel, but with a sidewalk full of people waiting admittance the operator sometimes accelerates the speed, causing those unnaturally quick steps and movements of men and women in the pictures.

In passing through the projecting machine all films gather dust and dirt which the light will not penetrate, and so there is thrown upon the theatre curtain black vertical lines which look as though the pictures had been photographed during a rainstorm. If the dirt was washed out of the scratches these incongruous marks would not appear unless the scratch was deep enough to have gone clear through the gelatine which is seldom the case. Even then the scratch, if clean, would show white instead of black.

Here is the trouble: there is nothing to wash it with. Gelatine is soluble in water, and gasoline and other volatile fluids make the celluloid brittle and useless. So the dealers in films accept less and less rental for them as their condition grows worse and worse.

There has been recently issued patents for a process which makes moving picture films washable with soap and water. Films which are subjected to this process can be easily washed once a week or so, and kept as clean as handkerchiefs or collars which are given periodical washings.

The public does not realize how much more strain is put upon the optic nerve in looking at a dirty film than is the case with clean films. Oculists know it, and many have advised municipal regulation in this direction, as there is now a censorship for good morals of film stories, theatre ventilation, etc., etc.

* * * *

One of the most important and essential parts of a successful moving picture theatre is the effects that are used in the successful and perfect presentation of the picture.

It is not the drummer or effect man who can hit his crash cymbal harder than some one else, who is the perfect man to work the effects, but it is the man who hunts out the little minor effects and brings them into prominence—little things that would perhaps slip by unnoticed; these are the things that make the picture "sound perfect." In a battle scene, of course, the cannon's roar must be heard (it does not need to be as loud as a thunder storm), the rattle of the musketry must be heard, but when some one of the contending army's officers is pursued and he is home again, and you see him going through the house trying to hide himself without making his presence known, the music in keeping with the situation is being played—he is followed closely—he enters through and shuts a door—the door is heard to shut and the click of the lock is heard—how much more effective it brings out the acute situation, that makes the audience feel the realism that should be created in order to make the picture "letter perfect."

The following is a partial list of "traps" that are an absolute necessity in order to produce the effects in a proper manner:

Police whistle, baby cry, bantam and Shanghai rooster crow, duck quack, hen cackle, cuckoo, bob white (quail and whip-poor-will), self-loading popgun, mocking bird whistle, locust or frog, steamboat whistle, slap sticks, police rattle, clog mallets, tree toad, toad, castanets, sleighbells, tugboat whistle, horse hoofs, locomotive whistles, railroad imitation, thunder sheet, fog horn, dog bark, cyclone whistle, Indian tom-tom, triangle, rooter or squawker (sometimes called frog pond), wood block, crash cymbal, sand blocks, cow bell, wood rattle, bell plate, cow bawl, tambourine, locust, anvil, Chinese musette, Chinese gong, air brake, imitation, door slam, auto horn, street car gong, fire gong, railroad bell, electric bell, telephone bell, hand bell, tap bell, glass crash rumble, wind wheel shot cushion (for rapid shot effects and horses' hoofs on dirt), auto chuo cathedral chimes, water splash, telegraph instrument.

One of the effects that is misused more than any other is the "baby cry." Some drummers seem to think that each and every time a baby puts in its appearance that it is time to use the baby cry, but such is not the case, even if the baby is shown to be crying. If the picture is a dramatic one the use of a baby cry is entirely out of place, as it only has the tendency to make the scene seem burlesqued, and will perhaps cause some of the audience to laugh, which spoils the theme of the story and causes interest in the story to lag.

Many drummers do not use the proper judgment (and it is not always the drummer's fault, as many managers insist on effects no matter where or how they occur, which shows very poor judgment on their part) in the use of effects for some scenes, say, for instance, if a pair of field glasses is used and running horses are brought into view, the effect of the horses should not be produced yet some managers and drummers are not broadminded enough to see the right of such theory.

The horse-hoof imitation is another one that is greatly misused. It is one of the first effects that a drummer secures in making up a collection of traps. Nearly all drummers and effect men will use their "cocoanuts" on a marble slab, or their bell pate, when showing horses running or walking on pavement, but great care should be taken not to use them when it shows the horses running on a dirt road or through the grass. The best idea I have found so far for the effect of horses hoofs on dirt is a leather pad or cushion, which gives the muffled effect desired. This cushion also serves well in a fight scene where there are a number of rapid shots to be made, as they can be made easily with paddles.

The more detail you put into your effects the more pleasing the rendition of the picture. People nowadays are "picture fans"; they are critical, and look for and discover many more flaws in the picture and its presentation, that a few years ago were overlooked. They look to see if the drummer works his wood block overtime every time some one gets hit on the head; they are listening to see if Petrecia Spearmint will play ragtime all through some death scene—flaws such as these are easily made, but not easily remedied.

Every time a man or woman presses the button for the doorbell it should not be used, for it is seldom you can hear the bell when you ring it, and, again, do not use the same bell for a doorbell and the telephone, for there is much difference between them. It is an easy matter to secure an old ringing part of a telephone from a telephone company, and it will be a marked improvement. The telephone bell, doorbell, telegraph instrument, etc., can all be operated from the same set of batteries. While here, let me state that a telegraph instrument is an absolute necessity in a trap outfit, as you cannot produce the proper click for it without an instrument, and one good enough for all the use exacted from it can be secured very reasonable.

There are some of the effects listed that you will not have much use for, but if you are to be a successful drummer it will pay you to have them; then when the opportunity presents itself you will have them and will find that they will be appreciated by the audience.

Secure your "traps" from a firm who is responsible and whose goods you know to be good, for you will find it will pay in the end.

A "snappy trap" I found recently is a new noise maker and funny bone tickler called the "Nose-Blo." It is just what its name implies; a ridiculously true-to-life imitation of a man blowing his nose.

There are many places where you can use it in the picture, and it is a pleasing change from the siren whistle and rattle and it will cause a gale of merriment to flow over the audience when used. It only costs ten cents, and is made by George B. Stone & Son, 47 Hanover street, Boston, Mass.

Unusual effects are the ones you must seek to produce. If Farmer Dolittle goes out into the yard to the old wooden pump and uses it to fill up the water trough, the effect of the squeaky wooden pump may be produced by using a violin and bow, playing below the bridge. This is only one of the many points that many drummers have overlooked.

OPERATORS' PAGE

February 6th, 1912.

Editor Moving Picture News,
30 West Thirteenth street, New York.

Well St. Paul, from your letter in January 27th Moving Picture News, I take it that conditions are very bad in your city in regards to projection. Now I would like to know a little more about this matter before I give an opinion on it. Seems to me the union in your sister city should be able to assist you by getting after the city officials for allowing such careless neglect on such an important matter as this. Would suggest that you get two or three other operators to go with you and lay the matter before the union and ask them to assist you in your efforts to better conditions in St. Paul, and I am sure that you will not ask in vain.

The real managers gave up the idea of cheap operators long ago, St. Paul; only the would-be, mushroom manager, that springs up over night, now thinks he can save a few dollars in that way, but the cheap operator and cheaper manager (?) don't last any longer than the proverbial snowball in——, so don't worry about them. If you cannot start a union in your city why not get a few other boys to help you start a social club and work up from that to something greater. That is just about the way we started here in New York City about five years ago, and now things are beginning to come our way pretty good. We only have about 550 members now but expect to have a few more in the near future. The editor, Mr. Saunders, helped us greatly when we started and has always been our friend, helping us over the rough places that every operator knows only too well, and he will, I am sure, be only to glad to do the same for you. We are going to have a "Chat Column" in the News in a very short time which I am sure will help you greatly, as the majority of those who contribute to it will be union operators. Write me again and send me the names and addresses of the president and corresponding secretary of the Minneapolis Union and as much information as you can get regarding matters you speak of and I will do all I can to help you. Before closing let me tell you that you will be putting a good one over if you get the Exchanges to help you. Find out what they think about it then act as you see fit.

With best wishes for success, I am yours for better conditions for good "Projectors," Canuck in the Catskills.

(Member of M. P. & P. M. O. Union.)

P. S.—Questions and correspondence invited from operators for our "Chat Column" which starts this month. Don't be bashful, you can't send in too many we'll find space for.

What is to be the fate of "the one-night stand?" This is an all-absorbing question to certain theatrical managers and to the great army of thespians who have been wont to don sock and buskin in the towns and villages of the great Middle West. If the signs of the times augur correctly the "one-night stand" will soon be a memory—that the moving picture show will reign supreme instead.

In all sections of the "provinces" the "opera houses," pretentious and otherwise have turned to the moving picture in order to keep going and to pay taxes. In the cities of five, ten and fifteen thousand inhabitants where traveling theatrical attractions drew good audiences about three times weekly in days gone by the "shows" are becoming more and more infrequent. One attraction weekly is about the limit.

In the larger cities, although it is admitted that times are unusually hard in the theatrical profession, the condition of theatrical affairs in the smaller cities and towns has not yet been fully realized. It will be. The moving picture show has supplanted the "one-night stand" in the affections of the provincial. He believes, and truly so, that he can get about as good entertainment at the picture show as at the "one-night stand" attraction, and at about one-third cost. In these days of the high cost of living this is a factor taken seriously into consideration by the amusement seeker and his family.

There is no gainsaying that this has been a bad season for theatrical ventures, not only of the "fly-by-night" variety but for the more elaborate productions. The money lost has been considerable. The increased number of theatres is rather a specious argument which might be true if the census reports did not show an increase in population, and if the propaganda of the theatre had not increased the number of theatre-goers. The theatre-goers are increasing but they are turning to the moving picture show. The thousands of palatial theatres in this country must be kept open and plays must be produced. Those that have merit survive; those lacking show a deficit. The public is choosing more carefully and, with the picture plays increasing in excellence and elaborateness. is it too much to believe that within the next ten years the moving picture theatre will supplant the "legitimate" in importance and popularity?

"Canuck of the Catskills," care of Moving Picture News, New York.

Dear Comrade:

I take my pen in hand to give my view of the Moving Picture News. I think it is the best trade paper in existence. The Moving Picture News not only has the union label but is a friend of union labor and especially the friend of the operator.

I think and I believe you will agree with me when I say that there is one thing missing, and that is the operators' column or can we say a chat column.

If they were to start a column I would be very glad to write something often.

Here is something you may think strange, but I can assure you is a fact. I like immensely Pathe Weekly and Vitagraph Monthly. (Here let me say is the only thing lacking on an Independent program.) And I wonder when the Independents will get one out.

Well here's hoping long success to yourself, Moving Picture News and Independent trade in general. Hoping my letter does not bore, I am, Happy yours for good projection, Bronx, N. Y.

* * * *

Editor Moving Picture News,

Dear Sir: I have read in the different papers lately so much about the evils in motion pictures that I feel I must say a word in behalf of one of the greatest teachers the world has ever known.

A few days ago a lad of the age of fourteen was taken before a magistrate for attempted burglary and arson; and some wise "Nut" of a reporter got hold of the story, and with his inventive brain (?) worked up the details in such a manner that the story by no means gave credit to the moving picture business.

Shortly after, when the report came out, it showed what an "Ananias" the reporter was, and that the boy had been in the habit of reading the cheap blood-and-thunder novels until his brain worked up with the idea that he could imitate those in the story, and what was the result? The boy was sent to a reformatory until he reaches the age of twenty-one.

It seems too bad that this cheap, trashy, uncalled for literature cannot be done away with.

I would suggest to some of those intelligent (?) enemies of the moving pictures, that they take a stroll some evening in any district they may choose, and observe how the coming generation amuse themselves, such as pitching pennies, playing cards, shooting craps, using foul language, or learning the short cut to the Road to Ruin, by rushing the "growler," and then quietly ask themselves, wouldn't it be much better to have them go to a nice clean theatre, and enjoy a good picture show?

From one who knows that the moving pictures enlighten and educate. A Careful Observer.

Daily Consular and Trade Reports of Moving Pictures Abroad

ENGLAND

Rapid Growth of Moving Picture Business

[From Consul Albert W. Swalm, Southampton.]

Many inquiries which have reached this consulate in regard to moving pictures will be answered by the following extract from the London Daily Mail:

"A few years ago the moving picture did not exist. To-day it is the basis of a vast industry. The last published returns for the administrative county of London showed that some 287 picture playhouses were licensed in that area, and the probability is that the next return will show an increase to 350. It is estimated that there are 3,000 picture playhouses in the country, and this number is rapidly increasing. Scarcely a town of any size is without its picture playhouse, and in the larger centers of population these places exist by the dozen.

"The growth of the cinematograph business began in 1895 or 1896, and was largely developed in America. Even now it is stated that in proportion to population there are five times as many picture shows in America as there are in this country. That money was made in the new industry may be guessed when it is stated that one of the pioneer firms of film makers in this country was for a period making profits of $25,000 per month. Film making does not represent such vast profits to-day, as other manufacturers soon competed. The price of the film came down from 25 cents a foot, obtained readily in the early days, to 8 cents a foot, which is the price to-day. Indeed, film makers now say the only people making money out of the pictures are those who show them.

Profits and Expenses

"The film may cost anything to make. The expense is determined, of course, by the class of the subject and the cost of getting it photographed. For instance, above the cost of photography and manufacturing charges, some films paid as much as $1,000 for special positions along the coronation route. On the other hand, some popular subjects are easily accessible and cost little above the photographic and manufacturing expenses. Successful photographers for film purposes make good incomes, and men with eyes for good subjects who secure fine pictures are paid anywhere from $1,500 to $5,000 a year.

"Curiously enough, England, though not the pioneer of the trade and lagging behind America in the extent of its film-making enterprises, is the clearing house of the world for pictures. All the makers are represented in London, and most foreign and colonial buying is done through English channels."

SCOTLAND

American and French Films Lead

[From Consul Rufus Fleming, Edinburgh.]

The films used in Scotland are chiefly American and French. A great variety of machines are employed in British moving picture houses—probably as many as 30 or 40 different makes and styles. There is no film factory in this district, as neither light nor atmospheric conditions are ever suitable for manufacturing the best films.

Moving picture entertainments are regulated by the provisions of the cinematograph act, a copy of which is herewith inclosed (and will be loaned to American firms on request). Unless "nonflam" films only are used the apparatus must be operated within a fireproof closet. Among the regulations made by the Secretary for Scotland under the cinematograph act are the following:

"Fire appliances adequate for the protection of the building shall be provided and shall include at least the following, namely, a damp blanket, two buckets of water, and a bucket of dry sand; in a building used habitually for the purpose of cinematograph or other similar exhibitions they shall also include a sufficient number of hand grenades or other portable fire extinguishers.

Lanterns, Projectors and Films

"Lanterns shall be placed on firm supports constructed of fire-resisting material, and shall be provided with a metal shutter which can be readily inserted between the source of light and the film gate.

"The film gate shall be of massive construction and shall be provided with ample heat-radiating surface. The passage for the film shall be sufficiently narrow to prevent the flame passing traveling upward or downward from the light opening.

"Cinematograph projectors shall be fitted with two metal film boxes of substantial construction, and not more than 14 inches in diameter, inside measurement, and to and from these the films shall be made to travel. The film boxes shall be made to close in such a manner and shall be fitted with a film slot so constructed as to prevent the passage of flame to the interior of the box.

"Spools shall be chain or gear driven and films shall be wound on spools so that the wound film shall not at any time reach or project beyond the edges or flanges of the spool. During the exhibition all films when not in use shall be kept in closed metal boxes."

RUSSIA

(From Vice Consul General Ripley Wilson, Moscow.)

The theaters here do not combine moving pictures and vaudeville acts, as do many in America, but simply show from three to eight films, depending on the price of admission. The few theaters where one can obtain a seat for 8 cents are patronized only by the poorer classes. The average theater charges 20 and 25 cents for admission, and puts perhaps eight pictures on the screen, of which at least six are imported.

Films of many different services are used, but those of French manufacture seem to be the most popular. Various films made in the United States are also used, and those that depict scenes of Western or Indian life are held in high favor by the Russians.

Moving Pictures in Southern Russia

(From Consul John H. Grout, Odessa.)

Almost every city or town in this consular district is provided with moving picture shows and they are particularly well supported in Odessa. Most of the films are from a Paris house that has a branch office in Odessa, but many American films are shown and arouse considerable interest. The language used on films should of course be Russian.

American comics are popular, but all climaxes should be made as plain as possible. There is no doubt that many films made in the United States would meet with good success if properly introduced, but as it is they are all sent through exchange agents in Europe and as a result France and Germany are better known than the United States.

It seems very probable that if scenes from the city and country life of various parts of the United States could be shown they would be popular. For instance, a series of pictures presenting the views that an immigrant would see on his way to the United States and after landing there would probably be well received. Such views would be of interest not only to those who at some future time intend to emigrate, but also to those who have friends in the United States or are interested in the country for other reasons.

SPAIN

(From Vice Consul General Harry A. McBride, Barcelona.)

Barcelona has about seventy moving picture shows, and the number is increasing. There is also a manufactory of machines, which has about 550 machines in use throughout Spain, and one maker of films, whose output, however, is very small.

(From Consul Robert Frazer, Jr., Valencia.)

Supplies for the moving picture trade here are principally of French origin, and are practically all obtained through agencies at Barcelona, which is the principal distributing center in the country for machines and films. French films predominate at present, but there are also many Spanish scenes of processions, bull fights, military parades, etc. American firms would probably reach this trade best by following the regular channels and obtaining Barcelona agents.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CINEMATOGRAPH

The Censor in England—By Leonard Donaldson

Now that dramatic sketches for the variety stage will need to be licensed by the Lord Chamberlain, the question of a censor for motion pictures is once more under discussion. There appears to be a strong feeling in certain circles in England, that however free the English exhibitions are from objectionable features, such a growing field as the picture theatre now ought to be kept under control. Individual members of the film industry, however, hold diverse views, but before I quote any of the opinions, it will interest readers of the "News" to learn something of the laxity and maladministration which have made the office of the censor of plays in England notorious. The same muddle and extraordinary vagaries threaten the censorship of the photo-play should it fall under State direction.

The absolute autocracy of the Department of the Examiner of Staged Plays; its cynical disregard for the business interests involved; its refusal to alter its views according to the requirements of modernity, have rendered it obnoxious even to those who once approved of stage censorship in theory.

War is to be declared, even at the moment of writing, on the entire principle of the censorship of stage plays. There have been petitions before, signed by the foremost dramatists and authors in Great Britain, but in spite of them nothing has been done to improve the situation. I hear that a petition is now to be presented to King George, signed not only by playwrights and authors, but by theatre managers and prominent people representative of all classes of play-goers. The position of the theatrical manager is to-day an unenviable one; the position of the playwright is even worse. His play is his livelihood. For the theatre manager, after all, there are other plays to fall back upon. The playwright is unrecognized by the "Examiner of Stage Plays"; he has no redress at all. Sheltered behind the wall of an ancient Act of Parliament, unassailable and remote, the censor may do as he pleases, and there is nothing in the laws of England to enable those who deem themselves unjustly treated by his judgment to obtain any satisfaction. That there is something rotten in the state of the Lord Chamberlain's department is shown by the latest escapade of the censor with regard to Mr. Cosmo Hamilton's new play, "The Blindness of Virtue," which has just been produced in London. The Lord Chamberlain requests that plays shall be sent to him for license seven days before the date of their production. In accordance with this rule the management of this particular theatre duly sent in the manuscript of Mr. Hamilton's play. Until the very last moment he was kept in suspense regarding the judgment of the "Examiner of Plays." The piece had been rehearsed, the seats sold, and almost at the eleventh hour a letter arrived saying it had been passed and that a "license will be forwarded in due course." In the meantime the play is produced on sufferance.

There is something incomprehensible about the changes that occur in the mind of those responsible for the censoring of plays. I will quote a few typical examples in next week's issue.

Houston, Tex.—R. Phillips has sold the Dixie moving picture show to Sam Parish.

MR. ALMOST BUTT

"BENNIE"

The above is a good likeness of "Bennie," one of the London juvenile artists, who has made good in the moving picture field.

"Bennie" has posed in numbers of Lubin photo plays. One of his best efforts was as the office boy in a recent picture called "The Office Favorite."

"A SAD CASE"

Listen my children and you shall hear
Not the midnight ride of Paul Revere,
But the tale of an operator that didn't know;
He's resting in peace beneath the snow.

In a picture booth, this boy so gay
With some matches did start to play,
A puff of smoke and a flash of light
He passed away the other night.

So Mr. Operator, you will always find
That it pays to be careful when doing your grind,
Just feed the light and watch the screen,
And keep the screwdriver off the machine.

It cost the boss money and he hasn't much
To pay for new stars and cams and such,
When he comes in the booth, show him you're alive,
Then instead of ten per, you'll get twenty-five.

Marshall, Mo.—The Lyric Theatre, owned by Mr. McChesney, was destroyed by fire at a heavy loss.

Cleveland, O.—The Metropolitan Theatre Co.; capital, $10,000; Geo. W. Hausheer and others.

Redding Cal.—R. T. Montgomery, of San Francisco, representing the Coast Theatre Co., has made a proposition to the Chamber of Commerce to build a $25,000 theatre here.

New York, N. Y.—Mrs. N. Roberge will erect a one-story moving picture theatre at Columbus avenue and 100th street, at a cost of $3,000. Resides at 160 W. 98th street.

LUX CALIFORNIA COMPANY AT LOS ANGELES

THE MACKIE-ASCHER ENTERPRISE

"Mackie has it" again, and as for Sydney Ascher, it is a well-known fact that whatever his magic fingers touch simply grows and blossoms in the most astounding fashion.

Well, they have started on a sprint together, and we must say that a combination like Mackie and Ascher is not to be beaten for all around business and executive ability; this stupendous proposition which they have as yet hidden up their sleeves is bound to be a gigantic success.

Hearing that there was "something doing," we made it our business to take a run in at Mr. Ascher's "Nicoland" on Third avenue and 162d street and try to pump out a few of the interesting details of the case.

Those who know Sydney Ascher know him to be a man of remarkable executive ability, an indefatigable worker and organizer, and a man of honorable repute.

Mr. Ascher, though a very young man, has been mixed up in theatrical and advertising business for several years. He has also been at the bottom of most of the reform movements among exhibitors in New York City. He has worked along with the exhibitor every time for the betterment of the latter's cause.

The new enterprise into which Mr. Ascher and Mr. Mackie are launching has behind it a capital of more than half a million dollars. There is no portion of the moving picture business which they will not be able to touch. They will be prepared in their organized condition to buck any opposition, and they will look to it that lack of capital will never balk the success of the concern. The bettering of the condition of the exhibitor will be one of the main objects of the concern. Branches of the business will be opened up in all the large cities of the Union, and in a very short time things will be booming and the public will be let in on the secret.

Mr. H. A. Mackie, of H. A. Mackie, Inc., whose reliable moving picture supply service is known most favorably throughout the country, is such a familiar figure to our readers as to require but little explanation as to his identity. Mr. Mackie, who in his film exchange at Buffalo bucked the trusts up to the point where he decided it was best to change his course, branched out into his present business. The fact that Mr. Mackie came to New York City in his present business capacity not more than a year ago, and that according to reliable reports in December last that up to that time the H. A. Mackie, Inc., had turned in a business representation of something like $100,000, warrants the acceptance of this gentleman's capabilities at 100 per cent. good by all sensible and intelligent individuals.

It is expected that this firm will be one of the most successful moving picture enterprises that has yet sprung up. That it will be here to stay, with Mackie and Ascher at the helm, and that it will practically revolutionize conditions in the domain of the exhibitor, goes without saying.

St. Patrick's Day is to be celebrated by the Powers Motion Picture Company by the release of an adaptation of the strong Irish drama, "Sogarth Aroon," which is now in course of production. This feature film is to be released four days after the two-reel picture play presenting Mildred Holland in "The Power Behind the Throne." All lovers of the true Irish drama will, no doubt, look forward with the most pleasurable anticipations to the presentation of this picture play, which is being produced with that careful attention to detail which always marks the work of the Powers Company. This company has also other good things in store, the announcement of which will be made later on.

Every exhibitor has a competitor, so has every exchange. consequently the exhibitor showing the best Independent pictures will make the most money and every Exchange renting the best Independent picture produced will secure the most customers and KEEP THEM.

DURBAR IN KINEMACOLOR

New York has seen George and Mary of England crowned King and Queen at Westminster Abbey, and has seen them hailed by their loyal subjects in their triumphant procession through the streets of London. The people of this city can now go to the New York Theatre any time for the next three weeks and see the same monarchs crownd Emperor and Empress of India with the prodigious ceremonies and the elaborate homage to which the people of the Orient are devoted.

Beginning with the arrival of the imperial party at Bombay, the eye of the camera has followed not only the two chief figures of the historic drama, but shows the various preparations that were made by the native authorities—the erection of triumphal buildings, the decorating of the wooden monsters that lined the various routes of passage, even the painting of the elephants and the draping of them with silks and fabrics were shown.

The state entry into Delhi through the Gate of the Elephants, in which princes and soldiery of India figured most prominently, was an interesting feature, showing as it did the various peoples who had gathered to greet their new ruler.

The coronation durbar, which took place on December 12, 1911, in the enormous natural arena of the Delhi plains, formed the central interest in the film representations. This event was followed by the camera managers with considerable judgment, as it gave a comprehensive yet detailed idea of a vast spectacle. In the midst of a city of 30,000 men, who were drawn up in blocks, with curving, sweeping avenues winding through them for the royal procession to follow, was a high, open pavilion, with two thrones in plain view at their summit. Up there, above the far-reaching throngs, their majesties were crowned, received the homage of the princes of India, and then looked down upon the throngs, who, at the signal of the coronation, raised their hats and burst into prolonged cheering.

Other events shown were the receptions given at the King's camp to the Indian chiefs, the Delhi polo tournament, the state garden party, bathing the elephants in the river, scenes in Calcutta and—one of the most impressive of all—the review of troops on the plains outside Delhi, in which such masses as were never before assembled in military array swept in magnificent line past the Emperor, the cavalry at full gallop, with pennants streaming in the wind.

The durbar pictures were taken throughout with far better judgment than those of the coronation in London. All parades in these pictures approach the spectator, as they did not in the others, and, besides this, a more comprehensive idea of the general effect has been caught in these films.

An element of interest would certainly be added if some one were to stand beside the screen and point out details with their significance, and call attention to personages. In the hurry of the film and the crowding of interest much is necessarily lost when not deliberately pointed out.

These pictures are from every point of view worth seeing. The perfection of motion color photography in a form practicable for the reproduction of important historical events, such as the durbar in Delhi, is one of the greatest achievements that science has offered modern times.—New York Tribune.

DURBAR IN KINEMACOLOR AFFORDS VAST DELIGHT.

Most of our valuable superlatives would occur in this notice of the Durbar Kinemacolor pictures if I were to let myself revel in them. Suppose, instead of calling them all to service, it is understood that they all go for the exhibition given at the New York Theatre last night. If the Coronation pictures in natural color at the Kinemacolor Theatre were a revelation to New Yorkers, the only words that can be summoned in characterizing what was reproduced of the scenes attending the crowning of George V as Emperor of India are words that have all been made commonplace through misuse.

There is no need trying to praise these films. They are the last word in the art of showing what happened by simply reproducing the happenings in color no less than in action, in likeness no less than in perspective. If I had seen the original durbar at Delhi, and watched royalty in its glittering escort enter Bombay, I am quite sure I should never have taken in with my eye half so much as was reeled off on the Kinemacolor films in the New York Theatre last night.

Possibly one could have described what he might have seen at Delhi with more assurance than he could try to describe what he saw on the screen in the playhouse, because the scenes would have remained in his perspective long enough to make notes of the gorgeous colors, and to give a pen picture of the semi-barbaric and ultra-civilized mixture of statecraft, militarism, society and various phases of life seen in India's ancient capital when the chieftains of the East came to the feet of the fifth George of England to pay homage. But here the pageants raced so rapidly, in the two hours that they were thrown on the canvas with every color and every detail, that one retains little more than a sense.

Thousands upon thousands of feet of films were filled with the visual record of the brave and brilliant doings on the occasion of the imperial visit to India, only a small part of which could be displayed in the limited time during which the packed audence at the New York went into ecstacies over what they beheld. The selections were wisely made.

Most engrossing of these sights were the preparations in camp for the Coronation Durbar, including the quaint ceremony of painting the elephants' trunks; the procession of the troops and of the Indian chiefs with their retinues through the Elephants' Gate to Delhi; the homage of the chiefs to the sovereigns, the review of 50,000 troops by King George showing the whole army spread out on a great plain and wheeling before his Majesty, and the elephants at play with their stockade and in their pool.

All I had heard and read of the glories of the durbar was more than realized in this reproduction by the marvel of Kinemacolor. Now and again came the conviction that Belasco at his best could not touch some of the settings planned by the Orientals and the English in their determination to gratify the Eastern passion for show. No such riot of color as was indulged in ever had been pictured to the human eye except in its original staging, and the general testimony is that the Durbar of 1911 was the Durbar of Durbars.

It was worth all the trouble King George took to go to Delhi to be crowned Emperor—if not to inspire the loyalty of his East Indian subjects—then to give the world in the universal and eloquent language of Kinemacolor a knowledge of their manners and customs and appearance. They ought to be grateful to their English overlord for that, because they show up under these conditions as a fine lot of fellows, worthy of no worse fate than that which befell them when Clive and Hastings paved the way for the proclamation by Beaconsfield of Victoria as Empress of India.

Anybody who fails to see the Durbar in natural colors will miss a part of his education that should not be wanting. The while that he learns volumes by seeing these pictures he will have one of the keenest delights ever conferred on humanity by the invention of electricity and photography. J. C. G., in New York Press.

THE WILD WEST

Unfortunately the average play in the motion picture theatre looks about as much like the actual West as it was thirty or forty years ago as it looks like a lady's drawing room. The poetic conception of the West has been made to do duty for, lo, these many moons. The real West has been ignored, or has been overlooked as lacking in sensation or even interest.

There is a West which is well worth reproducing. But it hasn't found its author. The West was, and is, picturesque. The picturesque features are more due to the sterling character of the inhabitants than to any sensational actions which may be ascribed to them. The West is now, and always has been, the home of substantial citizens. Formerly they were somewhat addicted to maintaining order, or doing a few other things in a somewhat picturesque and rather vigorous fashion. They make progress the same way now, though they do not practice gun play and ride horses as furiously as shown in the average motion picture film.

The Indian, too, has been represented in a way which would put the most abject of them to shame. There are Indians and Indians, it is true, but the average Indian does not embrace, he does not slap his fellow on the back, he does not impulsively extend his hand when he is about to depart upon a mission of more or less importance, and there are a host of other things he doesn't do, even though the average scenario writer would like to have their audiences think he does. The motion picture Indian is, in general, a figment poetic conception which has embodied so many impossibilities Indian as he was, or, maybe, as he is, in remote sections where the civilizing influence of the white man has not yet penetrated.

The queer things they do and the strange acts they perform are quite in keeping with the equally foreign movements of the so-called cowboy. Both alike are on the toboggan and will disappear along with the bison and coyote within a few years. They are doomed. That much is certain. It would be well, then, if some enterprising producer would get together some real Indians and some real cowboys and reproduce actual life among them as faithfully as the film will permit. These wouldn't be sensational enough for motion pictures. They would, however, be invaluable as historic documents, something which will be of interest and of considerable information to later generations.

Those boundless (?) prairies over which these essentially American personages once roamed have been annihilated. Where once they stretched away in apparently endless loneliness, there are cities and towns sending the smoke from innumerable factories aloft. Railroads gridiron the once trackless waste. Common roads and trolley cars follows the paths marked by the bison and the horseback rider. The old West is gone. The new West is in absolute and permanent possession.

It would be well for some scenario writer to become acquainted with the life which now pulses through all these arteries. He would learn much to his advantage. Moreover, he would become familiar with a phase of life which is quite as attractive, and infinitely more satisfying, than the half-mythical conglomeration which is served up now under the name of Western.

Poetic conception is an excellent assistant in the concoction of plots and the construction of romances. But the poetic conception which has embodied so many impossibilities in good film under the name of West deserves some pruning or some other operation which will at least curb, or in some degree control, its altogether exuberant fancy. Closer attention to historic fact would add to the interest, even though it might reduce the sensation. Fierce rides do not make a cowboy, nor do fine feathers make an Indian.

Costumes and action are essential in any sort of character delineation, but the costuming and action which characterize a great many so-called Western pictures are so at variance with the facts that the pictures suffer and the public is misled into beliefs which are at most misunderstood by the authors of the curious combinations of misplaced portrayals which are common to a considerable number of authors.

There was a West worth knowing. There is a West better worth knowing. Those who were there thirty years ago understand what this means. Those who have been there recently understand full well that the present is quite as seriously misunderstood as the time long since passed. The West is a state of mind which requires adjustment, no matter whether the author is indulging in reminiscence or is reproducing facts which belong to the present. The real result, misleading and untrue to life, is almost invariably the same.

The opportunity is great. The persons capable of seizing this opportunity seem few. By and by some one will find it, and the success which follows his effort will be more remarkable than anything which has gone before. The West will eventually come into its own. When it does the moving pictures will benefit and the millions who enjoy them will see something really characteristic and worth while.

MR. ALMOST BUTT

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

Hot Springs, Ark., Feb. 14.—A walk up Central Avenue, which is the Broadway of this resort, the past week, and one would have imagined that the big circus had switched its dates, and that, so far as the motion picture houses were concerned, the principal thoroughfare of Hot Springs had been turned into a "Midway," with its screaming banners, flaring lithos and all other "appurtenances thereunto appertaining," as the young lady from Boston said.

Just give me your hand for a moment, stranger, and let me pilot you about. You may not be used to the sights, and I wouldn't have you wear "blinders" for the world, for, with a little care and attention, your eyes will get accustomed to the "flash" before each house.

Take the Lyceum and come right down the line. See the gentleman with the convict's suit. Note his measured tread; also the ball and chain. No, he hasn't escaped in reality—just a little advertising stunt that Eddie Gavrel pulled off to let the "faithful" know that the moton pictures, "Twenty Years in Sing Sing," had arrived and would be shown exclusively in the Lyceum. In fact, Eddie corralled a whole bunch of this brand of "convicts," loaded them on a cart, put uniforms on two men, armed them with Winchesters and paraded them up and down "the main stem," with the result that the method proved to be a good one and the house was jammed. And now we come to the new Central, where, as you can see, Vitagraph's reel of the Equitable fire headlines the programme. The noise that you hear, the breaking of glass, crashing of heavy material and the ringing of fire-engine bells, together with the toot of horns and the hiss of steam, is merely some of the effects that Carl Hanson brought into play to let the audience know that when a New York building burns and the picture of it comes to the new Central, he is there with the details, and what Tex. Griffin and his bunch of harmony dispensers in the pit at this house don't do for a picture to make it more realistic in the way of appropriate music—well, stranger, it isn't worth mentioning.

And now I'm going to take you to the Photo Play Theatre, where you first see some real classy paper of a lithographic nature depicting that pleasant and ladylike game they are wont to pull off for the Dorcas Society in Mexico, but better known to the uninitiated Americans as a blood-spilling bullfight. Ugh! Gives you the shivers, don't it, to look at it? Yes, you are quite right, the authorities did stop these pictures in other cities, but, bless your heart, this is Hot Springs, and there is greater latitude in this resort than in the average city.

You will note, too, that there are several dressed in the habiliments of the bullfighter; also don't overlook the posters and other illustrative billing. You see, when local managers get anything that is worth while, they believe in letting the whole world know of it.

I saw the picture of the Equitable fire and the effects that the Central Theatre musicians brought forward were as interesting as the picture itself, although it was a typical New York fire. Also I witnessed the bullfight reels, and while I did not approve of this kind of motion photography, for the reason that I believe pictures of this nature do the industry generally more harm than good, will state that they were very good, so far as a picture goes. The women in the audience shuddered when the maddened bulls tossed horses and riders into the air, and it wasn't an altogether inspiring sight. It was impossible for me to witness Eddie Gavrel's convict camp at the Lyceum, but I understand that he did an immense business. He certainly had the novel advertising to get it.

The management of the Photo Play has announced their intention of tearing out the interior of their theatre and redecorating this popular house, making it one of the most attractive in the city. They have recently purchased a new mirror screen, which will be a feature of the improvements. The man selling the mirror screens gave an exhibition of their usefulness here the past week and delighted the local trade, with the result that one was purchased immediately.

And, speaking of improvements and changes, it might be well at this point to mention the deal that was closed by George Walker, who, with Sidney M. Nutt, built the new Central, whereby the former takes charge of the Majestic Theatre, having acquired a five-year lease. The Majestic is situated on Malvern Avenue. Mr. Walker secured that theatre, the plumbing shop next door and a concession adjoining that. He is going to convert the plumbing shop into one of his novelty and art stores, rip the Majestic inside and out, transforming it into an up-to-date and attractive motion picture and vaudeville house and give to the colored population of the resort a place of amusement that they will be proud of. The Majestic is the only theatre in the city that caters to the colored patronage. It has always been looked upon as their house, and any vaudeville acts that play there have always been ladies and gentlemen of the "smoked" variety. Mr. Walker states that he is going to continue the vaudeville policy and give his dusky patrons the finest pictures that they have ever seen. He also informed me that it is his intention to place Frank Ritter, former songster of the Lyceum, in charge of the Majestic, and, on paper and knowing what the house can do if the right kind of a show is given the "cullud" constituency, it would seem that George has struck the right thing. Anyway, he has five years in which to demonstrate his theory.

Who says that motion pictures will not become an important factor in political campaigns? I wonder if you in the effete East realize that out in Iowa the candidates for State offices are depending largely on the class of motion picture shows that they can give for their success in the present political battle that is being waged there? Such is the case. During the week I received a query from an Iowa correspondent, asking if the "New Era" cared to use 300 words of a motion picture political yarn, and I ordered the Iowa scribe to rush 200. He did. It appears that the Iowa office seekers are carrying about the State with them a moving picture machine, operator and pictures, together with a phonograph, illustrated songs and stereopticon pictures. They get the crowd by giving a free show, and before the last reel is run off the orator proceeds to cut loose and tell those present how absolutely essential it is to elect him to office in order that the dear State may be saved from going to the "bow-wows." For novelty of campaigning I doff my "lid" to the gentlemen from Iowa.

Reports that reach me from Memphis are to the effect that the crusade that is going on there on some of the cheap picture houses is bringing the results desired, and that as a result of the same there is a marked improvement all along the line of motion picture industry. The New Scimitar certainly put a bomb under some of the houses, and printers' ink showed the people things that a majority of them did stop to realize existed. Memphis is one of the busiest and best cities in the Southland, and the house-cleaning in the picture industry will do the trade and town a great deal of good.

William Faversham, presenting "The Faun," made his debut in this city Monday. It was "Willie's" first visit to Hot Springs, and, as "Teddy" would announce it, he was "de-light-ed!" He had expected to find a much smaller city, and he was startled at its great hotels and magnificent bath houses; also at the representative class of visitors that he saw.

I want to tell the Thanhouser Kid that I have seen her in many pictures, but of them all liked her best in the one that came to the Photo Play the past week, "Just a Bad Kid." She was great in that reel, and some of the women in the audience were so taken with her work that they wanted to go up and pick her off the curtain.

"The Relentless Law," the finest and most interesting American that has visited the "Valley of Vapors" in many moons, also came to the Photo Play the past week, and it was the hit of that day's programme. This theatre has undertaken a campaign of advertising that is bringing the results, for readers of the local papers are moving picture "fans" of the deepest dye.

Whatever made Biograph sore on Coco Cola? Holy smoke! but didn't their "dope" reel slam that industry? It created a howl of laughter here, and I think that every doctor—and I think this is a town of physicians and druggists—went there to look it over. It was a weird sort of an offering, but as a solar plexus why did they slip that one over?

"The Prosecuting Attorney," a Selig reel, was excellent and a great delegation visited the new Central to see "Chumps," featuring John Bunny and Marshall P. Wilder. This was the week's best comedy.

The Man in the Baths.

NESTOR RELEASES

There is no firm among the Independent manufactories that is going ahead any more rapidly than the Nestor. We look with interest at each new release presented by this go-ahead firm, remarking on the constant progress made by them and the high tone of the various interesting subjects filmed by them.

During the past week that fine split reel for Saturday, March 2, "His Good Intentions," 700 feet, and 300 feet, "The Battle of Roses," happen to be the ones that we had the good fortune to view. The first mentioned is a rattling good comedy. The college boy who has the true spirit of an athlete, and who has sworn to abide by the precepts set down by his trainer, goes to visit his cousins. He disappoints and annoys the girls, who have expected to put in a jolly time with their cousin, by retiring at nine o'clock each night, and by going for a ten-mile run each morning instead of taking a jaunt in the family auto according to the girls' desire.

On the ten-mile jaunt he comes to grief, being arrested for an escaped lunatic. The situation is duly alleviated, however, by the arrest of the real lunatic, and so for the remainder of the visit the trainer and his precepts are forgotten, and the young people have a good time generally.

"The Battle of Roses" is a beautiful bit of fragrance from the South. Nothing can be imagined more luxuriantly beautiful and suggestive of the warm Southern sunshine than the artistically devised rose-covered floats that appear in the rose parade at Pasadena, Cal., and which the Nestors photographed.

Two large Western dramas—"The Smugglers," for release Monday, February 26, and "At Rolling Forks," for release Wednesday, February 28—are of deep interest, with beautiful scenic effects. Other early March releases promise to be equally fine.

Mr. David Horsley left Bayonne, N. J., the beginning of the week en route for the Nestor studio at Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Horsley will make several stops during the trip westward to take pictures of many interesting scenes and conditions to be met with in passing through that part of the counry.

THE RELIANCE COMPANY

The Reliance Company, which has been the only company in the Independent field to offer exhibitors a series of educational subjects, have listed for early release further natural history subjects of an intensely interesting character. On March 16, in connection with Bedelia's "At Home," they will release a half-reel subject dealing with the alligator. Scenes showing how the alligator is raised, from the age of six months to two hundred and twenty-five years, will give the spectator an exceptional idea of what this animal is like when in captivity. On March 23, on the same reel with "Jealousy," will be found a few hundred feet of most peculiar reptiles showing traces of the primitive and prehistoric. These unique little creatures are not usually found in the museums or aquariums. Together with "The Birthday Present," on April 3, will be found a subject dealing with lizards, and shows in the minutest detail the difference between the poisonous and non-poisonous lizard. Subjects to follow these will deal with snakes and their economic value, bird studies and other phases of animal life that should prove not only of great value to the exhibitor, but to the factors in educational lines.

A TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR

In an article which appeared in last week's issue, page 10, entitled "The Waterproof Film and the Great Necessity for Its Proper Use," a typographical error appeared by the insertion of the word "afraid" in place of "ahead" in the sentence which reads thus: "We have been told that the only trouble with our proposition is that we are afraid of the game." Corrected it reads: "We have been told that the only trouble with our proposition is that we are ahead of the game." This makes a vast difference in the meaning of the sentence.

THE CALL OF THE DRUM

In "The Call of the Drum," the Imp drama release of March 7, we have an unfamiliar theme skillfully treated. An old soldier is tempted to give up the society of his former comrades in arms by his newly-married daughter, who thinks she can make comfortable his remaining days. But the influence of his dreams of past days are so strong upon him that he cannot resist the temptation to rejoin his old friends.

His daughter and her husband make a last effort to lure him away from what they conceive to be an unhappy life, but sentiment triumphs; the call of the drum has proved too strong.

G. A. R. Veterans should appreciate this picture.

IMP'S ST. PATRICK'S DAY PICTURE

"Shamus O'Brien," the Imp picture for St. Patrick's Day, will be released on Thursday, March 14; that is, in time for the above celebration, and will be a 2,000-foot reel.

Every Irishman all over the world is familiar with Samuel Lover's poem on this subject. The character and adventures of Shamus will appeal to every son of Erin.

The poem is one which has always been a great favorite with reciters and dramatic readers. The subject of it never fails to stir the heart and interest of an Irishman.

The character of Shamus O'Brien should be very dear to all American Irishmen. He had many thrilling adventures in fighting against the English in the early part of the last century. He was caught, jailed, tried and sentenced. Nevertheless, Shamus O'Brien escaped and made his way to the United States.

Thus, in the character of Shamus, many millions of Irishmen in this country will recognize a character akin to their own.

St. Louis, Mo.—Edward Koeln, Wm. Sievers and Theo. Rassieur have formed the Rex Amusement & Realty Co., and will erect a new $150,000 theatre at Grand and Lucas avenues.

Raymond, Wash.—An opera house ,to have a seating capacity of 1,200 and cost 50,000, is contemplated for this city.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

WE love moving pictures first and foremost because they are animated pictures or reflections of circumstance and events attendant on human life in its several conditions, when they do not pertain to science or other educational subjects, which latter, by the way, probe our natural curiosity and reported love of knowledge to the extent of causing us to flock in droves to see an animated exhibition of an X-ray experiment, or something equally interesting and significant of the wonderful advancement in modern science.

We love them because they speak in a language common to all, and because they afford the easiest mode of obtaining knowledge of material things to be put into use.

Dr. Dresslar, of the National Bureau of Education, "deplores the accumulating evidence that moving pictures seem to suit the desires of the public better than poetry, music and art."

Art and the moving picture are one. The moving picture is rapidly becoming a matter of art only. Even today we have in the moving picture scenes which rival in beauty, conception and preparation the masterpieces of the great artists.

Music and poetry in their more elevated order are together a mysterious language of the higher intelligence, unknown to the masses save as they live and study and work toward that higher intelligence. The moving picture is destined in the theatres of the future not to eliminate the desire and inclination toward the love of poetry and music, but on the other hand to aid in unlocking the door of the chamber of mysteries, by elucidating the language of the sister arts in the indulgence of that most useful organ of sight, the eye.

The opinion of John Collier, of New York, staff member of the People's Institute and Secretary of the National Board of Censorship, in his address at the "Ladies' Day" luncheon of the Board of Trade, Springfield, Mass., on "Leisure Time and Lost Opportunity a Public Responsibility," is worthy of comment.

Mr. Collier opens his address by saying that 1,000,000 people in New York found an hour each day to spend in motion picture shows and 2,000 attend dance halls every night. In conclusion Mr. Collier said: "There are 14,000 motion picture shows in the country, with 5,000,000 attendants daily. No better system than the one in existence could be invented to discourage art and education. A trust controls the business and competition is eliminated. The managers have little choice in their pictures and all that is necessary is some element of excitement to gather the crowds. The motion pictures mark an epoch. Here is a book with illustrations and the activities and dramatic possibilities visualized. They might become a great educational feature. New York regulates the fire and building constructions of the theatres, but the character of the shows is regulated under a law framed for traveling side shows and snake charmers. New York could go into the picture business, use vacant city buildings, cut down the price one-half, educate citizens and make money.

"Regulation of amusements is coming, and it will come through the extension of school systems. The schools of the future will be built deliberately with the purpose of supplying the demand of the people for dances, amusements, sociability and education. Cooper Union stands as an example that they will not degenerate into political clubs.

"The solution of the problem of the social forces lies in the expansion of the schools and the playgrounds. Social life should be controlled in the young and by the city, which should extend its influence to meet the demands for social activities."

"No more smoking in theatres in Brooklyn and Queens," so says the edict issued by the fire authorities. Fire Commissioner Johnson has sent out a warning that if this order is violated prosecutions will follow. Captain Quinn, of the Division of Violations of Fire Prevention Bureau, has placed as penalty for the offence a fine not exceeding $500.

A few days ago one of the three polar bears, along with three sea lions, which had been loaned by the Hagenbeck wild animal firm to the Lubin Co. for the production of a story which called for a North Pole setting, finding his surroundings not exactly to his liking, and being unwilling to submit to such indignities as being pulled through tables, benches, sewing machines, typewriters, beer barrels and other props, cut short the operations by shying into a ground row of electric bulbs, each of which broke with a visible snort at Mr. Bear. Raising a decided objection to the fireworks, he ran through the studio, during which time vases, lamps, Beatrice Oldfield, Ormi Hawley and a few other important props were scattered to the four winds. Having vented his fury on the studio, he proceeded upward to the next floor. The door of May Buckley's dressing room was pushed gently open. Looking in the direction of the door, the young lady was startled by the apperance there of the shaggy white head of the polar Bruno. With a little frightened shriek she subsided to the corner of the room, pulling her chair after her. For a few moments Bruno frolicked on the floor, kicking his heels in the air. Gathering courage from the bear's playful actions, Miss Buckley edged cautiously up to the bear and commenced talking to him and stroking his fur, but Bruno, not used to ladies' society, and not to be instructed in present-day etiquette, responded with two or three wallops of his powerful fist. Miss Buckley, not being up in pugilistic tricks, retired in favor of the keepers, who proceeded to lasso Bruno.

President Taft gave something worth while to posterity when he posed the other day for the moving picture men. On February 14 Taft signed with the gold pen presented to him by Postmaster-General Hitchcock the proclamation admitting Arizona to the Union. To perpetuate the scene for future generations moving picture men invaded the White House for the first time.

Prof. Mackenzie, of the State University of Kentucky, in a recent lecture at the University of Cincinnati on "The Dramatic Impulse," said: "One of the newest manifestations of the impulse is seen in the moving picture theatre, of which 10,000 have been erected in the United States in the last ten years."

A new moving picture theatre named the Knickerbocker was opened most successfully at Euclid avenue and East 83d street, Cleveland, O., on Monday, February 19. This theatre has a seating capacity of 1,200 people. First release films will be shown here and good music will be provided henceforth by the H. L. Spitalny concert orchestra. The Atlas Amusement Co. will control the house.

A recent development has been the production of X-ray moving pictures of the internal organs and parts of the body. For rapid motions, like those of the flying insects, a new apparatus takes 2,000 successive views a second on 125 feet of film, and, as the usual stopping of the film for each exposure is impossible at such speed, the exposures are given by electric sparks, each lasting not more than one 1,400,000th of a second. The pictures may be shown on the screen at one 100th as great speed, or the ordinary moving picture rate of fifteen or twenty successive views per second, thus giving a better perception of motions that originally are difficult for the eye to follow.

On Saturday, March 16, the Imp Films Company will release a picture illustrative of interpretive dancing by the Countess Thamara de Swirsky. The services of this lady were secured at great expense by the Imp Films Company, and she will not again dance for moving picture purposes.

The lady made her American début as a dancer at the Metropolitan Opera House at New York City in the season of 1909-10, in Gluck's opera, "Orfeo." She then appeared before New York society at Newport; subsequently at the Boston Opera House and elsewhere.

The Countess de Swirsky was educated in Paris. She is of a noble Russian family and a very skillful pianist. It was her study and knowledge of music that led her to take up the new art of interpretive dancing. One of her critics says: "Mlle. de Swirsky shows perfect understanding of her composers; her whole body seems alive with music as vibrant as a sounded string."

The lady gives first of all a humorous dance and then one entitled "The Spirit of Music." After another dance called "Anitra Dance," the Countess is shown in a series of plastic poses.

Suitable music for the dances is suggested by the Imp Films Company.

More money is invested in public school property in the United States than was required to maintain all the machinery of Federal government in 1910, according to Dr. Fletcher B. Dresslar, of the National Bureau of Education, in a report on the progress of education.

Naples has discovered a striking use for the moving picture machine. A short time ago relatives and friends of officers and men fighting their country's battles in Tripoli were photographed marching in procession past a cinematograph camera and bowing to it. The resulting films were sent to Tripoli, there to be exhibited on screens at night to the troops on active service.

A new Edison promise is that of a home kinetoscope that will make moving pictures available for everybody for varied purposes. It is announced that what now requires 1,000 feet of film will be compressed upon 80 feet, and the apparatus will compare with a sewing machine in cost. An illustration of commercial possibilities is the salesman's idea of moving pictures to show a machine at work.

Rev. Zed H. Copp, of Washington, D. C., has adopted the moving picture camera as the most efficient means of teaching religion to the masses, holding services regularly in several of the city's film theatres. The services include Biblical pictures and stories, supplemented by remarks from the minister, songs, prayer and music.

FOUR THANHOUSER FEATURES IN MARCH, TOO

Has the "four-features-a-month" stunt become a regular performance with the Thanhouser Company? Evidently, if we read the signs aright, for January and February carried that number of features, and now it's ditto in March. Edwin Thanhouser is surely bestirring himself these days when he can deliver four features in three consecutive months and then leave the impression that there are more to come. And to think it was only yesterday that the Independent film world was startled by this producer's announcement that he would positively release a feature every month! From one to four has been a speedy shift, and, we are certain, a very successful one.

Mr. Thanhouser picked the March four just before he left for Florida last week. They are: "The Arab's Pride," released Friday the 1st; "Flying to Fortune," Tuesday the 12th; "Nicholas Nickleby, by Dickens," Tuesday the 19th; and "My Baby's Voice," Friday the 29th. The first of these is the first picture by the Thanhouser Stock Company now operating in Florida. The second feature is stated to be an airship story, in which a real airship is used. "Nicholas Nickleby" is a two-reel subject by the home (New Rochelle) company. The fourth feature, "My Baby's Voice," a sort of telephone story, is announced as the best heart-interest plot Thanhouser has produced thus far in 1912—and Thanhouser announcements never mislead. Edwin Thanhouser's definition of "feature" is a film that always plays a return date.

An organization of a number of the motion picture show men in Kansas City has been formed for the purpose of promoting the proposed city ordinance for the censorship and regulation of motion picture theatres. It is known as the Exhibitors' Association of Kansas City, and is a branch of the national organization. Their object is to elevate the quality of films, promote a city censorship of all shows, put a stop to different film companies, abolish all vulgar and coarse shows, and to have more sanitary, better ventilated and more fireproof buildings.

FEATURE FILM CO.

1 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK

LONDON OFFICE OF THE NEWS

8 Sherwood Street, W.

Flying A's "Santa Catalina" picture has achieved the honor of inclusion in the programme at the London Coliseum. When you hear of a film being featured at one of the West End halls—the Palace, Coliseum, Alhambra or Empire—you are pretty safe in assuming that its merits are above the average. The Coliseum is the leading hall directed by Mr. Oswald Stoll, who recently severed a lengthy connection with Sir Edward Moss, of Moss Empire fame. It is the "family" hall "par excellence" in London, and the inclusion of a picture of an educational character like Santa Catalina is a compliment to the intelligence and powers of appreciation of the audience as well as to the makers of the film.

A word of congratulation to Miss Bush and Mr. Kerrigan while I am speaking of "Flying A's" on their fine work in "The Relentless Law." This is the kind of film which reduces the ladies to tears and sets their male escorts to vigorous, emotion-dissembling nose blowing. Its effect is all the greater in that nothing is forced—the pathos is natural, and it is just the inevitableness of each incident that gives the film its "grip."

I wrote you some time ago that the absorption by the Patents Co. of a leading Independent film maker was imminent. Only this week official corroboration is to hand in the statement that the Cines Co. have been granted the right to release their subjects under the Trust banner. Cines have undoubtedly been gaining in reputation with every month's release in this market, and their subjects should be missed by the Independents.

Had an interesting talk with Mr. R. E. Aitken, of the Western Import Co., Ltd., who is just back from the States and was full of news regarding "Majestic" and "Reliance" films. It appears, anyway, that neither of these two concerns are stinting the money in their efforts to obtain a good product. "Little Mary" was a loss for Majestic, but from what Mr. Aitken tells me of the circumstances it was an inevitable loss, and, possibly, not a permanent one. Majestic has still some remarkably good performers, and Reliance seems to be getting that long-expected move on. It is good to see them "keeping off the drink" a little; subjects showing the effects of intemperance rub some of our audiences the wrong way, and are not first-class sellers. One of the little peculiarities of the English buyer (and presumably the English public) is his sensitiveness to any sign of intoxication in pictures; another is his dislike to seeing any of the symbols of the Catholic religion introduced in a film. If you have a character absolutely, undeniably "blind" in a film, your only chance is to describe him in the synopsis as "excited," and as for the crucifix, etc., a good many hundred feet showing them have been cut out one time and another.

On the same boat as Mr. Aitken there came from the States Mr. Bauman, of the Bison Co., who, however, proceeded straight to Italy, where it is understood the question of the future of the Bison negatives in the hands of Itala was to be discussed. Rumor has it that Bison will be handled in this market by a new company and an "exclusive" line—in other words, each picture will be sold outright to one or other of the renting houses who will hire it to the showmen at "feature" prices. We are anxious to see these new Bisons, with their tremendous Western casts, and if they are as good as we have been led to expect, there should be no difficulty in getting a good price for them, for, as already explained in these notes, all the demand is for exclusive feature pictures, and showmen are willing to pay for the real goods.

John Bull's little crusade against the living picture, alluded to in a previous letter, has petered out rather ignominiously. John Bull was asked by gentlemen connected with the trade to allow them to accompany his representatives to the indecent shows they are alleged to have discovered in London. John Bull's nose for everything that is unsavory is of the keenest, but for once it appears to have led him astray, for the best reply he could manage to the request mentioned was that since the publication of his "exposure" the shows in question had closed down. On which the general comment will be, in the vernacular, "I don't think."

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH REX

Rex is all right! Silent, but diligent, it keeps up its steady march of progress, and as the "still waters that run deep," the current is running swiftly beneath a calm, unruffled countenance.

The films shown to us during the past week at the Rex studio are unsurpassed in excellence. Of the Marion Leonard films 'tis said there are no less than twenty-three ahead. This is going some. A good reserve force leaves time and room for quality.

"Under Her Wing" is a strong drama and story of womanly wit and sacrifice as presented in this film.

"So Speaketh the Heart," for release Sunday, February 25, is an excellent lesson in motherly allegiance and forethought, the stability of a good woman's love, and the sorrowful result of a breach of affectionate trust.

Last, but not least—on the contrary the foremost in quality of all of the excellent Rex films shown us—is that one entitled "The Bargain," the setting for which cost several thousand dollars. This is indeed a wonderful film, and Miss Lois Webber carries off the laurels for dignity, repose and the maintenance of the sentiment to the very last moment of the story. The story is of a young girl who, regardless of her love for another, decides to marry her employer, actually selling herself for his money and jewels. The result is the inevitable one of all loveless marriages. Many wonderful scenes are shown in this film, one of which pictures the young wife a year after the marriage alone among the luxuries of her beautiful home, eating her dinner in solitude, while in alternation the scene at the club where the husband is drinking with his pals is shown. To attempt to describe this picture in the mere telling of the story would be to belittle it, for the splendid work of Miss Webber and Mr. William H. Tooker, and also the magnificent richness of the setting, cannot be properly appreciated without actually being seen. It is a marvel!

This latter is a production of Mr. Edwin S. Porter's, while all of the splendid Marion Leonard films are being taken care of by Mr. Stanner E. V. Taylor.

AN ASSISTED ELOPEMENT

Bessie Smith loves Jack Collins, a young machinist, but because Bert Bruce, the rising young attorney, showed her attentions her mother frowned on Jack and urged Bessie to welcome Bruce's attentions.

When Jack called to see Bessie the mother let him understand plainly that his suit was objectionable, but to the attorney she was graciousness itself. When young people love, opposition usually has the effect of hurrying matters, and Jack secured a marriage license and managed to see Bessie to perfect plans for elopement.

Trivial events sometimes have a great bearing on people's lives. While wrapped in his dream of coming happiness, Jack receives a call to repair an automobile that has turned turtle in the outskirts of a neighboring town. It so happened that in this village an epidemic of burglaries had taken place and the jail constable was on the lookout for suspicious characters. When Jack pedaled into La Mesa on his bicycle the constable spied the kit of tools and decided that Jack was the much-sought burglar.

Jack is haled before the local Justice of the Peace and the Justice is inclined to believe with the constable that Jack is a burglar, and that his kit of tools are a burglar's outfit. He is remanded to jail, and while he knows that he will be able to prove his innocence eventually, that will not help him to meet Bessie that evening and marry her according to their plan. He is in despair, but at last it dawns on him that his rival, Bert Bruce, can identify him, and he bribes the constable to ride over to the attorney's office and ask him to come and identify him. When the constable finds the young attorney he tells him that Jack is in jail for burglary and wants him to come and identify him as an honest mechanic.

But when Bert hears that it is Jack, his rival, that is in this predicament, he swears he does not know him and that doubtless the constable has captured a desperate criminal. He knows that Jack will have trouble in proving his innocence without his assistance, and plans to have a good time with Bessie while Jack is in jail.

Meanwhile Bessie is waiting for Jack to come and keep his appointment with her, and the constable, returning to the jail, is upbraiding Jack for sending him on a fool's errand.

Bruce gets out his automobile and goes to invite Bessie and her mother for a ride. Mrs. Smith is delighted, but Bessie, waiting for Jack, refuses to go along. But her mother is insistent, and poor Bessie is forced, much against her will, to make one of the party. Riding through the streets of La Mesa, Bert does not pay any attention to the constable who pulls his watch out and watches his speed from a given point until he fires his pistol in the air three times as a signal for the old constable who has arrested Jack. He is very much surprised when he is held up, and his chauffeur arrested for speeding. They are haled to the Justice Court, where Jack is having his preliminary hearing, and Bessie enters the court room with them. She instantly recognizes Jack and explains to the court who he is. With his license in his pocket Jack calls on the Justice to marry them, giving his unwilling rival for witness. Jack gave his last bill to the constable to bring Bert to him and is forced to borrow the marriage fee from the disgruntled attorney. Meanwhile Mrs. Smith is wondering at the cause of delay. She is soon enlightened, for Bert, having paid his fine for speeding, is forced to take the newly wedded pair home in his machine.

Ninety-Four Fail While Six Succeed are the annual statistics given by Bradstreet, showing the number of incorporated companies which survive one year in Illinois.

Consider what tremendous strides THE AMERICAN has made—to the extreme front of the advance guard of Independent companies—in a trifle over one year! Not only was it one of the successful six, but probably the most successful one of that six!

Excellent, indisputable testimony, we think, of the appreciation shown our efforts—of the steady growth, from month to month, that spells lasting and enduring success.

Attention to details—study of the markets, a capable and efficient organization in both office and factory, are some of the vital elements of the successful business well exemplified in our history.

AMERICAN photography, manufacturing technique, pantomime backed by the most beautiful of natural "settings"—out-of-door California—have all played a large part in the triumph of AMERICAN photoplays.

COMING AMERICANS

"AN ASSISTED ELOPEMENT."—Release Feb 29. Comedy. 1,000 feet. Real farce of the Western kind. How Will, mechanic, made Bruce, attorney, assist him in marrying Bruce's own girl.

"FROM THE FOUR HUNDRED TO THE HERD."—Western society drama. Release Monday March 4. Concerning the Earl of Derbley and his wife and a young Western ranchman. A tale that will interest. This film combines some of the handsomest backgrounds ever seen in a motion picture film.

"THE BROKEN TIES."—Release Thursday March 7. Length 1,000 feet. Western Drama. The old, old tale of the selfish stepmother handled from a new and novel angle. A story that will enlist the sympathy of your audience and appeal to every heart.

"AFTER SCHOOL."—Western Drama. Release Monday March 11. Length 1,000 feet. Distinctly Western, bristling with action. This picture will touch a responsive cord in every one. You should not miss it.

And Others.

Poor old maids! There are so many of them who would like to be married, and yet cruel man proposeth not. Some there are who propose themselves when good old Leap Year comes around, and some there are who save up enough money with which to buy a man.

Old Betsey Older, in the Solax production of "Nearly an Heiress," the comedy release of Wednesday, March 13, lives in a boarding house in which money-loving "Bud" Doolittle and wise Tom Dear are also unfortunate boarders. Poor Betsey loses her heart to both of these gentlemen.

Well, "Bud" and Tom try to stake her to each other, for they are both victims of Flirting Marian. Tom finally gets "Bud" to propose to Betsey, misleading him with a phantom legacy. "Bud" learns the truth of the heiress' real financial position and then leaves her at the altar. Billy Quirk is a circus in himself as "Bud" Doolittle.

Judge, Jury, Witnesses and Spectators.

Occasionally some notoriety seeker in the guise of a preacher of a new faith journeys on a crusade across continents, spreading new doctrines and villifying by innuendo and vituperation established forms of worship. These missionaries do not make many converts. Of course there are a large number of people, blase or urbane, who are ready to listen to these heretics, but people with sense are not easily misguided by a new religious frill. This is the argument, by inference, of "Sealed Lips," the Solax dramatic production of Wednesday, March 6.

The story picturesquely deals with the sacredness, solemnity and inviolability of the confessional. It controverts pointedly but humanely many of the aspersions cast upon this ritual. Father Hartley Steele, who is a Catholic preacher, almost sacrifices his life defending the altar of the confessional.

He is accused of a murder committed by one of his parishioners. The murderer, Jake Smith, a poor laborer, driven by circumstances and necessity to actual extremities, tries to cover up his crime with the priest's cassock. The good Mrs. Smith, who is horrified and appalled by her husband's crime, unable to still her conscience or reconcile herself with her God, goes to the minister to confess. Her confession lightens the weight from her heart and mind. It gives her at last the repose her turbulent spirit needs.

The priest is soon accused of the crime. His own cassock, which the criminal used to hide his own identity, is the strongest evidence against him. He is tried and convicted. Although he knows who the real murderer is, his lips are sealed. With angelic sweetness and fortitude he endures the jeers and insults of the mob that is only too ready to assail the sincerity of the Church. Without rancor he is willing to go to his execution, but Heaven intervenes in his behalf—for righteousness must prevail on earth as well as in heaven.

The court and the confessional scenes are indeed the most finished examples of pantomimic art. The natural smoothness of the entire production, the sympathy of the priest's performance and the naturalness and strength of Mace Greenleaf's acting make the production a notable one.

FREDERICK GUEST

Frederick Guest, who poses in leads and character roles for the Champion Film Company, is fast becoming recognized as one of the stars in the moving picture world. As a member of the stock company he has appeared recently in a number of important and exacting character impersonations in notable films, and his work is marked by the excellence which stamps him as a finished actor of wide experience. Like all successful moving picture actors, Mr. Guest graduated from the legitimate stage, if the phrase is permissible, and his histrionic career is a brilliant one. Entering the theatrical profession at an early age he has been associated with many notable successes and has the proud distinction of having been in the supporting cast of Booth and Barrett two seasons; Julia Marlowe, two seasons; Mattie Wainwright, one season; Bellew and Potter, one season, and with Madame Modjeska one season. Mr. Guest is quite a veteran in moving pictures, having been a member of the Biograph and Reliance companies, always appearing in important and difficult roles.

THE GAUMONT WEEKLY

The Gaumont Weekly, the first issue of which appeared on Thursday, February 22, proved to be all that its projectors had promised. The topics treated covered more than a dozen subjects, the incidents selected for portrayal being well chosen and the photography up to the usual Gaumont high standard. The Boy Scouts of America came in for a goodly piece of film and a fire in Hester street, the most crowded section of the American metropolis, made a fine showing. The operator in this latter case happened to be on the spot when the alarm was turned in and thus got a much more complete picture than is usual in fire scenes. President Taft is shown amid a great crowd of Jersey folks, hanging a wreath on a statue of Lincoln in East Orange, while a fourth interesting event recorded is the Fifth avenue parade of children of the Lawrence, Mass., strikers. The foreign views included Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, the start and the winner of the International Balloon race, events in Tripoli and Tunis and in Vienna and Berlin. These are only a part of the varied and excellent "table of contents" found in the first number. In the second release of The Gaumont Weekly on February 29, three big events in which all America will be interested are to be treated. In addition a dozen other happenings of moment will be covered. The plan of releasing the Gaumont Weekly on the date of publication seems to have made a hit. It is then available for release the minute it reaches the exchange.

Mansfield, O.—The Alvin Motion Picture Theatre was damaged by fire at a loss of $600.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The National Fireproofing Co. has been awarded the general contract at $350,000 for the erection of an 11-story office and theatre building, to be erected at Broadway and Eighth street for Wm. Garland.

Dear Sir:—Enclosed please find article written by myself. As a moving picture exhibitor I contribute this article in the interest of brother exhibitors. I hope you will find space for it.

Thanking you in advance,

S. C. DURYEE.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1912.

Editor of the Moving Picture News:

Owing to the rapid changes in the moving picture business, especially the manufacture and film exchanges, I wish through your columns to call the attention of the exhibitors to existing conditions. A short time ago the film exchanges organized themselves into what is now termed The Trust or Patents Co., it also occurred that a number of independent manufacturers began producing film during the infancy of this gigantic business enterprise. The trust manufacturers discovered that the exhibitor was making a little money, they decided to charge at the rate of two dollars per week for the privilege of the film exchanges handling their output of films; when the purpose was made known to the exchanges, they (the exchanges) suggested to the Trust or Patents Co., that instead of them paying the two dollars per week that they license the exhibitor two dollars per week for the privilege of showing the trust's picture, and that is exactly what it has been doing ever since, the exhibitor paying two dollars per week to the gigantic trust for the privilege of exhibiting pictures. In addition to charging two dollars per week license the exchanges also charge an exorbitant price for the rent of their films.

The trust made arrangements with a gentleman whereby all of the film exchanges that were handling license films, were all but one, taken over by what is called the General Film Co., and they are now trying to force this company into the General Film Co. All of these film exchanges were secured in this way: if possible they bought the film exchanges out without paying any money consideration and gave a large amount of stock in the General Film Co. This stock is being paid for from the net earnings of the General Film Co., and it will only be a short time until all of the previous film exchanges will have been paid for in full out of the earnings of the General Film Exchanges. Other previous owners of film exchanges received enough to place them in a financial position whereby they need not worry about the future.

Now that the Film Trust Manufacturers have absorbed all of the film exchanges but one, and will soon have them all paid for out of the net profits of the business, the question naturally arises, Who has paid these thousands and thousands of dollars to the trust? Will they be satisfied by owning the film exchanges or will they proceed to force the best theaters throughout the country to sell to them the same as they did the film exchanges? Will the exhibitor continue to be imposed upon by this trust or will they ask the Attorney General of the United States to look into the matter?

The Independent film exchanges have got together. The Cincinnati Buckeye Film Exchange, the Buckeye Film Exchange of Columbus and the Central Film Service Exchange of Indianapolis, the Lake Shore Film Exchange of Cleveland, and several other Film exchanges have combined for the purpose of dictating and arranging the price whereby the Motion Picture exhibitors have to take what they can get. For instance, if you are paying thirty-five dollars for a film service of the Buckeye Film Exchange, of Columbus, and are not satisfied with the service they are furnishing you and you desire to make a change and go to the Central Film Service Exchange, of Indianapolis, we are charged exactly what we were paying and they will not give you a twenty-five or thirty dollar service if you find your business will not suffice your paying thirty-five dollars, which you have been paying. You cannot go to another film company and secure a film service at a lower price, consequently the independent film companies have formed a little trust of their own.

I do not know whether the Independent Sales Co., Mr. Brulator, is aware of this or not; it seems that there is only one way whereby the exhibitor can get relief and that is through organization, and every one of them join the Exhibitors' League, to evoke the aid of the anti-trust law, or see that anti-trust laws are passed for the protection of the public. The exhibitors are carrying the burden of everything and everybody and very few to-day are making money where the manufacturer and film exchanges are paying big dividends and basking in the sunshine of a glorious prosperity.

CLEVELAND OPERATORS DINE

The Moving Picture Operators of Local No. 160, I. A. T. S. E., of Cleveland, Ohio, were tendered a banquet on Monday evening, February 12, by the Victor Film Service Co., of Cleveland, through the courtesy of Mr. C. G. Thompson, manager of the Cleveland branch. The time was midnight, place Webber's Cafe, and at the stroke of twelve about one hundred members of the Union, with several invited guests, appeared upon the scene to do justice to the good things Manager Thompson had prepared. They were greeted by President Arthur A. Smith, Manager Thompson, Harry Soden, C. A. McGowan and L. D. Wolfe, all of the Victor Company. After a picture had been taken, all hands sat down to do justice to the good things before them.

Among the invited guests were Sam Bullock, editor of The Spotlight; Louis Becht, of the Mall Theater; H. G. Simeral, sales manager of the Champion Film Co., and F. W. Swett, of the Nicholas Power Co., of New York.

Mr. H. W. Cooding acted as toastmaster, and as he arrived at Webber's somewhat in advance of the others, was primed for the occasion.

President S. M. Hurlbert, of Local No. 160, was the first speaker and his remarks were of interest to all. He was followed by President Smith, Manager Thompson, Harry Soden and C. A. McGowan, all of the Victor Co.

Sam Bullock was there with some good advice to both sides and no doubt the next edition of The Spotlight will have eight pages.

Louis Becht recited a (dog-gone) funny poem which was greeted with applause. It is reported that Louie was ence a Sunday School teacher, but no one present believed this.

Mr. Simeral spoke for the Champion Films, and convinced all present that they are the best ever. He was followed by Mr. Swett, who responded for the Nicholas Power Co.

Next Wm. J. W. Kinjocity, a full-blooded Seneca Indian, who is a respected member of Local No. 160, told of his experiences in learning to become an operator.

This gathering will long be remembered by all present, not only for the hospitality of the Victor Exchange, but also from the fact that it marks a new era for the operators, in giving them recognition, as an important adjunct to the moving picture industry, and Mr. Thompson is to be congratulated upon his progressiveness, in being the first to recognize the value of co-operation between the operators and the Film Exchange. Such co-operation means better care of the films by operators, and this insures better film service to the theaters.

The Bio Carbon Co. furnished singers for the banquet.

The Simplex Machine Co. sent camp house reflectors and the Nicholas Power Co. provided watch fobs.

The banquet closed with three cheers and a tiger for the Victor Film Service Co., and they were all voted jolly good fellows. It might be added that all the picture shows in Cleveland started on time Tuesday, even if Cooding did sleep in the booth.

BLIND

Champion Drama, for Release March 6

Stories in which love and business figure prominently are always interesting and the Champion Company certainly has an excellent story in "Blind," in which love, rivalry, loyalty and suffering play important parts, emotions that are always component factors in heart stories.

A young and successful business man loves the daughter of his elderly rival in business, but the father frowns on his suit on account of the rivalry and chooses his confidential clerk as a fitting mate for the girl, to which arrangements the daughter objects. She is sent away to an expensive school, the father placing a mortgage on his property to pay the expenses. While she is absent the father is stricken blind and his infirmity is kept a secret from the daughter.

At vacation time she returns from college to find her father sightless, almost ruined and despondent. To make matters worse, the employees of the factory are on strike and the confidential man—whom the father has chosen for her husband—is powerless to stave off impending disgrace financially. In her despair the girl appeals to her lover—the business rival. He is a man, and he lends all the aid in his power. His influence and money retrieves the fallen fortunes of the father and the rascally confidential man is proven to be an unprincipled scoundrel whose peculations have well nigh wrecked the business. The young man is blessed by the father and rewarded by the hand of the daughter—a logical and satisfactory finale to a strong and convincing story in which the stars of the Champion Company appear.

MANUFACTURERS' SYNOPSES of FILMS

THE TRUST
Gaumont, Release, March 9

D. H. Wilson, the directing head of the Independent Rubber Company, steadfastly refuses to become a member of the Rubber Trust. One of his chemical engineers has discovered the formula for the manufacture of artificial rubber. This important discovery places him in a most commanding situation of the rubber industry providing the members of the Trust learn nothing of his valuable secret. The head of the Trust, baffled at his independent attitude, employs a detective to find out why Wilson refuses to join his monopoly, through which unscrupulous means he learns of the formula worked out by the engineer. He instructs the sleuth to take the engineer captive as soon as the vessel carrying him home touches soil. In the guise of friends sent by Wilson, who in the meantime had grown anxious about the safety of the young genius, the detective and his assistants lure the youth into a taxi, in which they gag and overpower him, bringing him captive to an old deserted castle dungeon. Here the president and directors of the Trust, totally masked so as to prevent recognition, bribingly coerce the secret from its discoverer, who reluctantly pens the chemical symbols of the formula. After receiving the check he is led to a safe spot and granted his liberty.

In the meanwhile, the jubilation of the unscrupulous Trust directors is most abruptly cut short, when they realize that the genius wrote the formula with self-erasing ink, that kind which fades and leaves no trace.

The cunning Trust had been outwitted!

WHAT'S IN A NAME?
Gaumont Release, March 12

Jones, provision dealer, is in search of a fittingly appetizing name for a new delicacy he is about to put on the market. The Italian word for butterfly, "Farfaletta," appeals to him much more than any other and in boundless enthusiasm over such a happy name selection Jones invites the members of his club to attend a banquet on "Farfaletta." The wife happens to come upon one of these invitations and immediately begins to suspect the worst, namely that Farfaletta is the name of some immoral actress with whom her husband has become enamored. After agitating herself and her mother up to the point of frenzy, she learns that Farfaletta is after all only a kind of macaroni.

EXTRAVAGANCE
Thanhouser Release, March 5

When a man has a daughter of whom he is very fond, it is no more than natural that he should try to give her every advantage and all the pretty clothes she needs. The trouble is that sometimes his love leads him into extravagance that he cannot afford.

A prosperous merchant in a village thought his child the most wonderful girl in the world, and could deny her nothing. She tired of the monotony of country life, and wanted to go to a fashionable city finishing school. He sent her. She found that she needed more money for dress and amusement. He gave it to her, and felt repaid when she came back home, a perfect type of a city girl.

The old house would not do for her, so the father built a mansion. He bought her an automobile, furs and everything she desired. In fact he was like a slave of Aladdin's lamp, she simply had to express a wish and it was gratified.

The trouble was, however, that this modern slave of the lamp did not have an inexhaustible fortune. He became involved financially, trying to make his daughter happy, and soon affairs came to a crisis.

In their magnificent new home, the girl gave a party. Some of the guests were her old neighbors, others her new city friends. They decidedly did not mix and the village folk felt put out, especially the spiteful daughter of the local magnate. This girl made her displeasure known to her father, and he willingly decided to help her. The "slave" was heavily indebted to him, and the magnate informed him that he must pay up his loans without delay or he would be sold out, lock, stock and barrel.

After the guests had departed the foolish father reviewed his financial condition. Hopeless bankruptcy confronted him. His only asset was a life insurance policy for a large amount, payable at his death, so he decided to make his last sacrifice for the child he loved so fondly.

The girl had a suitor, a village youth, and her childish sweetheart, whom she had shamefully neglected and snubbed after she began her career of extravagance. This young man reached the house in time to prevent a tragedy. The broken-hearted old man, unnerved, told of his troubles, and the other promptly offered to pay the debts, although it would practically leave him penniless.

This act of unselfish generosity is witnessed by the girl. She is not really bad, only thoughtless, and the discovery of the trouble she has caused her loving father causes her to determine to forsake her foolish extravagant ways. She doffs her fine gowns, arrays herself in the simple garments she had once despised, and decides to be "the real head of the firm." Incidentally she wins the love of a true man, and her life is peaceful, happy and free from extravagance.

HIS GREAT UNCLE'S SPIRIT
Thanhouser Release, March 8

A young sleight-of-hand performer found that he was also "sleight" of audience. Business was very bad, although the show was good and his troubles came to a climax in a country town when the village magnate seized his props and scenery for debt.

The performer begged for a chance to make good, telling of the big advance sales in other towns, but the magnate was obdurate. He wanted his pound of flesh and it was a matter of indifference to him whether any blood came with it or not.

With plenty of time on his hands, the young magician's thoughts naturally turned to revenge. He knew the reputation of his enemy, miserly and grasping, a man who could never keep a clerk because he paid very little, so the magician decided to take an office position with him.

He made a hit with the magnate because he only wanted a dollar a week and his board, and was engaged. Thus he was able to prepare for his tricks without fear of detection. He found that his employer was as bad as he had been painted, and his heart was steeled against him.

Soon the magnate found that new and novel interests had entered into his life. Mysterious messages came to him through the air that the spirit of his great-uncle was displeased with him. Then the spirit began to get really busy. He took away the magnate's gold, his stocks, bonds, and securities, even food and drink was denied to him.

It took the miser some time to realize that the spirit meant business, and that he insisted upon fair business dealings and generosity. To please his great-uncle the magnate completely reformed, and was afraid ever to go wrong again, because he believed it would mean another visitation.

Through the liberality of his unsuspecting employer, the magician was enabled to get back to Broadway and as he told many friends he met there, "This was one season where I didn't mind being closed up by the sheriff."

THE HONOR OF A PUGILIST

Powers Release, March 5

Tim Carver, a rising young ring aspirant, who has been trying to get a fight with Sting Dunlap, the middleweight champion, receives a letter from Dunlap's manager informing him that if he will post a forfeit of one thousand dollars by noon of that day Dunlap will meet him.

Tim has not the money and neither his trainer nor himself know where to raise it, until Tim recollects a prominent clubman, a Mr. Wall, who once offered to help him. Going to Mr. Wall's hotel, he explains matters to him and the clubman agrees to put up the money. The articles are signed for the fight and Tim resumes his training. One day, while in Mr. Wall's hotel, Tim renders a great service to a young society girl and he afterwards escorts her to her home. The acquaintance thus formed soon ripens into love and Tim proposes to her and is accepted.

The day of the fight, the girl and her mother are looking over a newspaper and there see Tim's picture, with a notice of the fight. This is the first intimation they have received regarding Tim's occupation, and both of them are horrified. Tim, calling shortly afterwards, is told that the engagement between them is over and is handed his ring. He pleads with the girl to reconsider her decision, but she tells him that if he fights again she will never marry him. Tim is thus placed between two fires; if he goes on with the fight he loses his fiancee; if he gives up the fight, he causes his backer, Mr. Wall, to lose his thousand dollars. He feels in honor bound to keep faith with his backer, so after a brief mental struggle he resigns all hope of ever marrying the girl. The fight comes off and Tim is declared the new middleweight champion. The girl, however she might object to Tim's profession, is at least intensely interested in his personal welfare and follows the fight by means of a ticker and duly faints at its conclusion.

A few days later Tim calls on her and convincing her that he has given up the prize ring forever, finally persuades her to forgive him and allow him to again place his ring upon her finger.

HIS DAUGHTER'S LOYALTY

Powers Release, March 9

After years of ceaseless toil upon his electrical contrivance, the old inventor, Thomas Marvin, is unable to make it run properly and is forced to give up in weariness and despair. It is then that his daughter Jane, who has kept closely in touch with her father's work, discovers the cause of the difficulty and starts the machine to running. Joyfully bringing her father to witness the triumph of his work, both are horrified to discover that he has gone blind. In consequence of his affliction Jane is now forced to take up the battle of life for them both.

Jane goes first to the office of J. F. Ray, an electrical engineer and promoter, whom she interests in her father's invention. Besides the interest which he takes in the machine, Ray is filled with the greatest admiration of Jane; personally and through his assistance medical aid is provided for her father. The specialist, after examining Marvin's eyes, states that there is hope of recovering his eyesight, but that any sudden shock will be likely to kill him.

Ray also places the invention before a large electrical company, who agree to give their answer regarding its manufacture in three weeks.

The three weeks elapse, and Jane, not hearing from Ray and believing he has forgotten her, consults another promoter named Gray. This man inspects the machine and at once realizes its wonderful merit. He, however, has no intention of paying for it and tells Jane and her father that it is absolutely useless and leaves them heartbroken. He then plans to steal the idea for his own benefit and returns later on and slips into the house unobserved. Jane finally hears him and, although realizing the purpose of his visit and being overcome with fear, bravely represses her desire to call for assistance, knowing that a shock of this nature may cause her father to drop dead. Marvin, however, hears the noise also, and entering the room impulsively tears the bandage from his eyes and discovers that he has regained his eyesight. Old as he is, he fearlessly grapples with the villain and a desperate struggle ensues.

At this juncture Ray, who has closed the deal with the electrical company, arrives with the necessary papers for Marvin's signature. He, of course, joins in the struggle, and Gray is overpowered and ejected. Then all ends happily.

her with Jack deliberately snubs him and carries her daughter away. Poor Jack believes that Clarice was in earnest while tormenting him about marrying the Count, and writing a note to her wishing her happiness, he leaves, and seeks the West to forget his disappointment. His letter, together with her mother's diplomatic urging, grates on the girl to accept the Count's offer and she becomes his wife. Jack obtains a position as foreman on a ranch belonging to Count Derbley.

Clarice is very unhappy as the Count's wife, but her mother revels in the lap of luxury. Then comes the intelligence that through mistaken investments the Count is financially ruined and all he possesses is his ranch in the West. He hurries West to sell and try to recoup his fallen fortune. He meets and recognizes his foreman, to whom he sells the ranch and then starts on his return. En route home he dies from heart failure and it devolves on his secretary to break the news not only of his death but also of the wreck of his fortune to his wife and her mother. Not knowing that the ranch has been sold, he tells them that alone is free from debt and the wife determines to go there and live.

They arrive at the ranch and Clarice seeks the foreman to tell him of their arrival. She is surprised and delighted to find Jack Stevens. She brings him to her mother, but the old lady, harboring the grudge she always felt toward him, orders him off the ranch. Jack gently explains to her that inasmuch as it is his property he does not feel inclined to leave but that she is welcome to stay as long as she wishes. Filled with chagrin for her mother's actions, Clarice seeks a secluded spot and gives up in despair. It is here Jack finds her and when he asks her the old old question the difficulty is settled.

THE BROKEN TIES

American Release, March 7

Jack Nelson and his father are good chums and companions, and life is a pleasant holiday to them until the father finds it necessary to go on a business trip.

While away he meets a widow and she inveigles him to marry her. She is no sooner installed in the new home than she starts to make things unpleasant for Jack. Jack talks it over with his sweetheart and she consoles him. Then one day the widow's son comes home from college to spend his vacation with his mother.

The stepmother takes Jack's clothes from his room and turns it over to her son, telling Jack to make himself a bed in the barn. Jack endured it all until the son begins to make advances to his sweetheart. He quarrels with her and returns to have it out with the stepbrother.

The mother interferes and when the father hears them quarreling he defends the wife, and orders his son from his home. Jack goes back to say good-bye to his sweetheart and then leaves. In the meantime Nelson's new wife makes him uncomfortable and unhappy. And her son continues his attentions to Jack's former sweetheart until a city girl comes to the country, when he forsakes the country girl for the more vivacious girl. When she plans to return to the city the son prevails on his mother to rob her husband of his savings and return with him to the city. Left alone, the poor old father repents his harsh treatment of his son and the little girl Jack loves finds herself longing to throw herself in his arms and plead for his forgiveness. She goes to the desolated home and comforts Jack's father. A freight train pulls into town and out from a box car drops Jack, with murder in his heart. He has come to wreak vengeance on his destroyers. He approaches the old home and pulling out his gun examines it carefully to see that it is working properly. And then, looking up, he sees his sweetheart framed in the doorway. She comes to him and tells him the miserable story of robbery and faithlessness and begs his forgiveness. She calls the father and the three are reunited to start all over again.

THE SMUGGLERS

Nestor Release, February 26

Along the rocky beaches of the Pacific Coast the inhabitants of the little fishing villages frequently eke out the scanty livelihood which they may earn with their nets by turning the Chinese Exclusion act to good account for themselves. Chinese societies and labor agencies will pay well for the smuggling of a Chinaman, and many a reckless young fisherman makes a frequent and easy bit of money by bringing the yellow men to our shores, either from Mexico or from steamers lying far out from the beach. Common as the practice is, the revenue men make few captures, although scant secrecy is observed, for the smugglers' secret is safe in the bosoms of the fisher people.

Joe Hardy and Jack Barry are partners in many of these illicit enterprises. Joe is the ne'er-do-well of the village, refusing to share in the hard labor of the fishing work. Jack, however, affects to be an honest fisherman, working hard in the boats every day, and engaging with his partner in the smuggling expeditions at night. Joe, with his easy manner and good looks, has already captured the heart of Marie, daughter of old Skipper Jameson, who frequently rebukes Joe for his seemingly shiftless ways. Jack is also in love with Marie, and learns from the girl herself that his love is hopeless.

Marie, however, is rudely disillusioned when her cousin, Annette, a younger girl, comes for a visit, and the fickle Joe promptly transfers his affections to the newcomer. Marie refuses to believe this until Jack conducts her to a lonely spot on the beach, where he shows her Annette in Joe's arms. Still refusing the advances of Jack, the jealous girl goes away to hide her grief and to ultimately plan a revenge on Joe.

That night, while waiting for Joe to join him in a smuggling trip, Jack receives a note from Marie, telling him that she has informed the revenue officers, and bidding him let Joe go alone that night and be captured. Jack himself has never even contemplated such a trick, but seeing in it an indication that Marie has come to care for him he sends Joe alone on the perilous errand. Jack and Marie watch from rocks and see the revenue officers land and lie in wait for the smuggler. Joe returns with the Chinaman, but the officers fail to capture him. Rifle in hand he scales the rocks, firing back and disabling one of the officers, and conceals himself in a cave, while the baffled revenue men search in vain.

Annette hears the story next day, and, knowing that if Joe is to remain long in hiding he must have food and water, cruises along the beach in her small sailboat. Joe recognizes her and signals her to land, which she does, and gives him the supplies she has brought. After spending a short time with him at his cave, she leaves in her boat, beating out to sea.

Joe, watching through his glasses, sees the boat disabled by a sudden squall, and watches as, with broken spar and flapping sail, the helpless craft drifts into the dangerous breakers. Joe makes a brave attempt to swim to her rescue, but is driven back. Desperate, he realizes that to save the girl he must have help, and he returns up the beach, straight into the arms of the revenue men, who are searching for him. Jack and Marie accompany the officers, and when Joe tells his story, Marie tells the officers that the tale is a fabrication of his, a lie to lure them into some trap. Jack seconds her suggestion, and Joe, seeing that the officers will not accompany him in an attempt to rescue the girl, breaks loose, hoping to lead them to the scene of the accident. Backing away with drawn revolver, he has led them almost around the point of rocks, to where they will have a view of the over-

Jack is forced by the remaining officers to assist them at the rescue of Annette, and their boat picks her up and brings her safe to the beach, where she learns that the ne'er-do-well has paid for her life with his own, and that his last act has been one of restitution for a misspent life.

FAR FROM THE BEATEN TRACK

Imp Release, March 4

This is a problem picture built on a problem story. Away up in the lonely northern land lives a trapper and his young wife. He follows his occupation from day to day without noticing that his helpmate finds life somewhat monotonous. There is practically no society in these snowy wastes and, as it frequently happens when two people are bound together by the marriage tie and there is no strong fundamental community of interest between them, ennui sets in; they inevitably get tired of each other.

Into this remote household there comes, by accident, a handsome stranger who is hunting in the country. He gets separated from his party and, meeting with an accident, is found helpless by the husband, who brings him to his home to be cared for by his wife.

As the days pass they fall in love with each other. The husband returns at a moment when a love avowal has been exchanged. What does he do? Confront them and kill either or both? No! He conceals his knowledge.

Shortly afterwards the woman agrees to elope with her admirer. They have barely started away when the man is seriously injured by falling into a bear trap. The woman ministers to him. The husband appears. His mind is made up. She cannot return to his home. Her lover is wounded. So the husband leaves them and returns to his lonely hut.

What becomes of the pair? How is the problem solved? How does the story end? It does not end. It concludes with a note of interrogation.

THE CALL OF THE DRUM

Imp Release, March 7

Old Corporal Ellison was happy in the society of his war-time cronies, veterans who like himself took delight in talking of the days when the Blue and the Gray covered the Eastern and Southern land with contending fratricides; a nation engaged in the most terrible of all wars—a civil war.

The old man had a daughter who married, and shortly after the honeymoon the young couple invited the old soldier to come and live with them. Loverlike, they thought it would be more comfortable for him in his old age in their house rather than in a Soldiers' Home.

So the old father accepted his daughter's invitation, and for a time is happy in his new surroundings. But he dreams dreams. He lives his military life over again. His comrades are on the march! He hears the sound of the drum. The past appeals to him and the past is living. It is the real thing. For are not his brother veterans still alive to talk with him about the deeds they used to do in the days of old? So, yielding to an irresistible temptation to connect himself with the strong and heroic past, he quits his daughter's home and rejoins his old comrades, who, of course, are glad to welcome him back.

After the old man has disappeared the daughter and her husband go after him and try to induce him to return to their home, but, no, the call of the drum has conquered, and the story ends with the old father refusing to leave his comrades.

RHODA ROYAL'S TRAINED HORSES

Imp Release, March 9

This picture depicts various scenes which form part of the well-known Rhoda Royal Circus, in which the animals are put through a series of remarkably clever evolutions and performances. The picture shows the clever manner in which horses, ponies, dogs and other animals can be trained to do amusing acts.

The film is remarkable for being a very fine motion photograph of animal life studies, and will unquestionably please the juvenile members of moving picture audiences.

On the same reel:

THE HOME STRIKEBREAKERS

The scenario of this story won the third prize of $60 in the recent Imp contest. It is written by Chas. Ade, of Joplin, Mo.

Mr. Michael McCarthy and his associates struck work. They were bricklayers and building men by trade. They struck and gathered themselves together, formed a local, elected "Mikey" McCarthy president and asserted their freedom.

Mr. "Builder," whose work was stopped, offered a reward of $500 to anybody who would break the strike. So Mrs. McCarthy got wind of the offer. She gathered the wives of the strikebreakers together. They went in a body to the builder and offered to do the work; leaving their husbands at home to do the domestic work—a job of which they soon tired. The result was, of course, inevitable—the men went back to work.

Mr. "Builder" kept his promise and paid the reward to the chief strikebreaker. This was Mrs. McCarthy, who triumphantly pocketed the $500 check.

The acting in this comedy is extremely humorous. The picture was produced by a very humorous director, Mr. W. R. Daly.

AT ROLLING FORKS

Nestor Release, February 28

Tom Howard and Lee Williams are in love with Hetty. Her father has selected Lee as her future husband, telling Tom that if she accepts him she is no longer a daughter of his. Tom, Hetty and her mother plead with the father in vain.

Hetty and Tom go away and are married. The father remains bitter, so much so, that he will not permit his wife to take to Hetty a basket that she has prepared for her. Lee comes to the ranch and offers to take it to her. He goes to the Howard shack and gives the basket to Hetty. Tom finds him there, and, believing the basket only an excuse to see his wife, he throws it outside. Lee is ordered out. He goes indignantly. Later Hetty's father starts off on a prospecting trip with a number of others. Tom and his partner also start on another trip. The father and Tom meet at a general store, but the older man refuses to speak to Tom. Both go on their way.

The father is hurt by a blast from a mine and the men bring him home. Lee, who was one of the party, is begged by the mother to run for Hetty, as she fears her husband may die. He goes for Hetty, but while he is imploring her to come home to see her father Tom returns. One of his pack-mules having died on the way, he had returned for another. He watches Lee and Hetty from outside, but unable to overhear what they are saying. Hetty agrees to go. Tom gets his gun ready, but Hetty steps between Tom and Lee, quite unconscious that she is preventing a murder. Lee and Hetty hurry out and Tom follows. Reaching her old home and rushing inside, they find the family assembled around the deathbed of the father.

HIS GOOD INTENTIONS

Nestor Release, March 2

Jack is a college boy, an athlete, and has a penchant for keeping in training. Incidentally Jack is uncommonly handsome and is blessed with two fascinating cousins of the gentler sex.

Jack arrives in town to spend his vacation with "those dear cousins." They meet him at the depot with their limousine, but the college boy prefers walking; he must keep in training. The girls also take the foot railroad.

In the evening Jack regales his cousins with football, baseball and other various games, not to mention boxing, wrestling, running, jumping and miscellaneous athletic stunts. In the midst of his self-glorification the clock strikes nine, and Jack abruptly retires, as his trainer had commanded him to "turn in" at nine.

Next morning he refuses to go motoring with his fair cousins, who, somewhat vexed, take their spin without Jack. He has to run ten miles every morning, and Jack is the boy to do it. He changes his clothes behind a friendly bush, and, rigged up in his running togs, he begins chasing himself. An escaped lunatic chances upon Jack's clothes and quickly effects an exchange. Things happen in real moving picture style. Jack's abbreviated costume causes his arrest. At the police court he is mistaken for the escaped looney with the college boy delusion and placed behind the bars. The girls and the lunatic meet; at first they think he's Jack, but subsequent events make them rush to police headquarters for aid. The tangle is finally straightened out and Jack regains his civilized apparel. Turning back on his good intentions, he takes his seat in the limousine and enjoys himself to the limit.

On the same reel:

THE BATTLE OF ROSES

The spectator is transported to beautiful Pasadena, Cal., and there views the New Year parade with its various floats, splendidly and lavishly decorated with roses and other flowers. Musical bands, societies, scouts, cowboys, etc., are shown in holiday attire. The people lining the streets form a most interesting background. The picture is both entertaining and delightful.

THE FINAL PARDON

Rex Release, February 22

We sin, and judge others. We transgress, and appoint authorities to punish transgressors. We obey a distorted impulse, commit that which it recommends and contemplate the act with remorse. We ask Him to forgive our sins, and do not heed the prayers of other sinners. We make laws forbidding men to murder, and we murder those who disobey that law. The whole thing is just a little silly, isn't it? But over the frail structure of man's justice is the invisible and invincible Guiding Hand.

He loved her—loved her with a love that was lust. When the child came, crying in the night for a name, and the mother instinct dominated all else in her, she forgot the tender tie that bound her to the man and thought only of the little innocent atom and the forgotten duty she owed it. Timidly she asked him to right the wrong. He listened to the whispered pleading, but his masculinity could not understand—so he refused. Then it was that the woman forgot she was a human mother, and remembered only that she was a mother; her soul wandered back to primeval ages, her heart was conquered and controlled by primeval forces, and her nature became animal. The animal mother kills to protect her young—and so the mother killed the man who denied his child parentage.

The judge appointed a lawyer to defend her, and the battle for a human soul was fought. In ringing terms the prosecutor demanded her life as forfeit for the life she had taken—and the jury listened to the logic of the law. The attorney for the defense spoke of the little life that had created the sin—and the jury listened to a plea of humanity and maternity, and heard the silent voice of right.

In summing up, the woman's lawyer consulted his watch. There, in the watch, was a portrait of the father of her child and the creator of her misery, the man whom she had loved and for whom she had suffered and sorrowed—the man who was but a man. The woman glanced at it—and with the hopeless cry of an anguished soul she fainted.

When she regained consciousness and learned that the jury had decided not to murder two lives to vindicate one, she went to the advocate of her sorrowful justice, and confessed she had learned it was his son she had killed. The attorney was now the judge—the thirteenth juror. But in her second defense she had another and a more eloquent attorney, the new-born grain of innocence. The babe offered its mute evidence, made silent plea, and obtained a second acquittal.

The father of his son took the mother of his son's child into his arms, and the final pardon was granted. And such, the Rex Company thinks, is the Great Father's justice!

THROUGH FLAMING GATES

Rex Release, March 3

A tale of that telepathy which binds a mother's mind to her child's.

Peeved and piqued, she sat in fretful mood before the fireplace, staring into the glow of the embers. Perhaps in the flitting, fleeting phantasies of the flames she saw the lights and sights of the ballroom, for her face lit up with girlish glee, to darken again the next moment when the unpleasant truth recurred to her. Morosely she ruminated on the conditions which compelled her to stay at home on this gay night, and chided herself for having married a man who was wedded to his professional duties. Of course, she admitted to herself, the hospital required her husband's duties, but—that could not detract from the pleasure she was missing.

But the lure of the lights is too strong for the moth. The brilliance of the ballroom beckoned its boisterous invitation to her yielding thoughts. She put the baby girl to sleep, and went to the ball alone.

The lights were bright, the people were merry, gaiety clamored its boisterous message in the ears of the happy throng, the music cast its mystic spell over her termagant thoughts—and she was happy. But home a grim record was writing itself on the walls, writing a mother's negligence in writhing flames.

The fire in the hearth, left to its own mischievous irresponsibility, had set the house ablaze. The smoke had penetrated the room in which the baby slept, and the tot had waked and walked into the blazing room.

It was then that some psychic influence transmitted a message to the mother, and amid the gaiety of the ballroom her mind recognized its portent. But her fears were fought with laughter and banter, and finally conquered.

The child was rescued by firemen and brought to the hospital where its father was surgeon. . . . And again, in the ballroom, the persistent, pertinent message, communicated its dire import to the woman's mind. . . . She decided to return home.

She entered the destructions, called vainly for her child, and surmised it had perished in the flames of her selfishness. And amid the ruins of regret her mind found oblivion.

The child stretched forth its arms to its unknowing mother, the child-voice called, and the cry pierced the wreck of the slumbering brain and the light came to her mind. The father entered to see the child in the penitent mother's arms, and he took both little women to his heart, while the flame of love consumed the memory of the woman's dereliction.

SEALED LIPS

Solax Release, March 6

The story picturesquely deals with the sacredness, solemnity, and inviolability of the confessional. It controverts pointedly but humanely many of the aspersions cast upon this ritual. Father Hartley Steele, who is a Catholic preacher, almost sacrifices his life defending the altar of the confessional.

The biggest and best film renter in the world.

He is accused of a murder committed by one of his parishioners. The murderer, Jake Smith, a poor laborer, driven by circumstances and necessity to actual extremities, tries to cover up his crime with the priest's assock. The good Mrs. Smith, who is horrified and appalled by her husband's crime, unable to still her conscience or reconcile herself with her God, goes to the priest to confess. Her confession lightens the weight from her heart and mind. It gives her at last the repose her turbulent mind needs.

The priest is soon accused of the crime. His own cassock, which the criminal used to hide his own identity, is the strongest evidence against him. He is tried and convicted. Although he knows who the real murderer is, his lips are sealed. With angelic sweetness and fortitude he endures the jeers and insults of the mob that is only too ready to assail the sincerity of the church. Without rancor he is willing to go to his execution, but Heaven intervenes in his behalf—for righteousness must prevail on earth as well as in Heaven.

The court and the confessional scenes are indeed the most finished examples of pantomimic art. The natural smoothness of the entire production, the sympathy of the priest's performance and the naturalness and strength of Mace Greenleaf's acting make the production a notable one.

THE ANIMATED BATHTUB

Solax Release, March 8

Sometimes, while a producer is putting on a picture, many ludicrous incidents happen that are not called for in the scenario. When Madame Blache produced "The Animated Bathtub" the Billy Quirk comedy release of March 8th, Billy Quirk got an unexpected bath. He is an eccentric inventor who muddles up his existence with thoughts of an automatic arrangement which could send a bathtub to any part of a house. Billy writes to his corpulent uncle and skeptical friends to come and view the marvel of his creation.

The uncle comes and is invited by his inventive nephew to take a bath in the marvelous tub. The uncle consents, after considerable coaxing. When the switch is turned on the bathtub assumes life and becomes fractiously active. The uncle loses his control, and before he knows it he is carried to every part of the house, breaking furniture and scaring visitors out of their wits. Billy makes a frantic effort to help his unwary uncle, and in his attempt he lands headlong with clothes on and all, into the bathtub full of water.

This was not a part of the scenario, but it looked so funny and raised such a scream in the studio that it was decided not to cut it from the picture. Billy cut quite a figure when he came out of the tub. His usual smile was gone, however, and he looked "down in the mouth." Asked what the trouble was, he said, "Well, I haven't another suit here, and I haven't any underclothes to replace the wet ones. I'll get even with Beggs for pulling me into the tub. You just wait." Madame Blache took pity on Billy and sent her chauffeur home to make a raid on her husband's wardrobe. Mr. Blache is still wondering what happened to his fine pale-blue silk union suit.

As for Beggs! Lee Beggs got his, too. All that day he remained in a bathing suit. He estimated he took forty dips into the animated tub. He says he took enough baths to last him for forty weeks. Beggs used a gallon of alcohol for rub-downs to keep warm on the outside and two flasks of fine Old Crow to warm up his insides. All in all, he had a fine time.

Nearly every one in the company got an unexpected drenching that day. "The Animated Bathtub" is the liveliest of farce comedies released in months. Its trick photography is startling and amusing. It will create a good deal of comment.

THE MANICURIST

Champion Release, March 4

Jack Falmouth is a debonair young fellow, living with his mother, who is a wealthy widow. Jack is a fastidious fellow—the mother, an aristocrat to the tips of her fingers, and has her own ideas as to Jack's future. Well, it comes about that Jack calls upon a manicurist. Now there are manicurists galore, but this particular one was away and above the average—refinement oozed out of her like the divine afflatus from a poet. It was a case of love at first sight, with the fullest reciprocal feeling between them. But you may imagine how Jack's aristocratic mother would receive such a proposition.

The manicurist receives a 'phone call from a lady, and it happens that the lady is Jack's mother. Jack is very much surprised to come into his mother's room and there find the girl of his heart working over her fingers. His surprise is so manifest that the mother perceives the trend of things and immediately takes him to task. Jack has been smoking and in the excitement of the occasion has flung his lighted cigarette from his lips; it proves his salvation, for, just as the mother reaches a high state of indignation after he has gone out in a fit of deep dejection, a burst of flame shoots forth from the lace curtains where Jack's cigarette had fallen.

At this juncture the mother faints with the excitement of the occasion, but the manicurist, who had not yet departed, comes upon the scene, and her timely coming is instrumental in saving the old lady's life. There is no need to add that the gratitude of the mother found expression in giving over her opposition, and thus came happiness to Jack. The situations in this story are unique to a marked degree.

BLIND

Champion Release, March 6

Henry Marshall and Bob Stanley are business rivals. Stanley and Marshall's daughter, Helen, are in love, but Mr. Marshall won't tolerate the match, because Stanley has practically ruined him by his business competition. However, Mr. Marshall has great faith in Hardy, his superintendent, who is unsuccessful in his suit for Helen's hand.

Helen is sent away to an expensive girls' school, but her father (unknown to her) is forced to mortgage his factory to meet the expense. After her departure, her father becomes totally blind, but keeps the ill news from his daughter.

Things go from bad to worse with Mr. Marshall until he is practically on the verge of bankruptcy. Finally it comes to the stage where he can't pay his workmen. Helen meanwhile has written Stanley that she is coming home on a vacation, but is keeping it secret from her father to surprise him.

Upon her arrival, she finds her father blind and the workmen on strike. To avoid serious trouble she (unknown to her father) hunts up Stanley and tells him conditions. For love of her, Stanley draws enough money to tide over Marshall's embarrassment. Helen suspects that Hardy, the superintendent, is not as honest as her father thinks him, so that night she and Stanley gain access to the office. They go over the books and find that Hardy has falsified accounts to the extent of $30,000. They confront Hardy and Mr. Marshall with the evidence. Hardy is arrested and a partnership is formed between the two business rivals, much to the delight of the lovers.

The story from start to finish is one of the most sensational. The big scenes are filled with thrills. It is a drama of the intensest description, and the heart interest is so strong that we can scarcely realize how splendidly balanced the whole picture is until the climax; then we must look back and wonder at the many and stirring situations it has been our lot to witness.

STRIP POKER

Majestic Release, February 27

Dear old Uncle François—as he is fondly regarded by his pet niece and her husband, whose material prosperity depends greatly upon the largesse that is expected upon Uncle's return from abroad—finds himself in his club with a party of old college mates upon the evening of his arrival from abroad. He had wired his expectant niece that he would appear before them in the course of the evening after an hour's reunion with the old boys, who had gathered at the club to celebrate his return from abroad.

The hour's reunion lengthened sadly, for after much banqueting and liquid refreshment, necessary thereto—for they were not camels—the old boys gather in the card room for a game of college days—"Strip Poker."

It is not necessary to go further into the details of that mirth provoking session than to promulgate the rules of the game as follows:

1. No money or chips to be used; the articles of clothing worn by the participants at the time of sitting in to be the basis of all bets made.

2. No winner may return at the end of the session any article of apparel lost by any participant.

3. All articles are to be considered of equal value, viz., a collar may be saved by a necktie and a vest by an undershirt, etc.

4. Losers will leave the club in the exact condition and number of garments left to them at the close of the session.

While the mirth is making furious over the discovery that one of the old boys with a good memory has come prepared for the game by wearing half a dozen undershirts, nephew and niece are in despair of the non-coming of Uncle Francois. Nephew is in a terrible financial hole and needs $10,000 to margin his accounts the next morning, and while his wife is positive that Uncle will come to the rescue they unhappily wait up the entire night for Uncle's coming. Come he does, in a barrel, shoved through the library window by the rest of the crowd, who flee before the advance of a policeman.

Uncle gets mixed up with a near-burglary, as he has changed so during his trip abroad that his niece hardly recognizes her distinctly respectable old Uncle in the chaotic and barrelled old sinner who would greet her so intimately.

Matters are finally straightened out to the satisfaction of all except the condition of Uncle's head, "in the cool, grey dawn of the morning after."

THE BEST MAN WINS

Majestic Release, March 5

Fred Girton and Robert Hall, pals and room-mates for years, sharing alike joys, sorrows, luxuries and privations find themselves facing an open rupture of their friendship. The inevitable girl has appeared and to make matters worse their similarity of tastes as in other things extends to the little lady in question.

Sharing her is not to be thought of, however, and follows days, weeks and months of scheming and tricks to distance each other on the road to the girl's heart.

Fred has enlisted mother as a partisan supporter, but Robert has checked him in turn by enrolling father as his advocate in the family, and honors remain even up to their invitation for papa to Robert, and mamma to Fred to inspect the new gymnasium that has been installed in the little lady's home.

Mary Morton, the girl in the case, is of decided athletic tastes, inherited from her fond papa and mamma, both, who are enthusiasts on the subject of physical culture.

An instructor has been installed and daily morning and evening sessions at the apparatus have been going on for weeks before the invitations to Fred and Robert decide each of these gentlemen that it is high time that Mary be forced to choose between them, each relying mainly on the parental backing he has received, for neither has had any great encouragement from Mary, who indeed has become smitten with the new physical instructor her parents have engaged.

Manning, the aforesaid instructor, is a college man who is earning a few dollars by his knowledge of and prowess in gymnastics, etc., while studiously applying himself to Blackstone in his free time.

Becoming a victim to Mary's charms and incensed at the attentions of the two boys, who never give him a thought as a rival, he falls in readily with a little joke Mary plans for the boys on the occasion of their next visit.

Manning is to privately convince each of the boys that he is a remarkable boxer and then when the boys propose, as Mary knows they will soon do, she will silence the arguments for each from her father and mother by proposing that the boys don the gloves and do battle for her, and let the best man win.

Her appreciation of the sporting blood in her parents' veins proves correct, for after a little hesitation as to the propriety of the affair, they consent to a trial of arms and fists and the boys, each confident of his ability from the golden praise of the supposedly disinterested instructor, repair to the "Gym" to fight it out under the cheers of papa and mamma.

Manning and Mary make a getaway and while the boys are endeavoring to obliterate each other they are quietly married and return to find the young game cocks so exhausted they are sitting on the floor, wearily trying to land a finishing blow.

Mother and father have no alternative but to make it "no decision."

Mary then breaks the news gently that as she felt sure the outcome would be a draw she had taken into her own hands the matter of deciding upon the best man, and as papa and mamma are not insensible to the merits of Manning, they each agree that he is a good second choice that both can agree upon, and after the first shock of the news of their daughter's hasty marriage, while Fred and Robert going limping to bed entreat each other to kick a little sense into themselves.

DOES YOUR WIFE LOVE YOU?

Majestic Release, March 3

The sunshine apartments harbor two very happily married pals, Paul Turner and George Larkin.

At the opening of the story George finds his little wife deeply interested in doing some fancy needlework and to his discomfiture finds her unwilling to drop her work and spoon a little with her loving hubby. Across the hall separating the two apartments Paul is deeply concerned over his wife's absorption in solitaire to the neglect of his loving advances. George's wife comes merrily in to show Paul's wife her needlework and to Paul's amazement the cards are promptly dropped and the two women chatter happily away, oblivious of his presence.

Paul seeks George for comfort and putting two and two together, they come to the appalling question, "Is it possible our wives no longer love us?" Wrapped up in their respective wifies, they have magnified seeming coolness to the point where it has assumed the dignity of real proof of lack of wifely devotion.

The husbands feel that they must be satisfied, and decide upon the ever dangerous expedient of putting their wives to a test. Paul is at a loss, but as ever "George does it" and proposes that each hubby shall try to make love to the other's wife and report how the advances are received. Their test might have quieted their fears, for indeed the ladies were devoted to their young husbands, but unfortunately for the men's peace of mind, the ladies overhear their plot, and thoroughly indignant that their affections should be thus questioned and put to a test, they decide to make it very warm for hubbies by each pretending to welcome the advances of the other's meal-ticket.

They act their part admirably and in a series of clever scenes the husbands are brought face to face with the assured fact, as they think, that each one's wife is madly in love with her friend's husband. What is left for Paul and George? Is life so sweet a thing that it is to be lived under such conditions. No and Never! Once more—always on the job—"George does it," and they repair to their mutual friend, the doctor, in the apartment above them, and by a subterfuge persuade him to give them a quantity of poison.

The wives are elated at the discomfiture of their hubbies and are enjoying the joke to the limit, but the visit to the doctor escaped their observation, and laughing over the success of their counterplot, they suddenly discover their husbands gripping hands in a farewell forever parting and forcing a most nauseous mixture upon their indignant interiors. The girls rush on and examine the bottles, which have been dropped from the men's hands—Poison! They shriek and in explanation Paul feebly shows them the last words of George and himself—"As our wives no longer love us, we have decided to die." The joke is turned upon the wives, and they sobbingly explain overhearing the plot to test their affections and their determination to make things hot for the plotters—a determination that bids fair to make them a remorseful pair of widows. A concerted rush is made upon the doctor upstairs—and it's a good thing he was a clever doctor. Wives and hubbies escape a double tragedy and a lesson well taught is effectively driven home.

THE RULING PASSION
Reliance Release, March 13

RELIANCE.

Van Schaick is an elderly musician of the old school. He is discharged from the orchestra where he had played for years and his little hoard of savings soon disappears. He tries hard to get a position, but always he meets with the same response, "Too old." Finally, to keep himself and daughter from starvation, he is compelled to take a position as 'cellist in a low dance hall. He smothers his heartbreaks for a while, but at last he can stand playing such trash no longer. In a big emotional scene when the dance hall merry-making is at its height he tells them what he thinks of them and leaves. The young piano player follows him and at his home tries to get him to change his mind. He is successful in that and also in winning the regard of the daughter. Later, when the old musician forbids the young man's visits, he gets the daughter to run away with him. She does, and the old man is left to fight out his battle with life alone.

The young man dies after a little daughter is born, and the young wife is compelled to work hard to keep body and soul together and support her child. The father is again without work, but manages to finish an opera he has been working on before he is evicted. With his last few dollars he secures a room in the poor tenement in which his daughter is living. The grand-daughter inherits her mother's and grandfather's passion for music, but is not permitted to play her mother's violin because of the memories it would bring forth. Going down the hall one day she hears the strains of the 'cello from a nearby room, and without telling her mother, goes there every day to listen. She is discovered one day by her grandfather and he teaches her music without knowing who she is, and without the knowledge of her mother. Finding the old man in a faint from hunger later on, she is forced to tell her mother, and a happy reconciliation follows, together with receipt of a letter telling Van Schaick that his opera has been accepted.

BEDELIA'S "AT HOME"
Reliance Release, March 16

In this "Bedelia" comedy we find Bedelia has risen in the world through the agency of her husband's political affiliations. She aspires to society leadership and plans for an elaborate "at home." Her husband, Michael, however, has no leanings toward social teas, so at Grogan's, where he has an appointment to play poker, a telegram is sent Bedelia about the time the "at home" is to begin informing her that Michael has been called to Albany on the limited on political business. Later news reaches them that the limited has been wrecked and everybody killed. Bedelia immediately turns her "at home" into a sort of wake, and her friends sit up with her. Clancy comes home in the early morning hours and the guests flee, thinking him a ghost. Bedelia, however, soon discovers he is in the flesh, and then Michael is compelled to make up a story describing his rescue from the wreck. Hard upon the heels of his story comes additional news that the limited was not wrecked after all, and Michael has to confess his double dealing and receive adequate punishment.

On the same reel with this is a Natural History subject dealing with the raising of alligators. Alligators are shown in every stage of existence from six months to two hundred and fifty years, making an intensely interesting and educational subject.

THE DREAM
Republic Release, March 5

REP

Big Jim Darrell, a workman in a factory, is suddenly overcome by an attack of dizziness, falls on a returning belt, is severely injured and taken to the hospital. After his discharge, he is warned by the doctor that any unusual excitement might cause his mind to give way.

When he regains his strength, he goes to the mill and asks for a position, but is refused one, and does his utmost to break up a love which he thinks cannot be sincere or honest on the part of the son of his employer. This so preys upon his mind that he gets no rest. During one of his melancholy spells, he falls asleep and dreams that his fears have been realized; that his employer's son had deceived his daughter and then cast her off. But dreams go by the contrary, for during the time that he was having this horrible dream, the young people were being quietly married by a minister. He awakens in time to hear the news of the marriage from his daughter's lips, who has just come in with her husband and her father-in-law.

During the dream some marvelous effects are shown in the furnace room of a famous electric plant, and also the interior of a factory showing the machinery in full working order.

A BRAND FROM THE BURNING
Republic Release, March 9

The story concerns the fortunes of two miners who have cleaned up a big stake and are starting for the States. One of them is infatuated with a dance hall girl, whom he wishes to take back with him, but she, thinking she is not good enough for him, refuses.

The love element is particularly strong, the settings in beautiful Alaskan scenery and the characters typical of the time and the country.

The girl is compelled by threats to enter into a scheme in which the man she loves and his partner will be robbed of their possessions. The girl reluctantly helps to entrap the men, but before it is too late she relents, and throwing all fear from her, she dashes through a blinding snowstorm to the quarters of the Northwestern Mounted Police, and assists them in saving the man she loves.

THE NIHILIST'S CONSPIRACY
Great Northern Special Feature Film Co.

Count Leo Zachokin, a Russian nobleman, is in love with Sonja Adamovitch. Unknown to him she is a member of a band of Nihilists. Sonja sends for Leo to come to see her, but is herself summoned to attend a meeting of the band, on the same night, and dares not refuse. Leo finds the secret message to Sonja and suspects her, and so he follows her to the meeting place. While groping about in the building he is startled by approaching steps and hides in a chest in the secret meeting room of the conspirators. They discover him and threaten him with death, but Sonja pleads for his life and saves him on condition that he secure in three days a list of condemned persons, known to have been made by the Secret Police and bring it to the meeting place. Leo consents and is permitted to go in safety.

On the evening of the third day Count Leo has not yet secured the list, and is in despair. Sonja comes to see him and hits upon a plan to get the list. She is to apply to the Chief of the Secret Police for a position and obtain the list by some means. Together they go to the Police Headquarters. Sonja goes into the Chief's office, while Leo remains under the window outside. Sonja persuades the Chief to show her the list, upon which she is startled by the sight of her own name. But she recovers quickly and, when the Chief is called to the door, she tosses it out of the window to Leo, who quickly conceals it in his pocket.

Shortly afterward Sonja joins Leo and they go to the meeting place of the Nihilists and deliver the list. In the meantime the Chief of Police has discovered the loss of the list and sends two detectives to arrest Sonja and recover the list. They succeed in following them to the Nihilists' meeting place.

Learning of the approach of the police, the Nihilists escape through a trap in the roof. Leo and Sonja have managed to get to their automobile, but they have been seen, and the detectives are put on the trail. A most exciting chase follows for miles through the city and country at top speed. Curves in the road are taken without slackening the awful pace, fences and gates are smashed through without hesitation in the mad race for liberty.

Finally the pursuers get so close that revolver shots are exchanged by pursuers and pursued.

At last the fugitives come to a turn they cannot make. They cannot stop and in an instant they plunge over an embankment and the machine crashes in a complete wreck to the bottom with the occupants crushed amid the debris.

This remarkable picture, made in Denmark by the actors of the Royal Theatre, is the result of a careful study of Nihilists' methods. So truly does it depict the manner in which those daring men and women strike terror to the heart of the Czar that it has been barred from exhibition in Russia.

It is marked by the skill of the actors and the beautiful photographic effects. It is seldom that 2,000 feet of film can be made to contain so many thrills or sustain interest to so high a pitch.

A daring chase—there is no chase in pictures so daring as that shown in the finish of this picture. Two high-powered automobiles race at breakneck speed over country roads, around sharp turns, without so much as slackening their wild pace. The Nihilists' machine smashed through a heavy gate, tearing it into a hundred pieces, while the car dashes on in its mad course.

NO WEDDING BELLS FOR ME

Eclair Release, March 7

A rip-roaring farce having to do with a spinster who must marry before a certain date in order to receive an inheritance from her uncle's fortune. How she connived to meet all the requirements of the law and the many trying moments innocent persons endured on account of her efforts add greatly to the spirit of innocent fun.

Eclair Release, March 5

Two young Kentucky mountaineers are in love with Virginia Dare, who is something of a village flirt and shows no partiality to either of the boys. One Sunday morning she meets them and allows Bob to accompany her home, which arouses Jim's jealousy, and he challenges the other to fight. They meet the next day, and Jim is soundly thrashed. A mutual friend compels them to make up. Some days later they go to the mountains on a hunting trip. That night, while examining a new gun, Bob accidentally kills Leonard. Jim sees an opportunity to rid himself of Bob and win Virginia. He tells Bob "if he does not leave Kentucky never to return he will swear that Bob murdered Leonard in cold blood." Bob flies, making his way to New York, where he later marries. Jim marries Virginia and becomes a famous lawyer and moves to New York where he prospers. Bob has a hard struggle for existence. They meet, quite by accident. Jim denounces Bob to the police as a man wanted for murder and he is sent back to Kentucky for trial. He suffers deeply from remorse for his action later. One day at school Bob's boy meets Jim's child. The boy tells her of his father's being taken away. The little girl sympathizes with him and takes him to her home to seek aid from Jim. When Jim sees the boy he instantly sees Bob's face in that of the boy, and confesses to Virginia. She is horror-stricken, and instantly declares she will go to Kentucky and tell all. Bob is on trial for his life when Virginia, accompanied by her daughter and Bob's wife and boy, rush in. Virginia tells her story. Just when all hope seems gone, Jim rushes in and confesses that he lied. Bob is acquitted. Virginia forgives Jim, and the two families are reunited.

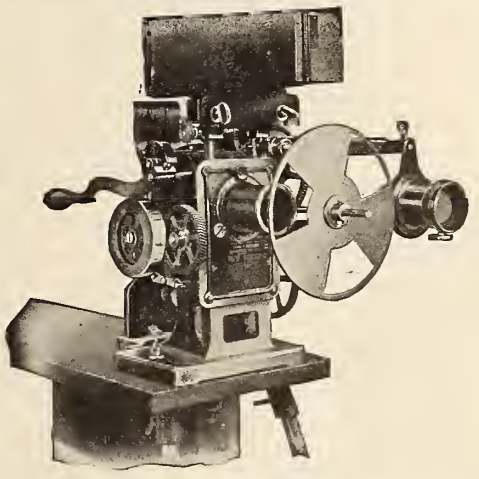
Power's Perfect Projection

THE THREE P'S WHICH MAKE FOR PROSPERITY AND ARE TO BE FOUND IN

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH, No. 6



The success of our machine rests in this—Perfect projection. It matters not how clear your film nor how good your subject; if it is not projected perfectly, the result is a failure and dissatisfied customers who never return.

Our No. 6 projects a picture which is absolutely without flicker. It always gives results which will please your patrons and bring them back to you.

What you want, Mr. Exhibitor, is satisfied customers, a steady trade. A No. 6 is the "man out in front" working for your interests, and it will give you the only results that count: Satisfied customers and a full cash drawer.

Let us send you catalogue D, telling all about it.

ARE YOU A LIVE WIRE?

A good live exhibitor readily realizes the necessity of good advertising and is prompt to take advantage of something that will increase his receipts. A great many exhibitors are afraid to make any changes in their business for fear it will interfere with some old fogy notion, pertaining to that particular thing, which has been handed down through ages and is a part of ancient history.

THE SUNDAY SHOW QUESTION AGAIN

EVERY now and again throughout the various centres of the country reformers (?) spring up endeavoring to eliminate the Sunday show. We commend these gentlemen for their energy, but would like to ask the question again, as we have asked it many times before: Are there no greater evils on Sunday than the moving picture show? From humanitarian points we strongly object to Sunday work ourselves, believing that the operator should have one day's rest each week at the very least. He is about the hardest worked man in the whole industry, working as he does from early morning until late at night, getting very little rest, very little recreation, and still less relaxation; therefore for his sake we would like to see some arrangement made whereby he could get one day of rest each week.

We are quite aware that the moving picture show has taken away quite a large number of people from the various churches and chapels of all denominations. One remedy for this, in our opinion, would be that the parsons themselves get a move on and preach more intelligently, more from knowledge, instead of belief, and thereby attract the crowds to hear the message they have to give. There is always a great attraction in religion of almost any form for the masses, some from awe, some from upbringing, some from a sense of conviction, and others merely to see and be seen. All these people have to be catered to, by some means or other, and the best way to retain their attendance and allegiance is to entertain them, and we are glad to see that many of the broad-minded clergymen throughout the States are beginning to do what John Wesley advised his followers to do, "to use the means the devil uses to get converts, to make converts themselves." The educational advantage of the cinematograph in the church is just as good as the lantern slides that are used so largely now, and have been more especially in the past few years, giving lantern services which were very largely attended. The cinematograph will do more than this, because it will give an actual representation of life in motion.

This, as we have said, is, in our opinion, the best means to controvert the action of the picture theatre and retain the members for the churches. When men rise up and oppose what the people so largely patronize, it simply creates a feeling of strong opposition. It is an aphorism "that you may lead a man but cannot drive him," and when people are driven to church the gospel loses its power, and the closing of the moving picture shows on a Sunday would be more detrimental than advantageous to the morality of the people who patronize them.

The vast population of various nationalities who do not hold Sunday sacred must in some way be provided for. It is not always possible for them to go to the country lanes—where can they go? To the saloon or the street corner? They will not go to church; charm ye ever so wisely, ye cannot get them in on any other alternative than is proposed. It is a great problem, and one that should be handled in a careful, conscientious manner. Man is a unit, an individual, and as an individual he is a law to himself. No one has a right to say him yea or nay, if he is doing an injury to no one. When he becomes a menace to his fellow men then it is time to check him, but as long as he is not doing an injury but is working on his own responsibility, no one man, or set of men, have a right to question his motive or motives, and let us ask: What harm does the moving picture theatre do to the individual, as a unit, or collectively, to its patrons?

In New York a conference of clergymen have voted to fight the Sunday vaudeville and the moving picture shows, and to back Senator Stillwell in his work at Albany. The voting took place in the clerical conference of the Federation of Churches, held in the hall of the Metropolitan Building on Monday, February 26th, at which were represented all the Protestant bodies of the city, presided over by the Rev. Dr. S. Edward Young of Brooklyn. The principal speaker of the day was H. A Stewart, of the Theatrical Protective Union. He made the statement that employees of the theatres work seven days each week, often from 1.30 to midnight, many of them from 9 a.m. to midnight.

The conference voted for a committee to wait on Mayor Gaynor and ask him why the Sunday law as set forth in the Penal Code, section 277, was not enforced by him. The committee was authorized and fully instructed to point out to Mayor Gaynor the harm of the Sunday shows. This is what we would like to see, "the harm of the Sunday shows." The only harm we can see, is the fact, as we have above stated—the operator gets no chance to see his family—and we would make it compulsory for a system of relief operators, or in other words, for each theatre to employ two operators and so give them a chance to live and let live, relieving one another for a period every day and allowing a Sunday, or the Sabbath, off, alternately.

If these gentlemen who are so anxious to suppress the moving picture show on Sunday, which is the only recreation in the neighborhood they are placed in, and is doing practically no harm to any attending thereat, would only bend their energies to the greater uplifting of the masses by trying to ameliorate their condition and trying to alter conditions under which the poor live, where members of their congregations are simply screwing down to the very lowest possible breaking point of their lives, the poor toilers in the slums and in their employ, who are working their fingers to the bone to earn a few paltry dollars, and who, if they lose five minutes' time are fined 50 cents each five minutes, and people we know supposedly earning $10 a week through these iniquitous stealings from their stipend, receive a paltry $6.50 and $7.00; these men go to church, make the longest prayers, subscribe the greatest amount of money to uphold their minister's stipend, and are considered splendid givers. If, as we say, the ministers of the gospel would tell these creatures the plain truths as they ought to know it, their churches would speedily be filled by the preaching of a living, and not a dead Christianity.

America is a free country, therefore let its people be free to choose for themselves that which they wish, and if Congress could arrange for a poll of all citizens on this Sunday question, we think it would be one of the finest things that could be brought about to teach so-called reformers a lesson they ought to learn. Brethren of the Cloth, let the poor live. Let the poor enjoy themselves. Open your churches, your chapels, and make them educational centres, where true morality can be preached and lived, and the people will come willingly to partake of the bread and the wine you have to offer.

THE COPYRIGHT LAWS

What is this we see in the daily press? What is this we hear as we sit in the Press Club among writers and authors and holders of copyright; that the moving picture industry, through the Trust, is fathering a bill to cut down the copyright fines to a hundred dollars each infringement? Shame on ye, if this is so. Because the manufacturers are finding the people demand educational and uplifting subjects which it seems can not be got otherwise than from the books of living authors, the manufacturers will not pay the royalties due the brains of the writers. It seems to us a monstrous scandal that such a bill could ever be conceived or thought of, let alone put in the form and sent up to Washington.

Augustus Thomas, the playwright, was elected chairman of representatives from the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers, the Society of American Dramatists and Composers, the New York Theatre Managers' Association, and the National Theatre Owners' Association, who met in special warfare directed against the moving picture men. Mr. Thomas said: "You are familiar with the effort of the moving picture men to amend the copyright laws. The law as it stands at present provides for a penalty of one hundred dollars for the first infringement and $50 for each subsequent infringement, until a maximum of $5,000 is reached.

"The Townsend Bill now before a Committee in Congress, makes an exception for moving picture men who steal our plots. This bill provides they should be liable only to a penalty of $100 for the first offense and that is all. There will be a hearing on this bill in Washington on March 13th. That is the chance for authors, managers, and producers to appear and protect their interests. The committee appointed are Hollis E. Gooley, Harry P. Morson for the dramatists, Edward Giroux for the Theatre Owners' Association and one other, assisted by B. Ligon Johnson, general counsel for the National Association, who will act as counsel for the delegation.

We understand this committee will also go to Canada, lay their grievances before the Premier and the Canadian copyright officials. We trust great good will result from the action of these committees, and that the bill will be ignominiously defeated. We wish it were possible to prosecute and get damages from scenario editors who steal the plots of the writers and use them for their own aggrandisement, and then the scenario writers might come into their own. The law of copyright, as the patent law, should protect and not make it easy to have everything stolen from the proper author. We have cases in point where whole plots had been stolen from scenarios submitted, and not a cent of redress can be obtained. All that has been done has been done to change the name of the scenario and steal the whole plot. One scenario writer remarked to us the other day, "Whom can we trust? How can we get redress?" And we perforce had to say that we did not know.

Detroit, Mich.—The Boulevard Theatre Company will erect a new theatre building on Gratiot avenue, between Grand Boulevard, E. and Field avenue. Will cost $15,000.

PANTOMIME, OR THE SILENT DRAMA

Except in the motion picture, very little pantomime is being displayed to-day, and we have asked, and often wondered, why? We can look back upon the beautiful pantomimes of "Puss in Boots," "Dick Whittington," "Little Red Riding Hood," and a host of other Drury Lane productions, pantomimes that had a run of several months' duration, and were immensely enjoyed not only by the Londoners but by their country cousins, who made pilgrimages to witness the beautiful scenic and gorgeous dress effects. The question has oftentimes come into our mind, Why is the American stage so lacking of the pantomime around Christmas time?. And when we have asked this question of old theatricals, they have shrugged their shoulders and said, "Don't know."

The thoughts above engendered were produced by witnessing the wordless play adapted from the Arabian Nights tales, "Sumurun" now playing at the Casino Theatre, on Broadway, and to those exhibitors who are now coming into the city, we recommend them before they return to their respective homes, to see this play, staged in the original German cast, which for beauty of scenery and staging we think is unexcelled and is as perfect a picture, or pictures, as could be produced depicting the scenes from whence the play is taken. There is no need for words. The acting was superb and everyone in the audience could fully understand the drift of the play.

To the electric light and spotlight man, a wonderful lesson of lighting and effects can be learned by a visit to the Casino. We trust the play will have a long run and that all who can will avail themselves of the opportunity to witness a real old-time pantomime.

This article should have appeared last week but it was unfortunately crowded out, and since then we learn "Sumurun" will only have one week longer run; we hope that during this week capacity houses will be the record.

BEN HUR

Several press clippings from various points inform us that a Robert Goss Company is touring the States with this film in contravention to the copyright laws of the States. It may be that Messrs. Kalem Company do not know of this film being exploited; they have paid pretty heavily for their experience of infringing the copyright acts. We want to warn every exhibitor in whose territory this company with the Ben Hur film may come, so that they do not get themselves into the clutches of the Federal authorities. They are liable to be mulcted in heavy damages and liable for all expenses of fines, etc. It is a risky thing to do and whether the Robert Goss Company is ignorant of the law, or is doing this show in direct defiance of it, we cannot tell, but something ought to be done to put a stop to this infringement, and we advise our readers who are aware of this film being exhibited, to write or wire to Klaw & Erlanger, New Amsterdam Theatre, Forty-second street, New York, and thus help to eradicate this film from the picture plays.

T. H. BLAIR COMES FORWARD AGAIN

Old workers in the phonographic and cinematograph industry will be very interested to learn that our old friend (with whom we had so many interesting times in London and who is the original inventor of the Roll film camera and others) is once again in harness. We welcome him back to the work, especially as he brings with him a projecting machine which will do away with all patent litigation. He is now in New York looking after his various interests, and in our next issue we will have some interesting details to place before our readers.

A NEW PROJECTING SCREEN

We have seen in our little day screens upon screens, and screens, and then some, until we have got very callous regarding the claims made for many, but we were shown this week a screen called the Perfection Concave Screen at Ganes Theatre, 31st street and Broadway, which took us completely by surprise. We saw it in a rather chaotic condition, that is, it was not quite ready for exhibition, but as we happened to be up there and took the people by surprise, they stretched a point and explained the principles to us. When we tell our readers that the picture, at whatever angle we viewed it, whether close or far away, was in perfect focus, whether viewed from a right angle to the screen, or even as we went into the wings of the theatre we still saw the picture perfectly; so much so that from any point we viewed the picture there was no eye strain. This is a great advance upon anything we have witnessed hitherto, and if our readers desire further particulars of the manufacture or the use to which these screens can be put, a letter to Mr. Ganes at the above address will no doubt bring good information; or, better still, go and see it.

THE GAUMONT WEEKLY

The enterprise of the Gaumont Weekly folks in covering the Houston fire for their release of February 29th, is an example of what can be done in rapid photography. The Gaumont operator was on the scene before the fire had been extinguished and results of his work are among the best fire pictures ever produced. The Gaumont Weekly of the same date contained the arrival of Shuster, the former Treasurer-General of Persia, an extensive scene of the Mardi Gras, Australian schoolboys who are touring the world, the corner stone laying of the Maine monument in New York, the parade of the Lawrence, Mass., strikers' children on Fifth avenue, New York; in addition to these over seven or eight highly interesting topics were treated.

The next release of the Gaumont Weekly will contain splendid views of the fatal leap from the Eiffel Tower which resulted in the recent death of a French inventor, the ice and ski-ing carnival in Quebec. The release of Brandt on the day that his bail was accepted in New York and a large number of other entertaining and instructive subjects.

ALL WOUND ROUND WITH A MOVING PICTURE STRING

"Filmy" Apparel of Victor Weiss Causes Detectives to Arrest Him as a Thief

A moving picture film 1,000 feet long was wound about the body of Victor Weiss, twenty, when he was arrested last evening, according to the police. He is accused of having taken fifteen reels, valued at $100 each, from a branch office of the General Film Company, No. 219 Sixth avenue, where he was employed.

Following the arrest of Weiss at the corner of Fourteenth street and Sixth avenue, two men charged with receiving stolen goods from him were taken in custody. They were Abraham Revi, an importer, of No. 206 East Seventeenth street, and Isaac Picker, of No. 76 West One Hundred and Thirteenth street, who are business partners at No. 12 Union square.

Complaint was made to the police several weeks ago by the General Film Company, that reels had been stolen. Detectives Boyle, Scanlon and Dennison were assigned to the case, and for five or six days had Weiss under surveillance. Last evening when he left the office and started in a direction that led away from his home, No. 425 West Forty-fifth street, the detectives decided to arrest him.

After a cursory search they found no stolen property on him, and were about to release him when one of the detectives opened the youth's vest. An end of the film dropped down. After removing Weiss' overcoat and coat the detectives spun him around like a top until the film was unrolled.—New York American.

FALLING LEAVES—SOLAX

Dr. Earl Headley, a specialist....Mace Greenleaf
Mrs. Griswold Thompson.....Blanche Cornwall
Miss Winifred Thompson.....Marian Swayne
Little Trixie.....The Solax Kid
Mr. Griswold Thompson.....Darwin Karr

Infinite pathos permeates the legend surrounding the season of falling leaves and the effect it has on those unfortunates troubled with weak lungs. In an atmosphere of delicacy and charming naturalness is the story of this legend unfolded on the screen.

The picture deals with the discovery of a serum which cures consumption; with a little child who wants to prevent the leaves from falling by fastening them to the twigs with twine, in order that her sister may not be carried off by the spirit of the falling leaves, and also deals with the love which the girl develops for the young doctor after he cures her with his wonderful serum.

This is the story: Little Trixie Thompson (Magda Foy) concludes that the only way she could save her beautiful sister from dying of the "white plague" is by preventing the autumn leaves from falling. Little Trixie knows all this because she had heard her elders say that those troubled with weak lungs usually begin to suffer, and probably die, when the leaves begin to fall.

Winifred, Trixie's older sister, is on the verge of contracting tuberculosis. The little girl loves her sister too much to let her die, so one night she steals into the garden in her "nightie" and fastens the fallen leaves with twine and hangs them up on the trees. Trixie keeps a rigid vigil for months and all the leaves that fall in the garden are replaced on the trees.

While Trixie busied herself with this metaphysical occupation, Dr. Earl Headley, a lung specialist, discovers a serum which cures consumption. He is called in by the Thompsons and Winifred is soon brought back to health. The doctor restores her lungs, but takes her heart. Little Trixie then permits the leaves to fall.

ENTERPRISING YOUNG MEN WHO ARE IN THE BUSINESS TO STAY, AND WHOSE PHOTOGRAPHS SHOULD HAVE APPEARED IN CONNECTION WITH ARTICLE IN LAST WEEK'S ISSUE

WHAT THE "LEADER" SAYS

The motion picture industry of to-day is only in its infancy. The surface has barely been scratched, and were it possible for you to look into the future you would then complacently accept wonderful accomplishments in that particular line, that to-day would be nothing less than startling and a seeming revelation to you.

There has been a certain antipathy shown the motion picture in the past, and at that time, we must confess, we were partially in accord with that sentiment, but time works many changes, and what was once a crude, irresponsible amusement has, with the business-like methods of high-grade and moral men, succeeded in establishing itself upon a solid pinnacle of stability.

They would not permit themselves to depend upon for their support, the production and issuing of immoral and degrading films, depicting robbery and murder, but turned (as their own clean minds directed) to the higher ideals and as a result we are daily having placed before us, in the dramatic line, only the purest of subjects, delving into history for their scenarios and studying the fashion plates of the then times, for types and color effects, as studiously as if they were going to mount a $100,000 spectacle for production in the regular theatre.

Separate and apart from the producing end, should you not be familiar with the procedure accompanying the release of a film, it may be news to you that each production must first be privately shown before a board of censors, regularly appointed by the state officials and held to strict account for the O. K. they place upon each issue.

And all this is apropos of the "life lines" which are being thrown about the moving picture habitue; it is no longer necessary to sit quietly with your mother, sister or sweetheart and quiver lest there be thrown on the screen a subject which would bring the blush of shame to their cheeks, either by direct inference or innuendo.

If it has been issued by one of the regular combinations, it has been duly censored and passed upon, but apart from that, dear readers, the brains that compose those combinations to-day are big and clean—too big for them to resort to any petty and immoral subterfuge to obtain and profit by the nickels of the young and growing class.

WE WILL ENDURE IT

The price of eggs is going up,
  High climbs the cost of butter—
Provisions generally cost
  Enough to make you stutter.
The landlords ask more rent, and clothes
  Are costlier than blazes—
It seems that almost everything
  Is undergoing raises.
But we'll live on and won't repine
  At these expensive strictures
So long as they won't boost the price
  Of seats at moving pictures!

DIRECTOR,
c/o MOVING PICTURE NEWS

ROASTING THE MOVING PICTURES

Concurrent with the stupendous multiplication of moving picture theaters, and with the enormous popularity of these new institutions, there has grown up quite a little fashion among the high-brows and public speakers to take a shot at this popular form of entertainment. Only recently a gifted speaker connected with the Men and Religion movement, in Wichita, as a portion of his message that this country is imperiled by the frivolous habits of its people soaked the moving picture business with a very comprehensive club, including them all, good and bad, in one full sweep of his arms and voice.

"In a general way," this orator's message was truly inspired with helpfulness, as was proven by the scores of men who were moved by his words to announce publicly a desire to lead better lives.

It should not be the purpose of a daily newspaper in any way to depreciate such a valued worker's efforts, nor to make any comment which anybody might misunderstand as fault-finding with a gifted man, and an earnest and sincere man trying to help other men.

It is, however, the business of the press to endeavor sincerely to present various sides of public questions, and to lend a hand in protecting and to help boost anything which is of benefit to mankind.

This speaker, who roasted moving picture shows as a whole, taking the trouble to explain that he did not mean merely those shows which are immoral or degrading, we believe, hit this modern invention too hard. We believe that he overreached in this respect. In delivering a great message of his own, he hit, and hit without truth, another means of benefiting mankind.

It is true that the American people are showing a tendency to dawdle away their time and money on frivolities. But this mere dawdling of opportunity is nothing new under the sun. Before the book of Ecclesiastics was written, humanity must have shown this tendency. "Vanity of vanities; all is vanity, saith the preacher."

But before any people can come to the realization of this great fact; before they can as a mass of millions of souls come to the appreciation of what is opportunity, and what is the value of time, and before they can select between the realities of life, and the mere charlotte russe of life, they must from some source and by some method be trained up to these distinctions.

Instead of thundering at the moving picture show, and instead of weeping jeremiads at the ubiquitous films, we take a very opposite attitude, and venture to disagree with those who repudiate the entire institution.

In a way, the moving picture shows are invading the field of the publisher, so that selfishly any publisher might be expected to join in knocking on a competitor. But on the contrary we welcome this new sort of publisher who has even a more graphic medium than the man who deals with paper and ink. The newspapers and the magazines fill a recording purpose in the world, and we believe also that the moving pictures are of an enormous benefit to carry on the work of civilization. Thanks to the moving pictures, the world is getting better acquainted all around.

To repudiate all moving picture shows as such is as inconsistent as to scorn all newspapers and magazines and books. You can't call all books good and tell the truth, nor can you truthfully call them all bad. Quite as inconsistently would a critic discredit the art of public speaking, sweeping away from the rostrum a righteous man with a real message throbbing to the hearts of other men, just because some other men with gifted tongues are liars and fakers and workers of subterfuges.

To lament the fact that hundreds of thousands of American people daily spend their nickels and their hours in moving picture shows is quite as indiscriminating and quite as unjust and as lacking in distinction as the criticism by those short-sighted persons who regret that multitudes pack tabernacles to hear spoken messages.

We decline to accept as truth any criticism of the moving picture show as a modern institution. We admit, however, that just as there are mere word-milliners among writers and mere hot-air merchants peddling oratory, so are there frivolous, dawdling, time-killing, immoral moving pictures and picture shows.

But to get out the hammer and to knock all picture shows is just as unjust to the inventor of the moving pictures, and to the artists and the actors who prepare the films, and to the managers who provide the houses to show them in, as it would be, just because some people read Laura Jean Libby instead of Shakespeare, or the latest smut instead of the Bible, to decry that Gutenberg ever invented movable type, or that printers and editors are giving millions of people bad matter to read.

In the days of Homer the stories of actual history and the stories of the joys and woes of human hearts were distributed around by word of mouth; men later hammered laboriously with ink and quill, a distribution less tedious since the invention of movable type and process engraving. Until the twentieth century history and literature were distributed entirely through the medium of type and pictures which sought by symbols to conjure the appearance of actual occurrence. But the printed art at its best trusted entirely in the convincing delivery of its message to the imagination of the reader or spectator.

But suddenly, as a further step in this series of centuries of improvement on man's method of depiction of the story of mankind, an inventor prepares a means of rebuilding the past, and of bringing to the beholder things that are absent, which do not take for granted an imagination working in the mind of the beholder, but which show the world in actual motion. Already the invention is being supplemented with the attending sounds of the action, and of the synchronous spoken words of the moving pictures.

"The children of the stage, who with fancy's wand rebuild the past," suddenly are more economically presented, and the dollar and the half theatre ticket is marked down to a nickel, with which millions of people are daily responding.

Yet a man stands up in Wichita before 6,000 other men, reads the great oration of Moses as a text of his wonderful sermon, and then proceeds as part of his message to slam without discrimination into the moving picture business, not knowing that the greatest realization the people of Wichita ever got of the life of Moses was at a five-cent theatre in this city.

All the parsons in Wichita can paint vocal word pictures for one year, and fail to bring home to any man as real and as beautiful and as inspiring the story of Moses and the scenes of the Chosen People in bondage in Egypt and their wanderings in the wilderness, as was shown in this city in that little theatre. If the men of religion had been as up-to-date as they claim to be, those films of "The Life of Moses" would not have been sent away from Wichita until they had been shown in every church in this city.

If a man would think also that the whole face of the earth with its natural wonders, its peoples, its buildings, its processes of nature; that not only the living present, but the dead past, with mythology and history; and that the books of Dickens and the Dumas romances, and Dante's Inferno, all take on life to the masses at the five-cent theatres who never before had the time or the price or the tip that these things were worth their while, he would go slow in bucking up against an institution that has come to stay.—Wichita Eagle.

MOVING PICTURE TRUST CALLED UP

The Department of Justice at Washington is now investigating the tactics of the Trust to ascertain if they are violating the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. We understand that Messrs. Dyer and Ball, representing the M. P. P. Co., with the officers thereof, are called before the grand jury to answer pertinent questions put before them. We trust this is the beginning of the end of the Trust.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

By Wm. Lord Wright

WE all have our hobbies, ain't it th' truth? Jawn Pierpont Morgan's hobby is unmoving pictures; Uncle Andy Carnegie has his Castle over in Thistle Land; Jack Johnson hankers after the vehicle propelled by gasolene, and M. A. Neff's hobby is William Jennings Bryan. We repeat, fearless of successful contradiction, those three magic words, William Jennings Bryan!

W. J. B. is known as some globe trotter. But he doesn't hang the Indian sign on his old friend and political associate, M. A. Neff, in that respect. Not at all. The Peerless Leader of Democratic Progressiveness, when not writing a few pieces in Lincoln, Nebraska, calling attention to the outrageous conduct of O. Underwood, of Alabama, and Uncle Jud Harmon, of Ohio, is visiting various points of interest in our fair land telling the C. P. (meaning Common People) just how to raise political standards.

M. A. NEFF
President of the Exhibitors' League.

M. A. Neff, when not seated in his office in the Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, working overtime in the interests of motion picture exhibitors, is calling upon the boys in this or that city, aiding them to organize State leagues, and helping along the uplift of cinematography.

Some worker is M. A. Neff, President of the Exhibitors' League of America. A "live wire," as we say in Ohio.

But to return to hobbies. Neff's hobby, as we said before, is William Jennings Bryan and, of course, politics. The two are necessarily synonymous. Mr. Neff hasn't the leisure any more to pull off his coat and shy his castor into the political arena, as of yore—but he is an interested spectator. Politics is a constitutional ailment. Once let politics get into your system and there is no known cure for the ailment.

"William Jennings Bryan either will be nominated by the Democratic National Convention in Baltimore or he will dictate the man who is named by the Democrats for President. I have been in every section of the United States, and I think I know the sentiment of the people," asserted Brother Neff to the Ohio State Journal, in Columbus, Ohio, recently.

Now what did we tell you; here is Neff coming right out for his friend, the Colonel.

Let us quote some more from Mr. Neff: "Notwithstanding the talk about Governor Harmon, Woodrow Wilson and all the rest, when the delegates get to Baltimore, it's going to be Bryan, either to get the nomination or to name the nominee. I think he is the strongest man in the country to-day. He can beat anyone who is nominated, Colonel Roosevelt as easily as anyone. People have confidence in him. They believe in his honesty, and though they may not agree with his policies they are convinced he should be President. If President Taft is renominated it will be by office holders and office seekers. I do not believe he can get more than half the delegates from Ohio."

Now we are not going to quote any more. Anybody who can step blithsomely forth and lambast T. Roosevelt, is worthy of our sincerest admiration.

"He can beat Roosevelt as easily as anyone." There's a courageous statement! Neff is the only individual we know of who would dare to do it. It proves to us that he is willing to give his life for his country—and the Exhibitors' League.

To cast all jokes (or hobbies) aside, we want it distinctly understood that W. J. B. and T. R., and all the rest of 'em, have no cards and spades on M. A. Neff. He knows a few details about the art of organization, himself, thank you. He has not been busily engaged organizing for personal benefit (no offense intended to certain politicians), but for the past few years has been strenuously engaged in aiding motion picture exhibitors to form societies for mutual benefit and for the advancement of the animated picture industry. He stepped into the breach when most needed, and by energy, brains and natural leadership has accomplished wonders.
